Mr. LOUD. Oh, I am suspicious of myself oftener than of anyone else.

Mr. SAYERS. But, Mr. Chairman, I am not prepared to say and will not say that an objection to any particular item in the river and harbor bill arises because of its locality.

Mr. LOUD. It is enormous in amount, is it not?

Mr. SAYERS. I think so, unquestionably.

Mr. LOUD. I should like to ask the gentleman if he thinks it is possible to keep the river and harbor bill down, in view of the policy that we are following?

Mr. SAYERS. That depends pretty much, I think, upon the organization of the River and Harbor Committee. If members are appointed on that committee who would rather not appropriate than appropriate, I think the chances are that the bill would be reduced.

Mr. LOUD. I should like to ask the gentleman another question. Does not the gentleman think it would be a good thing, in view of the condition which now confronts this country, and in view of the enormous pension roll which we must bear for some years, that this Government should stop for four or six years appropriating any money for river and harbor purposes, from an economic point of view?

Mr. SAYERS. I could not say so.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I will ask the gentleman if it is possible to stop with the continuing-contract system?

Mr. LOUD. To stop new river and harbor bills.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Let me ask, in connection with the question of my friend, would it not be a good thing for us to starve, because we can get along cheaper in that way than we can in any other?

Mr. SAYERS. Well, Mr. Chairman, I do not care to have my time occupied with such questions as are pending between the gentlemen.

Mr. LOUD. We may have to starve. We can not help that.

Mr. SAYERS. I would say, Mr. Chairman, that the river and harbor bill of the last session, a part of which we are now forced to appropriate for, carried specific appropriations of $12,659,550, an indefinite appropriation estimated to be about $3,000,000, and authorized contracts to the extent of $59,616,404.91. Every gentleman who voted for that river and harbor bill, whether Democrat or Republican, is to the extent of his vote responsible for the present size of the sundry civil appropriation bill, and to that extent for the character of the appropriations which we are called upon to make.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in all probability the appropriations by this Congress will reach the unprecedented sum of $1,045,000,000, appropriations larger than have ever been made by any Congress for the past twenty-five years. Gentlemen on the other side say——

Mr. COX. Than any Congress.

Mr. SAYERS. During the war larger appropriations were of course made. Gentlemen on the other side of the House are exceedingly fond of twitting the minority and the present Administration with the fact that they have not provided the Government with a sufficient revenue to properly administer the public affairs of the country. Let me admonish gentlemen on the opposite side of the House—our Republican friends—that it is not within their power to enact a law imposing duties upon imports that will meet this or subsequent appropriations unless the next Congress shall reverse the present policy and adopt the old Democratic method of an economical expenditure of the public money. I do not believe that the majority will do this, because it is as natural for our Republican friends to lavishly and extravagantly expend the people's money as it is for the sparks to fly upward. Heavy taxation and extravagant expenditure is the policy which has always characterized them when in power.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I would like to ask the gentleman a question, if it will not interrupt him too much.

Mr. SAYERS. Certainly.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Were not your Congress and your President, when you had the administration in both Houses, as extravagant as the Republican party had been before that time?

Mr. SAYERS. Not at all. We appropriated fully $36,000,000 less in the last Congress than was done in the Fifty-first or will be done in this Congress.

Mr. MILLIKEN. But it had to be made up in deficiency bills afterwards.

Mr. SAYERS. No; no more than usual. The proper deficiencies still to be provided for at this session will be fully as large as the deficiencies of the last session. The general deficiency bill may not show that to be the fact, but if you will take the deficiencies which have been put upon the fortifications bill and do not appear as deficiencies, and which appear in the sundry civil bill, you will find they will reach fully as much as the general deficiency bill which was passed at the first session of this Congress.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Let me ask my friend another question, and that is, if there was not a large majority of the Democratic party in this House that voted for the river and harbor bill of the extravagance of which the gentleman complains?

Mr. SAYERS. That may be so. I have said that every member who voted, whether he be Democrat or Republican, for the river and harbor bill of the last session is responsible to that extent for the appropriations for river and harbor purposes in the pending bill.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Then why make your complaint against the Republican party?

Mr. SAYERS. I will answer. Mr. Chairman, the Republican party have control of the House. The Republican party control the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, the Republican party control the organization of this House, and if the policy adopted by the late Speaker, Mr. Crisp, had been adopted, and as I urged at the commencement of this Congress that it should be adopted—that no contract should be made—this Congress would have adjourned with the knowledge that it had appropriated $40,000,000 less than the preceding Congress, and the next Congress would be able to continue the work of reduction and could reduce the appropriations still lower, and the expenditures of the Government by and under a Republican Administration would be lessened to a normal amount.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Allow me another question——

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. If the gentleman will permit me.

Mr. SAYERS. My friend is fond of asking questions. He will be allowed time to make his speech.

Mr. MILLIKEN. If my friend would ask more questions of people who know, possibly he would know more than he does.

Mr. SAYERS. I can not be supposed to answer all questions.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Why does not the gentleman point out some particular item in the river and harbor bill of which he complains that is wrong, and which ought not to be appropriated for? It is easy enough to denounce the river and harbor bill in whole; it is easy enough to denounce any bill in whole.

Mr. SAYERS. I have not time enough to do so.

Mr. Chairman, I will now ask the committee to pause for a moment and bear with me in a divergence which should interest every gentleman upon this floor, and that is to contrast the appropriations in 1897 with those made in 1887. I draw this contrast not for party purposes, but in order to show to the House and to the country the great advance which the Congress of the United States, whether Democrats or Republicans have been in control, has been making in the matter of appropriations.

In 1887, when the Hon. Samuel J. Randall was the leader of the House in the matter of appropriations, the Agricultural bill only carried $654,715. At the last session—and I do not charge that there are any items in that bill that were improper—the Agricultural bill amounted alone to $3,255,532, showing an increase in the annual appropriation for one branch of the public service in ten years of $2,600,817. Is the Agricultural Department to-day in its operations more beneficial to the people than it was ten years ago?

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. If the gentleman will allow me, I will call his attention to the fact that at the time he refers to, 1887, there was no Agricultural Department. It was a mere bureau, and the Bureau of Animal Industry now does more work than the entire Agricultural Bureau did ten years ago.

Mr. SAYERS. I admit the gentleman's statement to be true.

Mr. RAY. I would ask the gentleman from Texas whether it is true that all the matters appropriated for in the Agricultural appropriation bill making this increase were new items?

Mr. SAYERS. Not at all. I did not say so. I expressly stated that this was not intended to be a comparison for political purposes, but that I would give these figures for the purpose only that the House and the country might see the difference between the amounts carried by the present appropriation bills and those of ten years ago. I do not contend that the Agricultural appropriation bill of the last session contained improper items.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Why criticise it, then?

Mr. SAYERS. I am only comparing the bills of the two periods.

Mr. RAY. Let me ask the gentleman whether it is not true that a great many matters appropriated for in the Agricultural appropriation bill of last year were appropriated for in 1887 in other bills?

Mr. SAYERS. I think not. I would say to the gentleman from New York that the increase of expenditures to which I am calling attention has been authorized by both Democratic and Republican Congresses, and one party is just as responsible as the other for this general increase. It has resulted from the enlargement of the sphere of the operations of the Agricultural Department.

Mr. PITNEY. The gentleman said that for the fiscal year 1887 the Agricultural appropriation bill contained the amount which he mentioned; but if the gentleman will pardon the suggestion, I think that bill was not then under the charge of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. Randall. That was the first year after the appropriation bill for the Department of Agriculture was taken away from the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. SAYERS. Yes; that is correct. Now, Mr. Chairman, I pass to the Army bill, the only one of the general appropriation bills that has been reduced. The Army bill for the present fiscal year carries $474,654.48 less than did the Army bill of 1887.

Comparing the diplomatic and consular bill of 1887 with that of 1897, we find an increase in the latter bill of $278,493.76.

The District of Columbia bill for the years named shows an increase of $2,179,268.49; and the Indian appropriation bill an increase of $1,844,233.95.

The legislative, executive, and judicial bill of 1897 is larger by $864,978.34 than that of 1887.

Mr. BINGHAM. Is the gentleman giving any details?

Mr. SAYERS. No details.

Mr. BINGHAM. He is not giving any reasons for these increases?

Mr. SAYERS. None. The Military Academy bill of 1897 shows an increase of $151,720.61 over that of 1887, and the naval bill an increase of $14,072,753.75. The pension bill of 1897 is greater by $59,253,380 than that of 1887, and the Post-Office bill also shows an excess of $38,205,700.97 for 1897. The river and harbor bill of 1897 is increased over that of 1887 by $1,185,650, with contracts authorized to the amount of $59,616,404.91 in addition.

The sundry civil bill of 1897 shows an increase over that of 1887 of $10,434,399.61. There was no fortification bill for 1887. That for 1897 carried $7,377,888 and authorized contracts for several millions more.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I submit the question to this committee: Has there been such a growth of population, such an earnest demand upon the part of the country, and such a necessity as to justify this vast increase of regular annual appropriations during the ten years between 1887 and 1897? I will append to my remarks a tabular statement, which gentlemen may examine at their leisure.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I understood the gentleman to say that the contracts authorized by the last river and harbor act aggregate over $75,000,000.

Mr. SAYERS. No. I will restate the exact figures—$59,616,404.91.

Mr. Chairman, how much time have I occupied?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. SMITH of Illinois). The gentleman has occupied twenty-five minutes.

Mr. SAYERS. I have to yield time to other gentlemen, so I will conclude: but before doing so, Mr. Chairman, I will call upon members of the House, without regard to party, to consider well this vast and rapid increase in the annual appropriations made by Congress.

Rich in resources as is our country, and industrious as is our people, this great burden of expense for the support of the Federal Government is too onerous to bear; and if to it we add our State, county, and municipal expenditures, it will surely be found that the cost of public administration in the United States is much greater than that of any other civilized country. Some day the people will awaken to a sense of these vast expenditures supported by an excessive taxation, and will demand a reformation, which will be as sudden as it will be great. The items in the bill under consideration, with the exception of those pertaining to the rivers and harbors, about which I am not so well advised and of which I am not now prepared to speak, can be defended and justified.

For the items appropriating for rivers and harbors the Committee on Appropriations are not responsible. They have not had the time to examine each project appropriated for; nor was it their duty to do so. They found these works provided for by existing law; and under the rules of the House and following the policy heretofore pursued, they called before them an engineer of the Army and interrogated him as to each item, and then allowed, in accordance with existing law, every dollar of appropriation that he thought could be profitably expended during the coming fiscal year. With the policy of the projects they had nothing to do. This Congress, at its first session, determined their propriety.

If this bill is to be censured because of its size—if gentlemen are to criticise it and vote against it because of the vast sum of money which it appropriates—let them turn to the record of the last session and scan the names of those who voted for and against the river and harbor bill on its passage through the House, as well as the names of those who voted for and against it when the Presidential veto was being considered, and upon those voting in the affirmative let the responsibility rest for $15,131,996.91 which appears in this bill, and the further sum of $1,150,000 which will appear in the general deficiency bill for such purposes.

Mr. RAY. Will the gentleman allow me a question right there?

Mr. SAYERS. Certainly.

Mr. RAY. I understood the gentleman to say a moment ago that this bill could be defended upon the ground of the necessity for all these appropriations.

Mr. SAYERS. I meant as to those which I have examined, leaving out the river and harbor items, about which I am not prepared to advise the committee.

Mr. RAY. But, aside from those items, the gentleman thinks the appropriations are all right—are demanded by necessity?

Mr. SAYERS. Certainly I think so—unquestionably. And as to the river and harbor items, permit me to say to the gentleman they may be right or they may not be. The committee had no discretion in the premises. They did not go into any inquiry as to the policy of these projects: they took the law as enacted at the last session of this Congress, and called before them the Chief of Engineers, and upon his advice they recommended the amounts which he said would be necessary to carry on the projects during the next fiscal year.

*This sum includes an indefinite appropriation for the purchase of the property of the Monongahela Navigation Company, estimated at $3,000,000.

Mr. Chairman, I yield forty minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY].

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I am obliged to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS], but I do not think I shall require all the time he has so kindly yielded.

The sundry civil bill carries $50,664,743.92, of which the sum of $18,615,996.91 consists of appropriations made in pursuance of contracts authorized by the river and harbor bill for 1896 and prior years. This bill is $17,568,033.73 in excess of the amount appropriated for the current fiscal year for the sundry civil expenses of the Government.

It appears, therefore, that of the amount carried by the bill more than one-third is to meet the obligations of river and harbor contracts. I think, therefore, Mr. Chairman, that if opportunity offers I shall move to amend the title of the bill so that it shall read: "A bill making appropriation for sundry civil and river and harbor expenses for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898." [Laughter.] I think the title should be accurate, not misleading.

Mr. RAY. Will the gentleman permit me——

Mr. DOCKERY. I hope the gentleman will allow me to discuss somewhat the merits of this question before interrupting me with queries. Later on I will yield to my friend.

Mr. Chairman, this very large appropriation, in connection with others made at this session, comes at a time when the revenues for the current fiscal year are already inadequate by $47,604,313.97 to meet current expenses. Indeed, sir, the revenues during the last three years and eight months have fallen behind current expenses to the amount of $185,416,043.43, while the business interests of the country are stagnant from ocean to ocean.

RIVER AND HARBOR CONTRACTS.

I desire now to refer very briefly to the river and harbor contracts carried in the pending measure. I am constrained to do so because when the river and harbor bill was under consideration at the first session of this Congress, gentlemen on the floor who opposed that measure were allowed but fifty minutes of debate in opposition to the bill with no right of amendment at any time. I am earnestly in favor of just and reasonable appropriations for the improvement of the great harbors and waterways of the country, but I deprecate the waste of public money upon unimportant creeks and log-rolling streams. I advocate these improvements when they promote public purposes. I oppose them when they subserve private interests. I find upon examination that the total appropriations for rivers and harbors for the various Congresses which I shall name have been as follows:

Amounts appropriated in river and harbor appropriation acts, Forty-eighth to Fifty-fourth Congress.

Forty-eighth Congress, first session	$13,949,200.00
Forty-ninth Congress, first session	14,473,900.00
Fiftieth Congress, first session	23,397,616.90
Fifty-first Congress, first session	25,136,295.00
Fifty-second Congress, first session	21,154,218.00
Fifty-third Congress, first session	11,643,180.00
Fifty-fourth Congress, first session	12,659,550.00
Total appropriations	121,413,959.90

In other words, Mr. Chairman, the direct appropriations for the improvement of rivers and harbors since the Forty-eighth Congress amount to $121,413,959.90. In addition to the direct appropriations to which I have adverted, the sundry civil bill has carried at the second session of these several Congresses amounts necessary to meet the requirements of river and harbor contracts aggregating $61,199,061.91. So that if to the direct appropriations made since the Forty-eighth Congress, covering a period of fourteen years, we add the amounts carried in the sundry civil bill during the same period, it is obvious that the total appropriations during this period for river and harbor projects alone amount to $182,613,021.81.

Now, Mr. Chairman, as very much has been said about the contract system, and gentlemen have gone so far as to secure favorable recognition of the system in both of the national platforms, I may say that theoretically the system is all right, while practically it is all wrong. As applied to a given work, it will undoubtedly complete it at a reduced cost as compared with the old system. But when you take into consideration the entire scope of river and harbor improvements, the contract system enormously increases the appropriations and burdens of Government. Whatever the demerits of the old system, it at least did business on a cash basis. The contract system revives the principles of the old discarded "credit system," with its consequent increase of Government obligations to be met at some future time. It mortgages the revenues of the future and fosters Treasury deficiencies. It tends to encourage extravagance, because, forsooth, the payments can be deferred until a more convenient season. It imposes upon the people unjust taxes, and is at war with all the cardinal tenets of a wise, economical administration. It is wanton, wasteful, and profligate in expenditure. The contract system is a constant menace to the resources of the Government, and should be abandoned or limited without delay. Let me illustrate its operations by a statement from official records.

The average appropriation for each one of the six years prior to the inauguration of the contract system by the Fifty-first Congress was $8,470,119.48. The average appropriations for each of the eight years since the contract system was adopted has been $16,474,034.36, or about double the liability imposed by the old system. In other words, while the system, as to a given work, has reduced—and that is not denied—the cost of the work, taken as an entirety, has more than doubled the appropriations for river and harbor improvements. Let us ascertain just how the system operates; and in so doing I do not desire to make an examination from the standpoint of mere partisanship. I recognize the fact that a very large number of the Representatives on this side of the Chamber gave their support to the last river and harbor bill. But I must also recognize, as did the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS], who preceded me, the further fact that these appropriations have always been largely increased when the Republican party controlled the House.

The Fifty-first Congress, which originated the contract system, authorized $13,282,979 of contracts, a modest sum in comparison to the authorization of the last session. The Fifty-second Congress authorized other contracts amounting to $31,760,521. Note the increase! We come now to the Fifty-third Congress, which was Democratic in both branches, this body being presided over by that accomplished legislator from Georgia, the late Speaker Crisp. In that Congress not a single new contract was authorized. The leadership of that Congress did not content itself with paring down appropriations; it did not inaugurate a cheeseparing policy, but under the safe guidance of the distinguished Speaker [Mr. Crisp] and the gentleman from Texas, Governor SAYERS, wise laws were enacted and objectionable legislation was not presented to the House for consideration. So much, then, Mr. Chairman, in honor of the Fifty-third Congress, which, as I have said, was Democratic in both branches. At that time the Committee on Rivers and Harbors was presided over, if I am not mistaken, by the able gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CATCHINGS]. That committee did not then recommend an extension of the contract system. It seems that a different policy is advocated now.

We now come to the first session of the present Congress. The contracts authorized then aggregated $59,616,404.91 and the direct appropriations were $12,659,550, exclusive of $3,000,000 of indefinite appropriations estimated for the Monongahela River; that is to say, the total appropriations and authorized contracts for river and harbor projects reached the stupendous aggregate of $75,275,954.91. This is not all, Mr. Chairman. At the very time this enormous liability was incurred there were existing contract liabilities, together with an unexpended balance in the Treasury appropriated under contracts theretofore authorized, of $16,207,708.16. So that when the bill of last year became a law notwithstanding the veto of the President the river and harbor liabilities stood upon the books of the Treasury at $91,483,663.07.

I will now call attention to another fact——

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman from Missouri yield for a question?

Mr. DOCKERY. Certainly.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Does not the gentleman from Missouri think, in order to be perfectly fair and to convey a correct impression to the House and to the country, that he ought to state that the maximum amount possible to be expended under the limitations of the last river and harbor act, if every contract or project therein authorized had been entered upon—that the maximum to be annually expended would not exceed $16,000,000 of contracts?

Mr. DOCKERY. The gentleman has anticipated the order of my argument. I will demonstrate further on that the statement of the gentleman is absolutely inaccurate.

Mr. Chairman, the President of the United States in a ringing veto message disapproved the last river and harbor bill. I differ with him upon the money question, but I stand here to-day, as I would have stood then but for the "gag rule" adopted by the House, to say that upon the question of the expenditure of public money President Cleveland is in accord with Jackson and other Democratic statesmen who have filled the great office of President of the United States.

In vetoing that measure he said:

> Of the remainder, nearly $20,000,000 will fall due during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and amounts somewhat less in the years immediately succeeding.

The River and Harbor Committee, in replying to that statement of the message, used this language:

> This is also an error, for the reason that if all the contracts authorized by this bill are promptly entered into by the Secretary of War for the full amounts estimated for the completion of each by the Chief of Engineers the maximum amount that can be expended under the limitations of this bill in any one fiscal year is $16,612,873.91.

That statement of the committee, Mr. Chairman, is doubtless the one upon which the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] has just rested his interrogatory. Now, let me say in reply to that declaration that this bill carries $15,131,996.91 of appropriations under contracts authorized by the bill vetoed by President Cleveland, and, if all the amounts estimated by the War Department had been allowed, it would have carried $19,129,053.16, thus fully vindicating the statement of the President. Let me give the items not carried in the bill or reduced below the estimates. The original estimate for Newtown Creek, New York, is reduced $217,000. The Delaware Bay estimate is reduced by the Committee on Appropriations $714,332. The appropriation for Wilmington, Del., of $205,846 is omitted. I do not know the special facts relating to this item, but we are told by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations that some of these amounts are omitted because the Committee on Rivers and Harbors in determining the limit of cost fixed an inadequate amount, and in the opinion of the War Department contracts could not be made in these cases; and so these amounts do not appear in the bill.

Mr. CATCHINGS. Does not my friend know that, while what he says is true, the Committee on Rivers and Harbors was not at fault, but that the increase of probable cost of these works to which he alludes is the result of estimates which have come in since that time? In other words, does he not know that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors provided in good faith for the expenditure of every dollar which was, as they supposed, necessary to complete these works according to the estimates of the engineers which were before us?

Mr. DOCKERY. My friend and I do not disagree as to that statement.

Mr. CATCHINGS. These estimates have come in since that time.

Mr. DOCKERY. My friend and I agree that revised estimates have made an increased limit of cost necessary; but I am now vindicating the statement of the President and also the sixty-one Representatives who sought to debate and amend the river and harbor bill when it was before the House at the last session.

Mr. CATCHINGS. May I ask my friend another question?

Mr. DOCKERY. Certainly.

Mr. CATCHINGS. I will ask him if he was cognizant of the fact that these increased estimates would come in at the time he made the objection and sought to debate this question, when the President's veto came up? In other words, did he know then that these works were to cost more than we supposed they would cost when we reported the river and harbor appropriation bill?

Mr. DOCKERY. Why, certainly not. The truth is, I know very little about river and harbor improvements. That committee is, so far as I am concerned, a "close corporation." All the information in my possession was given by the Chief of Engineers. Now, then, let me proceed, because we agree that subsequent estimates have made it necessary to increase the limit of cost in certain cases.

Mr. CATCHINGS. The only reason why——

Mr. DOCKERY. I agree with the gentleman, and I do not want my time taken.

Mr. CATCHINGS. Very good. I will not interrupt the gentleman further.

Mr. DOCKERY. The estimate for Duluth, Minn., is decreased $270,138.25, and for Oakland, Cal., ($400,000) omitted. The Providence River improvement is reduced from $400,000 to $125,000, a reduction of $275,000; the estimate of $400,000 for the improvement of the Kentucky River is omitted for the reasons just stated by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BERRY]; dams Nos. 2 and 5, on the Ohio River, are also without recognition, their estimated cost being $400,000; the Chicago River improvement is reduced $287,000, and the Illinois and Mississippi Canal is brought below the estimate in the sum of $427,740, while the estimate of $400,000 for Yaquina Bay, Oregon, is entirely omitted. So that these several estimates which have been reduced or omitted, amounting to $3,997,066.25, would have brought the total authorized contracts to $19,129,053.16, or nearly $20,000,000, as stated by the President.

Mr. Chairman, why has the estimate for Yaquina Bay, Oregon, $400,000, been omitted? Has there been a failure of consideration? I call the attention of the House to this project because in the able report of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, reviewing the veto message of the President, that committee says, referring to a former river and harbor bill:

> That bill was referred by President Harrison to Gen. Thomas L. Casey, then Chief of Engineers—who was noted for his rugged honesty, his great executive capacity, and his superb mastery of all matters coming under his supervision—for his opinion as to the merits of the several projects therein contained.

I concur in the tribute paid by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CATCHINGS] to that splendid public officer who recently passed away. And yet that official who had such "superb mastery" of public affairs reported that Yaquina Bay, Oregon, was unworthy of further improvement by the General Government. But somehow, Mr. Chairman, $1,025,000 found its way into the last bill for its improvement. If the appropriation was made for a public purpose, I insist that the vicissitudes of political fortune, which have left some of our distinguished colleagues at home, should not furnish an excuse for omitting the $400,000 necessary for the improvement. I agree with General Casey in his denunciation of this appropriation, and if I had time would read what he says. There is but little commerce there and it is declining, notwithstanding the appropriations heretofore made. The passenger list is also decreasing, but the appropriation, it seems, goes on with ever-increasing volume despite decreasing commerce.

Mr. Chairman, the committee, in defending the bill against the criticisms of the Executive at the last session, not only resented the charge of extravagance, but also insisted (to quote their language) that—

> Notwithstanding all that has been said against the bill, your committee make bold to assert that if it should become a law it would yield most substantial benefit to the farmers, the producers, the consumers, the merchants, and the business communities of this country, and contribute largely to general prosperity.

I desire to ask in this connection what substantial benefit is possible to be derived by the farmers, producers, consumers, merchants, and business communities of this country by the expenditure of the amount appropriated for Yaquina Bay, Oregon, and the other projects I herewith submit, all of which are condemned by the Chief of Engineers as unworthy of improvement or in other respects not desirable objects of expenditure, as follows:

UNWORTHY ITEMS.

Great Salt Pond	$40,000
Cape Vincent Harbor	25,000
Yaquina Bay	1,025,000
Rancocas River, Lumberton branch	2,000
Nandua Creek	3,000
Yellowstone River	10,000
Nestuca River	6,000
Yamhill River[1]	150,000
Puget Sound and tributary waters[2]
Cooper Creek, repairing dikes[3]	2,500
Delaware River, repairing dikes[3]	3,000
Goodyear, Outer Brunswick Bar[4]	150,000
Rock Hall Inner Harbor	7,000
Wolf Lake, Indiana	8,000
Cape Charles	10,000
Lemon Creek	5,000
Academy Creek	7,000
Total	1,453,500

[1] Locks and dams.
[2] Some of them reported not worthy, but others desirable.
[3] Personal.
[4] Excess to be paid Goodyear over what Captain Carter says he can do it for.

It may be well also for the advocates of this unprecedented river and harbor bill, which has been condemned with almost entire unanimity by the press of the country, to explain to the House how the producing and consuming classes are to be benefited by the appropriation for the improvement of Cape Charles Harbor, which belongs to the heirs of the late William L. Scott and the Pennsylvania Railroad Company. It might also be well for the committee or some other champion of this bill to cite the taxpayers to the constitutional authority for the appropriation of public money for the improvement of this private harbor. It may be also considered advisable by inquiring taxpayers to raise the question as to the propriety of appropriations for projects which have never been approved by the War Department. It is true that some of the items named in the schedule which I now present have been recommended by local officers; but this list, involving $10,696,096 of expenditures, has never received the sanction of the War Department. It may be that some or most of them are worthy of public consideration, but it seems that wise administration would require the committee to take the opinion of the War Department, charged with the expenditure of the money, before recommending appropriations.

NOT RECOMMENDED.

The list submitted by the Chief of Engineers is as follows:

Rockland Harbor, Maine	$403,500
Portland Harbor, Maine	766,250
New Bedford Harbor, Massachusetts	10,000
Block Island Harbor, Rhode Island	5,000
Bridgeport Harbor, Connecticut	28,000
Cos Cob Harbor and Miamus River, Connecticut	8,000
Newtown Creek, New York	392,000
Oswego Harbor, New York	60,000
Raritan Bay, New Jersey	75,000
Wilmington Harbor and Christiana River, Delaware	225,846
Baltimore Harbor, Maryland	400,000
Savannah Harbor, Georgia	1,005,000
Brunswick Harbor, Georgia	15,000
Ashtabula Harbor, Ohio	50,000
Cleveland Harbor, Ohio	860,000
Fairport Harbor, Ohio	30,000
Conneaut Harbor, Ohio	40,000
Calumet Harbor, Illinois	75,000
Presque Ile, Michigan	20,000
South Milwaukee Harbor, Wisconsin	5,000
Grays Harbor and Bar, Oregon	1,000,000
Sasanoa River, Maine	19,000
Merrimac River, Massachusetts	5,000
Pawcatuck River, Rhode Island	15,000
Providence River and Narragansett Bay, Rhode Island	25,000
Manokin River, Maryland	4,000
Pocomoke River, Maryland	5,000
Nandua Creek, Virginia	3,000
Manatee River, Florida	4,000

St. Johns River, Florida	$300,000
Bayou Courtableau, Louisiana	2,500
Fox River, Wisconsin	37,500
Menominee River, Michigan	15,000
St. Croix River, Wisconsin	15,000
Calumet River, Illinois	50,000
Chicago River, Illinois	700,000
Mississippi River above St. Paul	100,000
Missouri River at Great Falls	15,000
Sacramento and Feather rivers, California	250,000
Lakes Union and Washington, Washington	150,000
Indian River, Negro Cut, Florida	7,500
Brunswick Outer Bar (Goodyear) (first $30,000 not included)	215,000
Yellow Mill Pond	10,000
Santa Monica or San Pedro board	50,000
Brazos board	5,000
Santa Monica and San Pedro work	(?) 2,900,000
Jamestown Island, Virginia	15,000
Levee Flint Creek to Iowa River	75,000
Missouri River (special localities)	310,000
Presque Isle (Lake Superior)	30,000
Total	10,696,096

But, Mr. Chairman, I must hurry on. The Committee on Rivers and Harbors, resenting the charge of extravagance, cited the fact that the river and harbor bills have carried an average per annum of $16,700,000 in recent years, and then asserted that "this would involve an expenditure during each of the next six years," and this is one of the years referred to, "of $13,100,000 as against $16,700,000 during each of the past six years;" and yet the committee finds itself confronted with the fact that this bill absolutely carries $18,615,996.91 without counting the works that have been omitted or reduced in amount. It is apparent that the committee are wholly mistaken in this estimate, because we actually appropriate more than eighteen millions instead of the $13,100,000 they estimate. There are other equally glaring mistakes which will be apparent later on.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to ask when this continuous-contract system will have a proper check placed upon its wanton assaults upon Uncle Sam's money box? First it asked for $13,282,979, then for $31,760,521; again it demanded $59,616,404.91; and members of the committee stated on this floor at the last session that its exactions should be $100,000,000. I do not know whether any check is to be put upon these unbridled and headlong assaults upon the Treasury. I hardly anticipate a just and proper measure for the improvements of rivers and harbors in the coming Congress. The present committee seems to be enthusiastically committed to large and increasing appropriations. So much, Mr. Chairman, for the items relating to internal improvements. I pass now to a comparative review of appropriations, beginning with the Forty-third Congress.

COMPARISON OF APPROPRIATIONS.

The Forty-third Congress appropriated $653,794,991.21; the Forty-fourth Congress appropriated $595,597,832.28; the Forty-fifth Congress appropriated $704,527,405.98; the Forty-sixth Congress appropriated $727,537,684.22; the Forty-seventh Congress appropriated $777,435,948.54; the Forty-eighth Congress appropriated $655,269,402.33; the Forty-ninth Congress appropriated $746,342,495.51; the Fiftieth Congress appropriated $817,963,859.80; the Fifty-first Congress appropriated $1,035,680,109.94; the Fifty-second Congress appropriated $1,027,104,547.92; and the Fifty-third Congress appropriated $989,239,205.69.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to state again that the Fifty-third Congress was Democratic in both Houses, and, under the leadership of the late Speaker, Mr. Crisp, and of the gentleman from Texas, Governor SAYERS, the appropriations were brought $37,865,342.23 below the appropriations of the Fifty-second Congress, and $46,440,904.25 under those of the "Reed Congress." The appropriations at the first session of this Congress were $515,845,194.57 and the contracts authorized $75,816,480.91, making a total of $591,661,675.48. The appropriations at this session will not be less than $535,000,000. In other words, the appropriations of this Congress will reach the mighty aggregate of not less than $1,050,000,000. The Republican party must be held responsible for these riotous appropriations; but I acquit the honorable Speaker of this House of any share of that responsibility, and I hope that in so doing I shall not in any way impair his political standing with his own party. [Laughter.] He has maintained a consistent and courageous attitude of hostility to those measures which would impoverish the Treasury, and has sought to limit public expenditures to the actual demands of an economical administration. The Republican party can not escape the just censure of the people, because it controls the organization of the House, but it would seem that the Speaker, as a matter of equity, is entitled to exemption from any share of the odium.

COMPARISON OF EXPENDITURES.

Leaving the domain of appropriations, I come now to deal with the expenditures, which after all furnish the best test in respect to the Treasury situation. In submitting this statement of the actual expenditures of the Government, I exclude only the amounts paid upon the principal of the public debt. The exhibit includes all other items of Federal expenditures.

I find that the total expenditures for the fourteen fiscal years from 1875 to 1888 was $4,195,920,817.79, while the average expenditure for each of those years was $299,708,629.89. I further find that the total expenditures from 1889 to 1896 were $3,410,809,950.11, the average annual expenditure being $426,351,243.76, an average annual increase during the last eight fiscal years over each of the fourteen years preceding of $126,642,613.87.

It is also shown by official reports that the actual increase of expenditures during the last eight fiscal years over and above the fourteen prior fiscal years was $785,110,867.68.

Mr. Chairman, I now submit another comparative exhibit, illustrative and instructive. The total expenditures for the fiscal year of 1886 were only $293,487,882.30; the total expenditures for the fiscal year of 1896 were $443,112,115.58, the increase being $149,624,233.28; that is to say, it cost $149,624,233.28 more in actual expenditure to conduct the operations of the Government in 1896 than it did in 1886.

The items of this increase may be briefly summarized. The postal increase of 1896 over that of 1886 is $39,927,925.70. The civil and miscellaneous increase is $13,049,304.77. The War Department increase is $16,506,768.15. Of course, gentlemen will understand that Congress has made no increase in the standing Army, although an effort in that direction has been made, but the increase in the expenditures of the War Department results from putting the river and harbor bill upon a war footing in time of peace [laughter] and from the increased expenditures for fortifications. The Navy Department expenses have increased $13,239,844.64, and the cost of the Indian service has increased $6,066,370.11. For pensions the increase of expenditures is $76,029,136.95, making a total increase of expenditures for 1896 over those for 1886 of $164,819,350.32. Deducting from this total the only item of decrease, the interest on the public debt of $15,195,117.04, we have the result as heretofore stated of $149,624,233.28 increase in the expenditures of the Government in a single decade.

Now, Mr. Chairman, let us try this question of the ever-increasing ratio of expenditures by another test. The average expenditure per capita in 1886 was only $5.11. In 1896 the average was $6.21, or exactly $1.10 more for the cost of government for each one of our population. There has been no expansion in the volume of internal and foreign commerce, in the necessities of government, or the growth of our country to justify this startling and abnormal increase.

M'KINLEY BILL INADEQUATE.

This, then, Mr. Chairman, is the situation: Dwindling revenues, enormous and increasing expenditures. It challenges our attention not simply from a partisan standpoint, for, although we differ upon many questions, upon this issue of public expenditure, a matter affecting all the people, we ought to find common ground upon which to meet.

Mr. Chairman, what is proposed by the legislation pending or contemplated? The Republican party decline to reduce expenditures, but invoke the aid of a tariff bill in course of preparation which seeks to increase the national income so that it will be adequate to meet the existing and increasing schedule of liabilities. Upon this issue, gentlemen, we differ. Upon this side of the Chamber we would accomplish the result of balancing receipts and expenditures by reducing taxation where it can be safely done, and also by cutting down Federal expenditures.

Now, then, if the Dingley tariff bill is to be constructed on the theory announced by the distinguished gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] at the outset of this session—that every item of each schedule must illustrate the doctrine of "protection for protection's sake;" that protection must be the chief corner stone of the bill—tell me, Mr. Chairman, how the Treasury will secure sufficient income to meet the actual expenditures of the Government during the coming year, amounting, as they will, to $500,000,000? The McKinley law did not provide sufficient revenue.

The current surplus revenue in the Treasury amounted to $85,040,271.97 at the end of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, the year immediately preceding the enactment of the McKinley law, which went into effect October 6, 1890. Upon examination of the official reports at the close of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, that law having been in operation but eight months of the fiscal year, it appears that the current surplus had dropped to $26,838,541.96. The current surplus for the next fiscal year, ending June 30, 1892, was still further reduced to $9,914,453.66, while the current surplus at the close of the fiscal year 1893 had dwindled to $2,341,674.29.

Indeed, Mr. Chairman, during the last four months of President Harrison's Administration the revenues under the McKinley law were inadequate by $4,094,021.38 to furnish income sufficient to meet the ordinary liabilities of the Government, and for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1894, the actual deficiency was $69,803,260.58.

Secretary Foster, in his testimony before the Ways and Means Committee, February 25, 1893, insisted that if he was to have the management of the Treasury he would ask an annual increase of $50,000,000 of revenue.

Mr. HOPKINS. Right there, when the gentleman speaks of the revenue-producing qualities of the McKinley Act, I desire to correct him.

Mr. DOCKERY. I have not time to yield to the gentleman for a speech. I have but two minutes remaining.

Mr. HOPKINS. One moment. The gentleman can have more time. I want to correct him on the statement he has made. I undertake to say that during the period that the Republican party was in power, and while the country supposed that its policy was to be the policy of the Government, the revenues every month exceeded by millions of dollars the expenditures.

Mr. DOCKERY. I desire to say, Mr. Chairman, that the figures I have given as to the current surplus revenues for each one of the years immediately succeeding the passage of the McKinley law are absolutely correct.

Mr. HOPKINS. But the revenues never fell——

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I decline to yield; my time is so limited.

Mr. HOPKINS. But I want the gentleman's statement to be corrected.

Mr. DOCKERY. I hope this interruption will not come out of my time. Mr. Chairman, I have stated the facts correctly; and I challenge the gentleman from Illinois or anyone else to disprove them by the official statements.

Mr. Chairman, let me say that the surplus of $2,341,674.29 at the close of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1893, was apparent rather than real, notwithstanding the trust funds belonging to the holders of national-bank notes had been covered into the Treasury, the disbursing officers' balances reduced $24,000,000, and default made in the payment of bonds maturing September 1, 1891. At that time there were $104,074,092.07 of outstanding obligations of the Government unsatisfied. So that the McKinley law was inadequate to furnish revenue to support and maintain the Government. I do not know whether the Dingley bill will supply ample revenue or not. I do not believe, however, that it can do so if framed along the rigid lines of the protective policy. If so fashioned, it must check importations and thus diminish revenue. I may say, however, that if any gentleman on the other side can frame a protective bill that will replenish the wasted and depleted streams of customs revenue it is the able chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, Governor DINGLEY.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in conclusion, I may be pardoned for the expression of the conviction that pronounced aggressive and continuous prosperity will not return to this country and abide with our people if the Republican party increases taxation and restricts the volume of our circulating medium. The Democratic party believes that prosperity will return only upon the terms of an ample volume of good, safe, sound money, of gold, silver, and paper, with taxation reduced to the lowest point consistent with a wise, frugal administration of the Government. [Loud applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. CATCHINGS rose.

Mr. SAYERS. I should be glad to yield to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CATCHINGS], but I believe my time is all appropriated.

Mr. CANNON. Does the gentleman from Mississippi desire some time now?

Mr. CATCHINGS. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOPKINS. I should like to occupy three minutes before the gentleman from Mississippi proceeds.

Mr. CANNON. Very well; I yield three minutes to my colleague [Mr. HOPKINS].

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Chairman, I do not rise for the purpose of making a set speech either upon the bill now under consideration, the proposed tariff bill mentioned by the gentleman from Missouri, nor the McKinley bill. My purpose is simply to correct an impression that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] attempted to convey in the misleading figures he has quoted in his speech. He undertook to convey to this House the impression that the McKinley law failed to raise revenue sufficient to pay the expenditures of the Government—that it was a deficiency bill rather than a revenue bill. Now, I undertake to say that the records of the Treasury Department will show that during nearly every month that the Republican party was in power prior to the great election which was determined in favor of the Democratic party, in 1892, the McKinley law brought in revenue not only sufficient to pay the monthly expenditures, but to leave a surplus in the Treasury. It was only——

Mr. MCMILLIN. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. HOPKINS. Wait a moment. It was only when the people of the country had decided in favor of the Democratic party, with a platform that declared that if that party came into power that law should be repealed, that importations ceased, and the importers and the manufacturers abroad ceased to bring their products here, waiting for the good Democratic days of free trade promised by the leaders of that party in their campaign speeches. Then it was, and then only, that the bill was found insufficient to produce revenue enough for the needs of the Government. But the records, Mr. Chairman, of this country will show that during the period while it was on the statute books, prior to the Presidential election of 1892, it not only paid on an average all of the expenses of the Government, but created a surplus in the aggregate, as I remember, of nearly $29,000,000.

Every intelligent man in this country, be he Republican or Democrat, knows that if the Republican party had been successful four years ago that instead of there being a deficit under the operation of that law, it would have created a surplus in the Treasury, so that the liquidation of the national debt could have been continued under the second Administration of President Harrison, as it was under his first Administration. Under the laws enacted and maintained by the Republican party all of the expenditures of the Government were paid, and two hundred and fifty-odd millions of dollars were paid also on the national debt during the four years of President Harrison's Administration. That is the record of Republicanism when the laws of the country were administered by a Republican President. I challenge the gentleman's attention to this record and ask him to compare it with the condition of the country under Democratic legislation and Democratic administration.

Mr. CANNON. I now yield twenty minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. CATCHINGS. Mr. Chairman, I had hoped that the precedents heretofore established on this floor would be broken, at least on this occasion, and that the sundry civil bill would pass without evoking the attacks and assaults usually made on all items looking to the improvement of our rivers and harbors. But it seems that whenever a spirit of economy animates a gentleman on this floor, or takes possession in any way of any of our members, he turns his attention directly to an attack and a direct assault on the appropriations proposed for the improvement of rivers and harbors.

I undertake to say, sir, and I believe that such is their judgment and would be their testimony, that no appropriations made by Congress are so acceptable and so useful to the people of this country as those for the improvement of our rivers and harbors. We have embarked on quite an extensive system of fortifications, for which the expenditures are large. I have nothing to say against them. We have embarked upon an expensive system of improving our naval establishment. I have nothing whatever to say against that. But I do say, Mr. Chairman, that we had better dispense with additions to our Navy, we had better let our fortifications remain unconstructed, than to diminish in any material way the appropriations annually made for these important works of internal improvement.

It has long been a serious question as to how this work shall be carried on, and it has been discussed time and again by the members of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. I have served on that committee for twelve years. I know that every committee of which I have been a member has been composed of faithful, conscientious, and patriotic men, who had no other purpose in view than to suggest those appropriations which in their judgment would be most beneficial to the people of this country as a whole. But it was a question for many years how to make these appropriations in such form as would yield speedy and substantial results to the people and to the Government. Finally, in 1890, after a conference with the Senate Committee on Commerce, that being the committee of similar jurisdiction in that body to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors of the House, we concluded that we would enter upon the system that is now known as the continuous-contract system—that is to say, we authorized the Secretary of War to make contracts for the completion of certain important works in advance of the appropriations, to be paid for, however, only as appropriations might be made from time to time by law. We believed it would result in much economy to the people so far as the expenditure of public money was concerned, and that it would also insure a more speedy completion of the works.

Mr. Chairman, if there is any member of this body who is curious to know the result of the operation of that system, he only needs to examine the reports of the Engineer Bureau. It has been demonstrated, sir, repeatedly, that the direct effect of the embarkation upon that new system has been to save the Government an average of 33 per cent on the estimated cost of the works embraced by it if conducted under the old methods. In some instances, indeed, the work has been done under that system for less than 50 per cent of the estimate of the cost under the old methods.

My friend from Missouri of course has assailed these projects. He always assails them. I do not think that he will serve long enough or live long enough ever to become a convert to that system in which I have myself such implicit confidence, and to whose results I confidently ask the attention of all thoughtful men. He wanted to know if the time would ever come when we should cease to provide for the execution of these works under the continuous-contract system. That contained the imputation that they are harmful, that they are obnoxious to the public welfare, that they involve a wasteful expenditure of money, and therefore that we should abandon them.

Now, let me read to him what the Secretary of War has said upon this subject. I think the Secretary of War, in whose Department all this character of public works belongs, is more qualified to testify upon this subject than my friend from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY], who is a partisan opponent of river and harbor work. In his last report the Secretary of War made this statement, alluding to the system of continuous-contract work:

> The policy some time ago adopted by Congress in respect to certain of the more important river and harbor improvements, for which fixed projects have been adopted for the completion of the work, results in much economy of money, and, what is more important, secures to the country early and appreciable benefits from the expenditures.

Here is a direct, explicit, and plain indorsement of it. But my friend will be surprised when I read what else he says:

> In the main, the objects for which such provision has been made are those which so eminently promote the enlargement of our commerce as to commend themselves to liberal consideration, and the extension of that policy to embrace other worthy improvements is earnestly commended.

Here we have, upon the one hand, the distinguished gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] deprecating the extent to which we have gone and anxious to know when we are going to discontinue the system. On the other hand, we have the Secretary of War, who knows exactly what he is talking about—because these works are carried on under his Department—testifying not only to the efficiency and economy of the system, but expressing the hope that the policy will be liberally extended.

Mr. SAYERS. Will my friend allow me just one question?

Mr. CATCHINGS. Certainly.

Mr. SAYERS. Is my friend prepared to defend upon this floor every item of the river and harbor bill that was authorized by that bill to be put under contract?

Mr. CATCHINGS. Mr. Chairman, I do not choose to answer that question.

Mr. SAYERS. All right.

Mr. CATCHINGS. There are some things that occur in the committee room which it is not proper that a member of the committee should speak of outside. I do say, though, Mr. Chairman, that I gave that bill as it was reported my hearty and cordial support, and that whatever objections I may have had to any of those projects were far outbalanced by the great good and the great benefit which I was satisfied would come to the country from the passage of that bill.

Mr. SAYERS. If my friend will allow me, he will perceive that in the present bill the Committee on Appropriations have felt impelled to omit some of these projects. Is the gentleman prepared to say that it was the duty of the Committee on Appropriations to provide for them?

Mr. CATCHINGS. Mr. Chairman, I am not complaining of anything that the Committee on Appropriations have done. I am here, on the contrary, prepared to state that it is my purpose to vote for the passage of this bill, to vote for it exactly as they have reported it, because I believe that that committee have discharged their duty conscientiously and with that proper regard for the public interest which should guide them with the light which they had before them. I am not complaining of what the Committee on Appropriations have done at all; I am simply trying, in a general way, to dispel the impression which some gentlemen have sought to create upon this floor, and which some gentlemen always seek to create, that river and harbor appropriations are to be spoken of with bated breath, and as something which can not stand the test of scrutiny and criticism.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Will my friend allow me a question?

Mr. CATCHINGS. Yes.

Mr. MILLIKEN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] stated that the expenditures had increased very largely since the adoption of the contract system, but he did not state how nor why. Now, has the increase in expenditures occurred on account of the adoption of that system, or has it occurred on account of the more extensive operations?

Mr. CATCHINGS. Mr. Chairman, undoubtedly there has been a considerable increase in expenditures since the adoption of this system, because we have authorized the rapid completion of these works. Under the old system a river and harbor bill carried appropriations for two years and in piecemeal, and the result was that it took ten or fifteen or twenty years to complete a work which we now complete in four or five years. But while there has been some immediate present increase, growing out of the adoption of this system, it has been accompanied by the completion of these works, to the great benefit of the commerce and the people of this country.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And also in economy.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Will it cost any more in the end when the work is completed?

Mr. CATCHINGS. I have already stated—and if the gentleman had done me the honor to listen to my remarks he would have heard me say—that it has been demonstrated beyond all question that the adoption of the contract system has resulted in an average saving of 33⅓ per cent to the Government. But I quite agree with Mr. Secretary Lamont when he says that the chief benefit is not so much in the economy, great as that is, as in the speedy completion of these works, so that the commerce of the country may receive the benefit from them.

There has not been a river and harbor bill reported since I have had the honor of a seat upon this floor which I have not felt myself capable as an honest man of advocating and defending, even to the smallest detail. Of course there are some things in all bills which I have not approved; so there are some things in the sundry civil bill which doubtless my friend from Texas, if he had the sole preparation of it, would not have put in. But life is made up of concessions, and when the majority of my committee disagree with me, I accept their judgment as correct and conclusive.

I do repeat again, that there has not been a bill reported since I have been in Congress which I do not believe any member of the committee would have had the slightest objection to maintaining and supporting as an honest, correct, and useful measure. I get a little tired of the perpetual insinuation, if not declaration, that there is something in river and harbor bills which we can not speak of in public; that there is something which somebody seeks to conceal. Why, Mr. Chairman, how are these bills prepared? We have before us the reports of the Chief of Engineers, coming in six or seven large volumes. These contain the opinions of the Chief of Engineers of the various projects and an elaborate statement of the local engineers in charge. They are accompanied by evidence showing whether the works are of commercial value. The proposed works are given in full detail. We read these reports page by page and item by item and consider the different projects submitted to the committee. There is not a committee in this House which puts in more hard, solid, careful, and painstaking work in the preparation of its bills than does the Committee on Rivers and Harbors; and when we bring it out we bring out something with which we can stand in the open sunlight of day, and which we are not ashamed to advocate and defend.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] undertook very unjustifiably—for it had no connection whatever with this bill, because it is not a project contained in it—to cast some reflections upon the members of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors who went to New Orleans for the purpose of making an examination of a crevasse in Pass a Loutre, one of the mouths of the Mississippi River. I say he went out of the way to do that, because no appropriation for that work is called for or recommended in this bill. His going out of the way to make this criticism of them was a part of his plan to cast suspicion upon the work of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. I did not go on that trip, and therefore I am at liberty to speak frankly, because I have no personal interest in his criticism at all. Now, there is nothing which calls for reflection upon those who did go.

Mr. Chairman, that was a great work to which the attention of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors was called. A great crevasse, more than half a mile wide, had occurred in one of the passes of the Mississippi. If nothing was done for its repair it would possibly result in the destruction of the entire entrance to the great harbor of New Orleans. Gentlemen should remember that the port of New Orleans is second only in importance to New York. Its exports and imports follow close and fast upon the heels of those of the city of New York. This Congress can not do too much to maintain ingress to and egress from that port. It can not do too much, even if $50,000,000 or $100,000,000 were necessary to protect the entrance to that port. But there are some things, Mr. Chairman, which can not be explained satisfactorily to the mind by the mere use of words or descriptive language.

The Committee on Rivers and Harbors hesitated as to what their duty was. It was first proposed that a subcommittee of two or three should go and make an inspection personally. Thereupon the people of New Orleans said, "We would be glad to have you all come, and come at our expense." They were satisfied that personal examination would remove the hesitation of the committee. That was not a junketing trip. It was not a trip taken for pleasure. Those gentlemen went down there, and at a time when the weather was intensely cold and bitter, and they did not go as pleasure seekers. They went, Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of making a personal inspection of the work. They did so, making a trip down to the Gulf of Mexico in a ship placed at their disposal. They took a large mass of testimony regarding the crevasse and the necessity for closing it, which will be printed for the examination of members of this House. They took the testimony of the Government engineers, of shipping masters, and others concerned in the commercial, mercantile, and navigation interests of that port of New Orleans. The committee worked as hard and as assiduously in making the investigation as though they had been conducting it in their own committee room.

Now, where is the impropriety in that? The actual fact is, Mr. Chairman, this Government ought to provide a fund out of which the River and Harbor Committee could at least once each year draw on an amount sufficient to pay the expenses of making a personal inspection of our great works of river and harbor improvement. The committee would derive great benefit from such an inspection, and I have no sort of doubt that the Government would be well repaid in the direct personal information as to the character and needs of these great works which the members of the committee would thereby obtain. I think that my friend from Missouri might have left unspoken his criticisms in this regard. I will add that if my official business had been in such condition as to permit it, it would have gratified me very much to have gone on that trip, not for purposes of pleasure, but that I might see the condition of things precipitated upon the people of New Orleans by that great crevasse.

That crevasse ought to be closed. It ought to be closed, no matter how much money may be needed for that purpose. The exports and imports of that city are enormous. They amounted last year to $115,000,000. Thirty million bushels of grain were brought down from the Western States and exported from New Orleans, and I may add that there seems to be little doubt that the exports of grain from that and other ports on the Gulf are destined to increase enormously. They have put up great elevators there, which are crowded now to suffocation. They are filled with wheat and corn, and I have no doubt myself that New Orleans is destined to far outstrip any port in this country in grain exports. In the last twelve months its exports of grain have gone up from 5,000,000 to 30,000,000 bushels, easily leading any port in this country in that respect. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, it will be seen that this is not a local question at all, but one in which all the people of the Western States are concerned, because it means a saving to them of 3 or 4 or 5 cents a bushel upon grain.

No man need be afraid that this Government is going to be cast into bankruptcy by river and harbor legislation. I will make a statement which doubtless will be surprising to some gentlemen. Beginning with 1890—and I take that as the starting point because it was then that we inaugurated the system of contract work—beginning with 1890 and coming down to the present time, we have appropriated an average of $16,700,000 a year for river and harbor work. Is that going to bankrupt the Treasury? Is not that a very small sum for such a purpose? Why, Mr. Chairman, if I had my way I would make it $50,000,000 a year. I would open every harbor and every river for the use of the people of this country, and I would so cheapen their transportation charges that the cost of the improvements would be repaid to them many times over. [Loud applause.] But what have we appropriated for this purpose? Sixteen million dollars a year since these contract works were first inaugurated. That is so small a sum as to be almost contemptible, in view of the magnitude of these works and the necessities of the people, and when I reflect upon the eagerness, the avidity with which Congress has always responded to the suggestions of the River and Harbor Committee in their efforts to advance the welfare of the American people, I am almost ready to say, with Lord Clive, that I stand astounded at our own moderation. [Laughter.]

[Here the time of Mr. CATCHINGS expired, and Mr. CANNON yielded him ten minutes more.]

Mr. CATCHINGS. Mr. Chairman, let us look at some of these works which are railed against here. Take the work at Buffalo. Buffalo, as gentlemen all know, is a great city at the eastern end of the Great Lakes, with an enormous commerce. This appropriation looks to the construction of a breakwater behind which the vessels that navigate the lakes may take shelter in time of storm. Is that an unwise expenditure?

Again, here is a proposition to build a breakwater at the mouth of the Delaware River. Thousands and thousands of vessels pass there annually, and this appropriation is for the purpose of providing a place of shelter for them when they are beset by the storms which often sweep so fiercely along the Atlantic coast.

Take Duluth, at the western end of the Great Lakes. As we all know, Duluth and Superior City are now practically one corporation. Their interests are the same. It is proposed to give them a channel and harbor facilities commensurate with their great and growing business, and will any man say that that is an unwise or improvident expenditure?

Take Cleveland, which perhaps is the chief port upon the Lakes, if we except Duluth at the west end and Buffalo at the east end—is not Cleveland entitled to every facility that her great commerce calls for, and is the money that is expended there wasted? No man will say that it is.

So, Mr. Chairman, I might go through the list, and you would find that we have taken up only useful and valuable projects such as Mr. Secretary Lamont says are eminently entitled to liberal treatment by Congress, because they tend to open up harbors for the use of the people, whereby their commerce may be more expeditiously and economically carried on.

Again, you have an appropriation for deepening the channel through the Great Lakes—the most magnificent and extensive body of internal navigable water on the face of the globe. It is proposed to deepen that channel, so that vessels drawing 21 feet of water can go unvexed from Duluth to Buffalo. Is that wise or unwise? And when it is completed, who will be helped by it? Take the appropriation for the great Mississippi River, which is destined to be the vehicle by which all the great grain and meat products of the West, and all other products which do not require to be rapidly transported, shall find their way to the Gulf of Mexico for shipment to foreign lands.

Will any man say that that is an unwise expenditure? He certainly will not if he is informed that, contemporaneously with increasing the facilities for the navigation of that great river, we are rescuing from its ravages a vast empire. Thirty-two thousand square miles of the most fertile land on the face of the globe are rescued by the prosecution of this great work, and we thus furnish homes for hundreds of thousands of citizens of this country. Will any man say that this is an improper expenditure of money? Every item which we appropriate in continuance of the contract system may be just as well defended.

The Committee on Appropriations have honestly and in good faith complied with the requirements of the last river and harbor bill by making provision for nearly all of the works placed under the contract system.

The question is, Will this House object? I say, gentlemen of this committee, if the time ever comes when the spirit of economy shall so take possession of us that we shall deny to the people the right to make the best use possible of their rivers and harbors, there will be a clamor raised which will leave many a vacant seat upon this floor. If any man wants to know what public sentiment is on this question, let him attend a meeting of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. Let him sit as I have sat there, day in and day out, week in and week out. Let him see the delegations, 50, 100, 200 strong, coming from all parts of the country, and presenting their claims for our consideration—not delegations of politicians, not ward "heelers," not political "bosses," but merchants, farmers, bankers, shipping masters, and others who are actually concerned personally in the use of these waterways. Why, Mr. Chairman, I have seen that committee room crowded with these great delegations until the atmosphere was stifling, coming even from the State of California, laying their claims before us and insisting, almost with tears in their eyes, that something should be done to furnish relief to their necessities.

The people of this country are in earnest on this subject. Let no man be mistaken about that. You may be parsimonious if you choose in other directions and possibly the people will excuse you. But do not believe that they will excuse Congress for being parsimonious in reference to the only thing which furnishes actual, immediate relief to them in a way which they themselves can realize and of which they can recognize the benefit.

What has been the cause of this increased demand for improvements of this character? There are two reasons. In the first place, as everybody knows, the size of our vessels has greatly increased; they call for deeper water for navigation purposes. This means economy in the transportation of their products. And, Mr. Chairman, in this age of falling prices, when we have seen the price of grain go down to 40 cents a bushel, when we have seen the price of cotton fall to 5 cents a pound, when we have seen the price of other commodities go down in proportion, we can recognize that the cost of transportation becomes a matter to which every man's attention is directed. When he was getting "boom" prices for everything he had to sell, it mattered not to him what the amount of his freight bill was; that was a small item in the expenses of his business. But in this day of falling prices, when the business man must scan closely, as he does, every item of expense, he finds the item of transportation one worthy of his consideration. And that is the second reason why there is this increasing demand for the improvement of our rivers and harbors.

Mr. Chairman, my friend from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] made some allusion to the manner in which this bill was passed at the last session of Congress over the President's veto. Mr. Chairman, there was nothing in that veto of the President which the Committee on Rivers and Harbors did not feel itself amply able to respond to. The President was mistaken in much of his information. I accord to him all the honesty of purpose that my friend from Missouri does. Everybody knows what my opinion of the President is. I regard him as a great man and a wise man, and I think I know him to be a perfectly honest man. But his information came to him secondhand. He made no personal investigation of any of these things. He could not have done so. It was impossible for him to have done so. He obtained his information secondhand, and nine-tenths of it was erroneous. If any man doubts this, let him read the report which was submitted by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, in which they recommended that the bill be passed over the President's veto.

We took up the President's charges item by item. It was a very easy matter to respond to his objections. I was sorry that the President had been led into that veto—I was very sorry, indeed. But there was not a moment's hesitation on my part in suggesting that the bill should pass notwithstanding the veto, because almost my whole Congressional service has been devoted to this sort of legislation. I thought I knew, I think yet that I know, every item of appropriation contained in that bill. I know that the bill was framed by a committee which was assiduous in its efforts to get at the truth—by a committee which was actuated by all the honesty of motive that you can conceive of. It was simply impossible that this intelligent committee could have been induced to report a bill which was worthy of all the criticism which the President heaped upon that measure. I knew without reading his veto message that he had been misinformed. And the splendid response of this House to the suggestion of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, that the bill should pass notwithstanding the veto, afforded me most gratifying evidence that deep down in the hearts of all the members of this House is a conviction of the solid merits of this system of improving our rivers and harbors. I felt satisfied that they understood and appreciated that the people of the country are behind them and sustaining them in this policy. Members of this House recognized that they would be derelict in their duty to their constituents if they failed to vote to support the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Mr. Chairman, I wish that some member of the House had specifically assailed some of these items, so that I could have made specific defense. I think that my honored friend from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] will do me the honor to assail a project in which I have some personal concern. I allude to the project known as the Yazoo River Canal. Before taking my seat, therefore, I will make some slight exposition of that work.

In 1876, Mr. Chairman, there occurred at Vicksburg what is called in river parlance a "cut-off." The river at that point described a great bend, directly in front of the city of Vicksburg. It made a contour like the letter "s" in shape. The peninsula inclosed was about 4 miles long, and the river cut its way—"caved"—through the center of this peninsula. The result was that within less than twelve months the river had gone a mile and a half below the city of Vicksburg, leaving a lake where formerly the channel of the river had been. This lake was open at both ends, but closed gradually with sand, so that it became impossible to reach Vicksburg at all by river except in high water, or, say, for about three months in the year.

The Yazoo River, with its numerous navigable tributaries, like the Yallabusha, the Big Sunflower, the Tallahatchie, and other streams, furnished about 700 miles of splendid navigable water, and entered the Mississippi River just above the city of Vicksburg.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. CATCHINGS. I would like to have about five minutes longer.

Mr. CANNON. I yield to the gentleman five minutes longer.

Mr. CATCHINGS. The mouth of the Yazoo River became obstructed by the new conditions of the Mississippi River created by this cut-off. Before the cut-off occurred at the city of Vicksburg, the Yazoo, which empties into the Mississippi about 10 miles above, had an unobstructed entrance to its mouth, and furnished, as I have already said, including its tributaries, about 700 miles of navigable water. But the cut-off at Vicksburg so altered the shape of the Mississippi River as to throw an enormous sand bar across the mouth of the Yazoo River. The river found itself unable to plow a channel through this sand bar; and now, except in very high water, it is impossible for boats to get into or out of it at all. It may therefore be said that there is an absolute bar to the navigation of about 700 miles of splendid water, well adapted for all transportation purposes, simply because of this obstruction at the mouth of the river, caused by the cut-off at the city of Vicksburg.

The proposition embodied in the bill is to divert the Yazoo River by means of a canal, so that it shall enter the lake to which I have referred and make its exit into the Mississippi River just below Vicksburg, and thus give that city again river connections and navigation, instead of leaving it as it now is, high and dry, for the greater part of the year. The city of Vicksburg would then be placed on flowing water, so that vessels could approach it at all seasons of the year, and at the same time an open, unobstructed entrance into the Yazoo River would be provided, whereby that river and its various tributaries would be accessible to boats. This will restore the navigation of this river and its tributaries. In carrying out the project a canal several miles long will be dug to connect the Yazoo River with the lake created by the cut-off, as already explained. In making this canal the right of way must be cleared of trees and roots, and this work involves the "grubbing" which my friend from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] has informed me privately that he will point out when he comes to speak.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I beg to express the hope that no man on this floor will permit himself to be diverted from casting his vote as I know his judgment and inclination would dictate, by anything that has been said or that may be said by anyone in opposition to the river and harbor projects provided for in the pending bill. [Applause.]

[Mr. HEPBURN addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. SAYERS. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN].

Mr. MCMILLIN. Mr. Chairman, I shall not enter into a discussion of the features of this bill, which have just been discussed by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] and my friend from Mississippi [Mr. CATCHINGS]. But a statement was made by my colleague on the Ways and Means Committee [Mr. HOPKINS] which was so utterly misleading that I think I should be derelict in my discharge of duty were I not to state the real facts concerning the operation of the McKinley Act, which the country got disgusted with and repealed, but which the gentleman from Illinois lauds so highly. It was a failure from the start. It increased the taxes of the people and at the same time diminished the revenues of the Government.

Under the old law which the McKinley Act supplanted the records of the Treasury Department show that during the fiscal year 1888 the receipts were $111,341,273 in excess of the expenditures; in 1889 the receipts were $87,761,080 in excess of the expenditures; in 1890 the receipts were $85,040,271 in excess of the expenditures. Then came the McKinley Act increasing rates of duty. Under it in 1891, the year after its passage, the receipts were only $26,838,541 in excess of expenditures; in 1892, $9,914,453 in excess of the expenditures; in 1893, $2,341,674 in excess of expenditures, and in 1894 the deficiencies created by the McKinley Act amounted to the enormous sum of $69,803,260. So that the McKinley Act, during the first four years of its operation, so far failed to produce the revenues necessary for running the Government that the net deficiency for four years was $30,704,000. How can any gentleman who is informed in regard to the operations of the Treasury Department insist that it was an adequate revenue measure?

Mr. HOPKINS. Will the gentleman allow me an interruption?

Mr. MCMILLIN. I will yield to the gentleman after I finish my statement, for a question.

How can any gentleman, with these facts before him, claim that the McKinley Act was a sufficient revenue measure? It is known to all men who are familiar with its operations that its rates were vastly in excess of those of the act of 1883, which it succeeded and supplanted. Yet I have shown that whereas the act of 1883, which itself carried high rates, yielded a surplus ranging from over $100,000,000 a year down to $60,000,000 a year, the McKinley Act, during the first year of its operation, when the people were unacquainted with its provisions, yielded only $26,000,000 surplus; in the second year, about $9,000,000 surplus; in the third year, in the neighborhood of $2,000,000 surplus, while in the fourth year there was an actual deficiency of $69,000,000; that is to say, there was a net deficiency during the first four years of the operation of that law of $30,700,000.

In what condition did these gentlemen of the Republican party find the Treasury when, unfortunately for the country, they took charge of the Administration? When Mr. Cleveland went out of power and Mr. Harrison succeeded him, the total net balance in the Treasury, including $100,000,000 of gold reserve, was $230,348,916. Yet so extravagant were they in the administration of the Government, and so high had they made the tariff rates—excluding imports—that when they went out of power most of this vast sum had been squandered. In order to show any surplus at all they had to scrape up the trust funds that were sacred to other uses. How much did they get from this source? In addition to the ordinary receipts of the Government, there was covered into the Treasury during the Administration of President Harrison $54,207,975.75, which was held in trust as a fund for the redemption of the national-bank notes. That was made an available asset. It was money belonging to note holders and not an asset. That was held by Mr. Harrison's Administration to be money that could be used in the ordinary discharge of the operations of the Government. And even after the appropriation of that fund and other funds for this purpose, and after having received, at the close of the first term of Mr. Cleveland's Administration, $230,348,000, that Republican Administration was enabled to show only a bare surplus over expenditures. They began to prepare to issue bonds. Plates were actually engraved to print the bonds, and only fall from power saved them from exposure.

How is it that my friend from Illinois, with these facts so familiar to him—knowing that the country has the facts within its knowledge—has the audacity to get up here and say that the McKinley Act furnished sufficient revenues to run the Government?

Mr. HOPKINS. Now, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MCMILLIN. With pleasure, for a question.

Mr. HOPKINS. The gentleman is not entirely accurate in stating my position. My position is, that during the time the Republican party was administering the McKinley law——

Mr. McMILLIN. I yielded for a question, not for a speech. The gentleman has had his say; if he wants additional time let him get it from somebody else, who has time to spare. Mine is already too limited.

Mr. HOPKINS. What I desire is that the gentleman should quote me correctly. I said that after the election when Mr. Cleveland was chosen, and the country was committed to free trade——

Mr. McMILLIN. I have not yielded for a speech, but for a question.

Mr. HOPKINS. The importers and the manufacturers abroad ceased to bring in their importations——

Mr. McMILLIN. I can not allow the gentleman to occupy my time with his speech. I can better suit myself with my own speech.

Mr. HOPKINS. If the gentleman declines to be corrected now, I will take time later to correct him.

Mr. McMILLIN. I have but a few moments left. The members of this House heard the gentleman's statement——

Mr. HOPKINS. The gentleman evidently did not understand it.

Mr. McMILLIN. No man in his senses could fail to assume from his statement that he meant, or at least he would leave the impression, that he believed, that that bill had furnished sufficient revenue to run the Government. It did not do it, as I have shown.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have shown what the aggregate or surplus, as the gentleman calls it, or the receipts for four years of that bill was, so they can not "monkey" with the figures. That bill produced a deficit almost from the very beginning of its operation. The country found that the Treasury had not enough funds to meet its operations, that the McKinley law was a failure, and promptly condemned those who had passed the bill and put into power a new Congress, a new party, to frame a substitute bill. We passed a bill which would have supplied ample revenues to meet the expenditures of the Government, but unfortunately it encountered one other man, who, as supreme judge, has authority to say what the law is; and it turns out to be a greater power than the lawmaking power itself. I do not propose, sir, to try to fix the responsibility of that unaccountable decision where it does not belong. I do not propose either by insinuation or innuendo to charge a whole court with that which really belongs to and is a part of the responsibility of one man. It is known to all who are posted that the man who tore down the Constitution and overrode the decisions of a hundred years, who set aside the power which was placed in the hands of Congress to assess the wealth of the nation and require it to bear a portion of its expenses was and is named Shiras, and that name, Mr. Chairman, ought to be mentioned in connection with that reprehensible and ever-to-be-criticised decision wherever it is referred to at any time. Let posterity not forget him. It is not likely to forgive him. [Applause.]

Mr. MILLIKEN. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. McMILLIN. I will yield for a question.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Did not my friend from Tennessee condemn the McKinley bill because in his opinion the duties were too high and that it was therefore likely to raise too much revenue?

Mr. McMILLIN. No, sir; I did not.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I so understood the gentleman.

Mr. McMILLIN. I made a speech at the time; I said then, and subsequent history has verified my predictions, that while it raised rates and increased the taxes upon the people, it would yield a diminishing revenue insufficient to run the Government. It has turned out that way. I believe, sir, that you are going to do it again.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Well, we will see about that.

Mr. McMILLIN. For the gentleman [Mr. HOPKINS] who rose and addressed me a moment ago is engaged diurnally and nocturnally, I suppose, is preparing such a measure as that to which I have just referred, which will have about the same effect as its predecessor. But I beg him to remember that, while he can deceive the people for a short time, he can not deceive them all the time. He had better look out, for he is going in the road that leads to destruction. That road led them to destruction before; it will inevitably lead to destruction again. You do not need more taxes to absorb the money, but more money to meet the taxes.

You have torn down by your courts the power to tax the wealth of the country. Now take care of the wreck you have produced. See if you can raise sixty or seventy millions of dollars by increasing the taxation upon the people of this country. You are doomed to failure and to defeat. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. McMILLIN. I regret it, because there are matters that I desired to call to the attention of the committee.

Mr. LACEY. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Tennessee may have five minutes longer to explain how the loss of $15,000,000 of revenue annually on incomes makes a difference of $60,000,000 deficiency.

Mr. McMILLIN. I will take the time if you will get it for me.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate has been fixed by order of the House, and can not be extended.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, how much time is remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has one hour and fourteen minutes and the gentleman from Texas thirty-six minutes remaining.

Mr. SAYERS. I understand the gentleman from Ohio is to be recognized next. As soon as he concludes, I will yield thirty minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND].

Mr. CANNON. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR].

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I leave the task of excoriating the Supreme Court of the United States in this case to the gentleman from Tennessee. But if he will look into the personnel of the Supreme Court, he will discover that of the men who held the income-tax law to be unconstitutional the men who belong to the same school of politics as the gentleman from Tennessee belongs—he will find them to be the men who above all others have condemned that law.

Mr. McMILLIN. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Certainly.

Mr. McMILLIN. Was it not Shiras, and he alone, who changed his first opinion, deciding one thing one week and another another week?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I have nothing to do with Shiras, and the gentleman can fight it out with a member of the Supreme Court, who can not answer here. But it will be a novel statement to go to the American people that the McKinley bill was inadequate and the Wilson bill was a splendid production. [Laughter and applause.] I want the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN] to have the full benefit of that proposition. The McKinley law was producing a surplus year by year until Almighty God, for some purpose that He has never yet made known to the American people, menaced the future of this Government by the election of Grover Cleveland and a Democratic Congress. [Laughter.] Then a revenue law that was producing a surplus became a revenue law that no longer did produce a surplus. But is there any intelligent man in this House who does not know that at the door of the Democratic interference with the McKinley law lies the fault of that condition?

Take the imports into this country; take certain items that we understood were to be destroyed by the hands of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN] and his coadjutors. Take the importations of wool. They had come into power with the determination, that being a Northern industry, that they would destroy it, and nobody imported wool upon a tariff of 11 cents a pound, when they looked forward to the immediate future, when the Democratic party would give them free introduction of wool; and so it was along the whole line. The Wilson bill has been in operation now nearly three and one-half years. How does the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN] like it as far as he has gone? What has been the verdict of the country upon it? Will there be in the coming Congress—the Fifty-fifth Congress—any man except the gentleman from Tennessee who will have the hardihood to ask to ever again return to the faulty system of ad valorem duties and the destructive rates of the Wilson bill? Was there, in all this country, during the recent campaign any distinguished Democrat who opened his mouth in defense of the Wilson bill? If so, what was his name, where was it, and when was it? They gladly got behind a new issue of their own creation and were hoist with their own petard, and rent their own party asunder, so that to-day they stand fighting each other upon every political question on God Almighty's earth. [Applause and laughter on the Republican side.]

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] in his great frankness, which he always manifests, assailed the river and harbor bill of a year ago. Now, Mr. Chairman, I rose not for the purpose of answering anything that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN] might say, but to point out to the House the importance, in my judgment, of debate on bills carrying the amount of money that that river and harbor bill carried. With a long experience in the River and Harbor Committee, I approved of that bill without qualification. I would not have made it exactly as it was, but it was a wise measure, and the unfortunate feature of it was that which has been so ably and so savagely criticised by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN], that it was passed here under a suspension of the rules and without debate. Let us see, now, how easy it is to answer the criticism upon a river and harbor bill. I attempted to interrupt my friend from Iowa because I was conscious of the ability of that speech of his. I have heard it a great many times. [Laughter.] It is a very valuable speech. It is revised occasionally, and I must say greatly improved, by the author, but the foundation is the same that we have heard so often here before.

Now let us see what his frankness is, for he comes at you with such apparent candor that he almost convinces the very elect that they are wrong. He puts in a comparison of the expenditure for the harbor of Cleveland, Ohio, and the expenditure for the harbor of Vicksburg. He might have got a much stronger illustration than that; but let us see how much fairness there is in it. He takes the amount of money now appropriated for the harbor of Vicksburg and the amount for the harbor of Cleveland, Ohio, and then says that Cleveland has a great population—he might have said nearly 300,000—and that Vicksburg, as he says, has only four or five thousand. Well, a little mistake of 66⅔ per cent is not much when you get to going at a gait like that. But what has the population of either city to do with it? That is not the great point. Some years ago, in the Congressional district in which I then lived, a distinguished member of this House, then a candidate for reelection, was assailed because of the aggregate amount of the river and harbor bill (some $21,000,000), and his opponent brought into the arena of debate the expenditures for the current year for the harbor of Liverpool, and pointed out that Liverpool had a population of nearly three-quarters of a million, had a commerce almost unparalled by any city in the world, and yet there was a small appropriation of money for the harbor of Liverpool, while here was an enormous appropriation for the harbor of New York and the harbor of New Orleans, and so forth, forgetting, as my friend has forgotten, that the harbor of Liverpool was a finished harbor upon which hundreds of millions of pounds have been expended, until it was the most complete of all the harbors, perhaps, in all the world in the matter of docks and everything pertaining to a great ocean harbor. The current appropriation was commensurate merely with the necessities of keeping up the harbor during that year.

Now, the same is exactly true in the case mentioned by the gentleman. The harbor of Cleveland has had money expended upon it ever since there was a river and harbor expenditure west of the Alleghany Mountains; and while some of its works have been compelled to be enlarged, and while in that sense it is not completed, nevertheless the appropriation of $400,000 for the harbor of Cleveland can not be compared with any harbor on the basis of the amount of money, unless you take into consideration the long line of appropriations that have already been made.

Mr. SAYERS. I yield thirty minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND].

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, it would seem that reasonable economy ought to prevail in public expenditures. The old question of how far the powers of the Government extend in reference to internal improvements need not be argued over at this day. But the question of whether particular appropriations are necessary or wise or reasonable is now, as it ever has been and ever will be, a pertinent and pressing question. Too often, it seems to me, in legislation concerning river and harbor improvement, while some items of expenditure are wise and reasonable, others are unwise and unreasonable. Too often, with the valuable improvements that are to be carried forward and perfected by these appropriations, there is a waste of money, to use no harsher expression, for the benefit of particular localities and, may be, incidentally, of course, for the benefit of particular Representatives. I am not now going into the items in the river and harbor bill, because time will not suffice, and because others have done and can do that much better than I.

Notwithstanding all that has been said, however, in favor of the appropriations, it is true that a number of these items, altogether carrying millions of dollars, are worse than waste; little, if any, short of vicious misappropriations. It is one thing to expend money for public purposes, in order to improve rivers and harbors of value to the general public and not merely of local value—for improving the great water courses which are highways of commerce. It is another and far different thing to appropriate money for the purpose of digging somewhere a hole in which to put water, or digging somewhere else a channel through which to pour water. So much of bad has been mingled with the good that the whole thing is getting into disrepute. Rivers and harbors are appropriated for too much upon the plan of pleasing this Representative and that Representative, this Senator and that Senator, this interest and that interest; so that, without reference to the merits or demerits of the bill, enough will find in it special interest to themselves and their immediate constituency to carry the measure through Congress, even over the Presidential veto.

There has been comment already on the manner in which the river and harbor bill was passed during the last session of this House. The facts themselves furnish the strongest and most stinging comment upon that performance. Here was a great bill, carrying millions of money, put through the House without discussion, without opportunity for amendment, without opportunity even (except to those who are most vigilant) to ascertain what the items of expenditure really were. When that bill came back, vetoed by the President, and rightfully vetoed, I think, we were told that the committee carefully considered the veto; that they anticipated that the President's reasons for the veto would be unsound and founded on misinformation; and that the committee in its report furnished a complete answer to the veto message. And, therefore, I suppose it was proper and decorous to hurry through the House a bill carrying millions of dollars, without an opportunity for an average member to get an understanding of it, without hearing for those who, possibly, were able to give reasons why that veto should be sustained, and why the bill ought to be defeated. It is well enough to say, as the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] has said, about the eloquent and forceful remarks of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN], that they are merely repetitions. Aye, there will be this repetition time and time again; there will be more of repetition of arguments against this species of legislation by spur and gag, if persisted in.

Why not bring the bill out into the light, if it could bear the light? Why not have the various items discussed, if reasonable enough to bear discussion? Why not have the purposes of the bill revealed to us, to show whether this man had this job or that man the other job in it; provided gentlemen of the committee or other gentlemen could take care of the bill in the full light of day—in the strong fire of open debate?

It has been suggested by the gentleman from Ohio that there is something indecorous in criticising, upon the floor of this House, as the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] has so forcibly done, a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, upon an important part of the tariff bill which has gone into history as the Wilson bill. I cheerfully give to the decisions of the courts that general respect which lawyers are taught to yield to the law authorities of the United States and of the State; but I belong to a class of Representatives, and represent a kind of people, who believe that there is nothing in this country—none of its institutions, none of those who administer its affairs—so sacred as to be above and beyond the reach of just criticism. One of the dangers of the Republic to-day, a great and menacing danger, lies in the usurpations of the judiciary—in that subtle power, never resting, never stayed, which overturns the will of the people and of legislators. Not only that, but overturns the precedents and decisions of a century, and makes strange law, by strange methods.

There is talk here about whether the McKinley bill yielded enough revenue, and about the Wilson bill not yielding enough. It certainly is pertinent in such discussion, as the gentleman from Tennessee very properly pointed out, if enough revenue has not been produced by the Wilson bill, to inquire why it is so. Everybody knows that the framers of that bill, and those who passed it, relied upon the income tax for a very considerable portion of the revenues that would be required by our Government for the conduct of its affairs. Who could have justly anticipated, who did thus anticipate, who honestly predicted, that that provision of the bill, that important part of it, would be declared invalid, would be overturned by the Supreme Court of the United States? The measure was not a novel one——

Mr. HOPKINS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DE ARMOND. I will yield for a question, but I can not allow a speech.

Mr. HOPKINS. I will not make a speech. I merely wish to say that Senator HILL, the great Democratic leader, questioned the constitutionality of the measure before it was passed.

Mr. DE ARMOND. The gentleman is making a statement which he must know is incorrect, and I can not have that kind of statement interpolated at this point. Senator HILL never was a great Democratic leader. Senator HILL is not now a Democratic leader at all, great or small.

With repeated decisions of the Supreme Court the other way, nobody had reason to anticipate a decision of the same court declaring the income-tax provision to be in contravention of the Constitution of the United States, or that the resource of an income tax is not one upon which the representatives of the people might properly draw to raise revenue for carrying on the Government. So that, as I have said, the framers of the bill and those who passed it justly relied upon the income tax as one great source of necessary revenue. And what would be thought of any body of legislators who would provide for raising more than the needed amount of revenue; for a surplus to be withdrawn from the channels of trade among the people and piled up uselessly in the Treasury?

That Wilson bill—it could be much better, but it was preceded, as it will be followed, by one much worse—that bill would have raised ample revenue if the provision for an income tax had not been destroyed by overturning the decisions of the Supreme Court, long considered to be settled law.

More than that. It was a reasonable and just provision. There has been much said pro and con about the income tax. It was a question in the last campaign. There was a declaration in the platforms of two great parties of this country, the Democratic and the Populist parties, in emphatic approval of it. [Applause.] No more just tax ever was devised by the ingenuity of man than a tax levied upon incomes. What more reasonable way, what more sensible, what more just way, of raising tax money than by taking it in reasonable amount from the full hand of the man who has an income? It is adjusted year after year, according to the ebband the flow of his affairs. When he is prosperous, he is taxed in a reasonable amount—justly, not burdensomely—for the support of the Government. When harder times visit him, and the taxable income does not add to his stores, the taxgatherer passes him by and goes to his more fortunate neighbor. Yes; the great thing in that tariff law, the best thing in it, the thing that commended it to many who would have been loth to support it otherwise, was the income-tax provision.

Now, then, let us see how strangely that provision was overturned. Eight judges were present when the matter first came before the Supreme Court of the United States. They divided equally upon the main question of constitutionality. The ninth justice was absent. Those who took the one side and those who took the other were well known. They identified themselves. There was another hearing when the ninth judge was present, so that the full bench then heard the case. The ninth judge joined in with the four who held the law to be constitutional; and lo and behold! one of the four, without ever vouchsafing an explanation, without ever giving any reason, changed his mind in such a way as to lift from wealth a tax of from forty to sixty millions of dollars annually, and cast it as an additional burden upon poverty and toil!

That ought not to be commented on! It ought not to be mentioned here, according to the tender notions of some gentlemen! Why ought it not to be? Men have a right to change their opinions; great as well as little men often do so. But when fifty or sixty million dollars of annual revenue are in the scale—when a trained lawyer and judge, after full argument, deliberately reaches a conclusion, and then when, so far as we know, without additional light, without additional good reason to carry him the other way, he suddenly, when it becomes necessary, finds himself upon the side of aggregated wealth and power and monopoly and against the mass of the producers of the land, with the result that there is a deficit in the Treasury and that heavier burdens must be heaped upon the people—why should there not be some comment? What is there wrong in the comment? Why should it be withheld? I said in this House about one year ago, and I repeat, that when the history of that judge shall be made up, and when all else in his life shall have been forgotten, his name will be kept from oblivion, not for praise, but as that of one by whose marvelous conversion a great principle of taxation was, for the time, overthrown, in a land of free people under free institutions.

Mr. Chairman, I will advance a step further and say that one of the great reforms now demanded is the limiting of the power of this irresponsible Federal judiciary. There has been a tendency of late—and I wonder that so many are indifferent to it on this floor and at the other end of the Capitol—there has been a tendency of late to minimize the power of the legislative branch of the Government, and to gather additional power to the Executive and to the judiciary. With all our errors here, with all our shifting changes of parties—parties may come and parties may go—here, after all, is the place where the people come nearest to having their will and wishes expressed—come nearest to having their voice heard and their commands obeyed. There is every reason why the legislative power of the land should be strengthened; and there is every reason why the power of the Federal judiciary and the power of the Executive should be curbed.

Speaking of the Executive, Mr. Chairman, I come to a matter upon which I wish to make a few comments, although it does not relate to the bill now before the House. I refer to the attitude of this Government toward those gallant, struggling patriots over in Cuba. [Applause.] Every paper that we read, every word that we get, all the information that we have, bring to us over and over the story of a gallant, heroic struggle near by, almost within sight of our own land, by a body of devoted patriots, for freedom! They bring to us also a story as if drawn from the depths of the blackness of the Middle Ages—a story of cruelty and outrage and wrong, a story of oppression and deviltry. And yet diplomacy is in the field! We are endeavoring to secure, by the "exercise of our good offices," "autonomy for Cuba"—the autonomy of the bird when the snake is about to devour it; the autonomy of the lamb with the fangs of the wolf at its throat; the autonomy of the martyr at the stake with the fagots already lighted! [Applause.]

Talk about autonomy! If we have any right to interfere, if we have the right to do anything—and how ludicrous it would be to say we have not!—we ought to take our course upon the high ground that the people of this great country—free men, the sons of free men—should endeavor, as far as decency and propriety will permit, to aid those struggling for freedom elsewhere.

Why, sir, we lured those people into this rebellion! Every breath that blew from our shores toward theirs carried to them the inspiration of freedom. Everything they read of this great country, everything that those of them who visited it saw of it, lured them, wooed them on, to win their own freedom. And now, with American citizens in Spanish prisons or shot down, with humanity outraged, with civilization disgraced, we are placidly talking about "autonomy" and lending "the good offices" of this Government to Spain, so that the hopeful, though desperate, struggle of the Cubans for liberty shall end in slavery, pleasantly called autonomy!

I had hoped that the present Administration, in some degree responding to the swelling sentiments of the American people for liberty, and against tyranny and brutality, would extend to the devoted sons of Cuba some measure of that justice and humanity which so well might be accorded them. I hope now that the incoming Administration may do better in this respect than that which is soon to depart. [Applause.] If the result of the election of last November had been to place that matchless leader of the American people—William Jennings Bryan—in the Presidential chair [loud applause on the Democratic side], there is no doubt in my mind that there would be something more after the 4th of March than quibbling about "autonomy."

At the least, we ought to recognize the Cubans as belligerents. Are they not belligerents? For months, extended into years, they have defied the power of Spain. Fighting for liberty, they have endured all that mortal man can endure and live. Still, heroically devoted to the cause of freedom, the men of Cuba are in the field, while women and children are butchered at home.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. DE ARMOND. Oh, yes.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The gentleman's criticism is against the Executive——

Mr. DE ARMOND. That is not a question.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I want to ask the gentleman what has been the fate of resolutions seeking to make an expression of the popular sentiment of the country through the House of Representatives? Where are those resolutions?

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, I am not able to say exactly where those resolutions are, but I feel warranted in saying that there is enough of Americanism, enough of American patriotism, in this body, rising above party and ignoring party, to pass some measure creditable to the United States and just to the Cubans if submitted to this House, if the House were given an opportunity to act. [Applause.]

It is not a question of party. We are partisans in reference to matters internal; matters that concern ourselves and our own people. But in the relations of government with government, in our relations to other people, when they involve human liberty and the redemption of our fellow-men from oppression and tyranny—then we are all Americans, in the full sense of the word. Partisanship is lost, thrown to the winds, forgotten. We forget party lines, party affiliations; we are all Americans. [Applause.]

But it is whispered that even now rigorous measures are to be taken against those who have aided in any manner the patriots in Cuba by carrying to them medicines, clothing, arms, horses, stores of various kinds. It is said that measures are to be taken to punish those Americans who sought to find a market for American products among these brave and patriotic people, struggling to achieve their liberty, to throw off and to keep off the heavy yoke of the oppressor. It is said that the ship known as the Three Friends is to be libeled as a pirate, and that the crew are to be treated as pirates.

Is not this, Mr. Chairman, a strange condition of affairs in the greatest Republic on the face of the earth, in these the closing days of the nineteenth century? Since the early dawn of civilization it has been the aspiration of the noblest spirits among men not only to compass their own freedom but to lift up others bending under oppression and tyranny; to help them to rise who have fallen; that the race may ascend to the heights of freedom and bask in the sunlight of liberty. Every noble achievement of the human race has marked its onward, upward march toward greater liberty, the freer exercise of the personal rights of the individual. Yet there seems to be prevailing in the minds of some people an idea that it is a great wrong to rebel against "the powers that be," however bad they be, and that Cuba is wrong, therefore, in rebelling against the harsh rule of Spain. Whence comes that idea? Away with it, for tyrants gave it currency to prop thrones and to blast the hopes of millions.

It has no place in our institutions. It is the doctrine of those who band themselves together for oppression, who always and everywhere are hostile to all who try to get out from under the yoke of the tyrant. Are we still under the traditions of the Dark Ages, in following blindly the behests of tyrants, or are we ready to stand on the high pedestal of American citizenship, and from that point of vantage view the field and determine our course? [Applause.]

I do not know what the result of these prosecutions shall be.

It may be that men who deserve to have their names go down honorably in song and story, and to be remembered among the brave and true men of their time, may be branded as pirates, enemies to mankind. But perhaps it shall happen that the Three Friends, every sail filled with the breath of freedom, may smoothly float on the tide of popular favor into the secure harbor of fond recollection, while possibly some of the foes, driven by the gale of popular disapproval, may be shattered upon the rocks of a liberty-loving people's condemnation.

History plays strange tricks with individuals and with nations. History brings things out in multifarious and curious ways. And yet I think, Mr. Chairman, it is remarkable that as the representatives of a great Republic we stand here idly, indifferent, while events are progressing over in Cuba which would disgrace the darkest page in the darkest period of human history. Somebody asks what are we to do? I respond, let us do something! Do anything that is American. Recognize the Cubans as belligerants. Intervene to protect our own citizens, and arrest the plague of savagery. Let us take this step for the cause of justice, for liberty and human right, for manhood and all it means. Let us do what our traditions teach us to do, what we ought to do, what we have a right to do.

I believe we ought to welcome these island people with glad hand into the great family of nations. [Applause.] Certainly it ought not to be for us to turn our backs upon those who struggle to be free men, and who are suffering from the tyranny of the Spanish Government, while pure, patriotic women are consigned to Spanish dungeons. It ought not to be for us to devote, as far as we can do it by precept and example and our miserable diplomacy, these Cuban heroes, reenforced by volunteer heroes from these United States, to butchery when captured and to outlawry while in the field as soldiers. Why, only yesterday, in one of the leading newspapers of this country, there was told by a respectable correspondent—I refer to the communication of Richard Harding Davis in the New York Journal—a story of barbarity and outrage such as brings the blush to any cheek, however hardened. Young ladies stripped and searched on board an American vessel by Spaniards, bearded, booted, and spurred! And this after two similar outrages on shore! You may read all the infamous pages of infamous history, and you can not find a line to parallel it.

It may be said that this is only newspaper report. I have far more reliance in these American newspaper men who take their lives in their hands, and, with the American spirit, go down to Cuba to investigate the situation, and then, in the American spirit, report to us what they have seen, and tell us what they believe—I have far more confidence in them, and place far more dependence upon what they say, than upon all the poor, miserable palaver of our foreign office through the agency called diplomacy. Why should we be particularly gentle about this matter? Why should we pretend to favor as a government what our citizens condemn individually? Why should our Government pretend that we wish to bring these rebellious subjects of Spain into amicable relations as subjects with the mother country? Why, on the contrary, should not we, the representatives of the people, speaking the voice of the people, say, rather, that we hope nevermore to hear of the flag of Spain floating over the Island of Cuba, but do hope that the flag of free Cuba may float there forever. [Applause.]

It is too much a habit to do officially or not to do officially the reverse of what individually we consider just and proper. It is quite as well to call some things by their names. Any power, any treaty, any provision, any toleration by which decent, respectable ladies may be subjected to the outrage of being stripped naked and searched by Spanish policemen and soldiers, upon an American vessel, under the American flag, ought to be abrogated, swept away at once, in any way in which it can be done. This ought to be done by the smooth methods of law, or, if those methods are too smooth to be effective, it ought to be done with the sharp edge of the sword. Humanity demands it. Civilization urges it. Liberty will not be satisfied without it. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. I yield thirty minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PITNEY].

Mr. PITNEY. Mr. Chairman, it is well that the attention of the House and of the country has been called to the exceptionally large appropriation contained in the sundry civil bill now under consideration. I am glad to hear my distinguished friend from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] and my equally distinguished friend from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] disclaim any intent to make a partisan criticism. I am sorry that in their remarks they were not entirely consistent with their declaration of intentions. This matter of great appropriations of the public money is not and should not be made a partisan matter. No party has a monopoly of economy and no party has a monopoly of extravagance. Recent history does not indicate that the Republican party is especially chargeable with culpability in increasing the public expenditures.

The Fifty-first Congress was Republican in both branches and held office at the same time with a Republican President, Mr. Harrison. It was that Congress which was first called a "billion-dollar Congress," an epithet that was intended to convey a general accusation of extravagance. The epithet was, in fact, not literally deserved, as the official figures show that the appropriations of the Fifty-first Congress amounted to only $988,417,183.34. The next, or Fifty-second Congress, was composed of a House having more than a two-thirds Democratic majority and a Senate barely controlled by the Republicans. It passed appropriations amounting to over a billion dollars, or, to be exact, $1,027,104,547.92. The Fifty-third Congress was Democratic in both branches, with a Democratic Executive, Mr. Cleveland. The total appropriations were $989,239,205.69. The present, or Fifty-fourth Congress, is composed of a Republican House and a Senate having a majority of Democrats and Populists, there being a Democratic President. Its total appropriations will, I regret to say, amount to much more than a billion dollars, perhaps to as much as $1,045,000,000. A material part of the excess over a billion dollars is due to the increase of the sinking-fund requirements occasioned by the increase of the public debt within the past three years, during which time additional Government bonds have been sold to the extent of $262,000,000, entailing an additional interest charge of $11,500,000 per annum and annual payments upon the principal to the amount of 1 per cent of the new loan, or about $2,620,000, an increase for interest and sinking-fund obligations of over $14,000,000 on that account.

The river and harbor bill passed at the last session of the present Congress—passed by the votes of Democrats as well as Republicans—appropriated directly nearly $13,000,000 for that class of work, and authorized the Secretary of War to make contracts for the completion of works (most of which were already in progress) to an aggregate of about $59,000,000, payments to fall due at the rate of 25 per cent per annum for four years. The sundry civil bill now before the House includes more than $15,000,000 of appropriations for these river and harbor contracts. Without going further into detail, we have already accounted for practically the entire excess of the appropriations of the present Congress over and above the "billion-dollar mark." A careful investigation of the figures I have given and of the whole subject will convince an impartial observer—however much he may regret these vast expenditures—that the responsibility can not be placed upon either political party as a party, and that if the true explanation is to be found and a proper remedy applied, they must be sought for outside the lines of party division. The truth is, there is much more of human nature than of party politics in all these matters of appropriations, and I think I can show, before concluding my remarks, that the explanation of the growing increase of public expenditures is to be sought and found in another direction.

But if there were any real difference between the two great parties upon this question, I will frankly admit, Mr. Chairman—speaking for myself, as a member of the majority party here—that I do not think our present power was given to us by the people with the purpose of increasing the appropriations. There never was a party majority of Representatives in this House who owed their seats so little to mere partisan votes as the members of the Fifty-fourth Congress, with the exception of those who have been reelected to the Fifty-fifth Congress. We Republicans were elected in 1894, and again in 1896, by a union of forces, by men of both parties, and we owe a responsibility to those who supported us and who placed us in power here which we can not shirk.

I am glad, therefore, Mr. Chairman, and because I am obliged to share in the responsibility of reporting this sundry civil bill to the House I am especially glad, that the attention of the House and of the country has been called to the fact that it is the largest bill that has ever been reported under this title. I am glad, also, that the frank admission is made by gentlemen upon the other side of the House that there is nothing in the bill properly subject to criticism, excepting those items which provide payment for river and harbor improvements. I am glad that attention is called to the fact that almost the whole increase in the bill over and above what has been customary in recent years—namely, $15,131,996.91—is due to the passage of the river and harbor bill at the last session of this Congress and to the fact that the Secretary of War, under the authority of that law, has made contracts for public work, under which contracts certain payments will fall due during the fiscal year 1898 to the amount that I have mentioned.

THE RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

For myself I have no apology to make for my action upon the river and harbor bill. I will not undertake to criticise it or explain it in detail. I have not the necessary knowledge. I was opposed at the last session to the passage of any river and harbor bill, excepting, perhaps, the minimum amount which would have been sufficient to protect from the elements the work that was already in progress and partly unfinished, hoping that the same policy might be continued until the country should be in a condition to warrant further progress in river and harbor improvements. When the bill was pending in the House, I protested against its passage. I voted against it then, and afterwards voted to sustain the Presidential veto when the bill was returned from the White House. And yet, Mr. Chairman, I am not opposed to the proper and reasonable improvement of our principal harbors and waterways. The Republican party is not opposed to it, and the people are not opposed to it. But an extravagant bill, that is passed without debate, and under such circumstances that no man, friendly or unfriendly to the bill, can safely say after it is passed that its several items are just and proper—against such a bill it is the duty, I think, of every Representative to protest.

That river and harbor bill, I believe, was grossly extravagant, and contained many vicious items, as must needs be the case with a bill passed by such methods. And yet the greatest objection to the bill, in my opinion, was not so much in respect to the particular projects of work, some of which have been subjected to severe criticism here, but was owing to the fact that the bill was passed at a time when the country could not afford to have it passed; to the fact that when the bill was passed the income of the Government was less than its necessary expenditures, so that a deficit of $140,000,000 had resulted within three years preceding, and the Government was subsisting largely upon borrowed money; to the fact that when the bill was passed the credit of the country was impaired. And although we had the high authority of the President of the United States for saying that there was "a comfortable surplus" in the Treasury at that time, yet every man knew the "surplus" was not only a borrowed surplus, but that it was made up in large part of the promissory notes of the Government held in the Treasury vaults.

President Cleveland's veto of the river and harbor bill was dated May 29, 1896. On that date the "available cash balance" in the Treasury was $267,000,000, showing an apparent surplus of $167,000,000 above the gold reserve; but of this amount $29,000,000, in round numbers, were silver dollars, $87,688,000 were "greenbacks," and $42,000,000 or thereabouts were composed of Treasury notes of 1890, national-bank notes, fractional silver coin, and similar items, not available for redemption purposes, leaving only about $108,000,000 as the amount of gold in the Treasury—but little above the conventional "reserve fund" of $100,000,000. At the same time there were in circulation among the people about $225,000,000 in "greenbacks," over $33,000,000 of currency certificates, nearly $100,000,000 of Treasury notes of 1890, and over $300,000,000 of silver certificates, besides 50,000,000 or more of silver dollars.

All of this outstanding money was, directly or by indirection, redeemable at the Treasury in gold, either by force of law or by the operation of the very proper practice which is pursued by the representatives of the Government in order to maintain all the people's money upon the basis of gold coin as a standard. Of course there was nothing novel in this situation in the month of May, 1896, when the river and harbor bill was passed, but a series of events and the then existing conditions rendered it important to scrutinize the actual condition of the Treasury when considering increases of appropriations.

And so the nominal "surplus" in the Treasury of $167,000,000 could not properly be regarded as a surplus of such a character as to warrant increased expenditures for public objects. For purposes of bookkeeping it was properly called a surplus, but for purposes of finance it is not proper—at least when the public credit is questioned—to consider any part of the Treasury balance as a surplus or as available assets, except so much of it as is composed of money which may be used as the final redeemer of the outstanding obligations of the Government—that is to say, the gold coin. The necessary result of making expenditures in excess of the current income of the Government, when such expenditures must be paid by the reissue of Government notes, is, to all intents and purposes of true finance, in effect to create a new and additional loan, because the Government notes as they go out constitute an increase of the Government obligations already outstanding.

And whether the situation were the result of inadequate provision of revenues or of unwise and unnecessary appropriations, or in part the result of both of these causes, made no difference with the condition of affairs as it confronted us in the first session of the present Congress. We found the Government receipts running low, so that even the most necessary expenditures would exceed the income. As the House of Representatives was unable to pass a revenue measure to restore the income, owing to opposition in the Senate and in the White House, the only alternative for us was to avoid unnecessary appropriations. I was opposed, therefore, to the passage of the river and harbor bill, not only because it involved extravagant expenditures, but also for the reason that in my opinion it had a decided tendency to further impair the credit of the country. To the best of my ability, and so far as the scope of my influence extended, I endeavored to apply the same rule to all other plans and projects calling for the appropriation of the public money, and to support only such as were so necessary as to warrant us in paying out even borrowed money for their maintenance. Deficiency of revenue being the main cause of our financial difficulties, the obvious remedy was either to increase the revenue or to limit the expenditures.

But, says the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CATCHINGS], the universal sentiment of the people of the South sustains these river and harbor improvements. I dare say so; and I do not complain of our brethren of the South for desiring to improve their harbors and waterways. What I do complain of in the gentleman from Mississippi, and other gentlemen who stand with him, is that when they came into power in the Fifty-third Congress they passed an act which not only crippled the industries of the country, but to some extent paralyzed the custom-houses, and then they afterwards came into the Fifty-fourth Congress and persuaded other members to join with them in expending an enormous amount of borrowed money to improve the harbors which lead up to the custom-houses. The gentleman has not ventured to defend the river and harbor bill from this standpoint, and I do not think he can. Nobody objects to reasonable expenditures for digging out sand bars at the mouth of the harbor, provided you do not cripple the custom-house at the head of the harbor. I do not object so much to free ingress and egress for commerce, but I do insist that the same commerce which is admitted into the port ought to pay ample tolls at the custom-house for the purpose of paying for the improvements.

However, in spite of opposition here and elsewhere, the river and harbor bill was passed, and became a part of the law of the land. And so the question came up at the present session as to what the Committee on Appropriations should do with the expenditures authorized in that law when they came to make up the appropriations for the coming fiscal year. Then we were confronted with the fact that after the bill was passed the Secretary of War went forward, as authorized by the act, and made contracts calling for certain payments to fall due during the fiscal year 1898. It is the function and the duty of the Committee on Appropriations to report appropriations required by law. We could not withhold the appropriations without repudiating the contracts, and the American people are opposed to repudiation in that and every other form. Therefore, for these contracts it seemed necessary for us to report the appropriations. Other contracts not yet let are now in the very process of letting. The Secretary of War has adopted the plans, has accepted the bids, and is about to put the pen upon paper to bind the Government for these contracts. We can not, therefore, withhold appropriations to meet the payments under these intended contracts without to that extent nullifying legislation. It would perhaps be improper for the Committee on Appropriations to recommend a bill which would have that effect. If there is any authority to stop the contracts, it is for the Executive, acting through the Secretary of War, to refuse to enter into them. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, it has seemed necessary for your committee to report this unusually great expenditure in the sundry civil appropriation bill in order to provide for the payments made necessary by the river and harbor bill of last year.

It is a good thing to have great improvements if you do not have unnecessary improvements, if you do not have extravagant improvements, and if you do not go into improvements which the people can not afford to undertake at the time. The Committee on Appropriations were practically concluded from objection on these points by the passage of the law at the last session. So much for the river and harbor expenditures.

RECENT INCREASES OF APPROPRIATIONS.

And now I want to say something upon the main subject of the increase of our appropriations in recent years, which the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] and other gentleman have alluded to. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] called attention to a comparison between the appropriations for the fiscal year 1887 and those of the fiscal year 1897, and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] grouped certain years at a former time with the present, but neither of these gentlemen went far enough to discover the cause of the great increases of appropriations in recent years. If the gentlemen had compared the appropriations for ten years preceding 1887 with the appropriations for ten years following after 1887, they would have found during the first period reasonable expenditures on the whole, whichever party had control of the purse strings, and in the second period they would have found very greatly increased appropriations on the whole, whichever party had control of the purse strings. During the second decade these increases have been going forward, whether the Republicans or the Democrats have been in power, either in the White House and the Departments, or in the Senate, or in the House of Representatives, or in all three combined. The expenditures during that period have increased with rapid strides, and if the gentlemen had investigated and ascertained what controlling change had taken place between the first decade and the second decade, they would have had their attention called to a significant event, which, it seems to me, has been of controlling importance in this matter.

That event was the change in the rules of the House of Representatives, made at the opening of the Forty-ninth Congress, in December, 1885—previous to the framing of the appropriation bills for the fiscal year 1887—by which change the House departed from the previous practice of intrusting all the appropriation bills to a single committee, which was held responsible for the sum total as well as for the details, the House then inaugurating the new policy of distributing the appropriation bills and dividing the responsibility among a large number of committees, none of which could really be held responsible. That division of responsibility has continued during all subsequent Congresses to the present time. Perhaps the system is now too firmly established to encourage a proposition to return to the former system, but since we are now calling the attention of the House and of the people to the fact of increased expenditures, it is worth while to inquire into the cause—not to bandy partisan attacks, not to make anything but a fair comparison, but to ascertain, if we can, the real cause of the increased appropriations, and let the people remedy the evil if they desire to remedy it. Speaking for myself, I believe that a change in the direction of economy is called for, and that public sentiment will find expression upon the subject at no very distant day. Let me say at this point that I am not now advocating any increase of responsibility for the present Committee on Appropriations. Nor am I prompted to speak by any personal consideration. I am well aware that if the power and influence and responsibility of the old Committee on Appropriations were restored, no first-term member like myself, nor even any second-term member, would probably find a place upon that honorable committee.

Now, let us reflect for a moment. From the foundation of the Government down to the year 1865 all bills for the expenditure of money, all general appropriation bills, as well as all bills for raising revenue, were in the control of the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives. To go a little further back, the Constitution itself, by a specific declaration, placed in the House of Representatives the same power and prerogative over revenue bills which the British House of Commons had held from time immemorial. The framers of the Constitution put into it a provision that—

> All bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives, but the Senate may propose or concur with amendments as on other bills.

That provision does not say in terms that all "money bills," including appropriation bills, shall originate in the House of Representatives, but it has been so construed by Congressional action, and the practice of Congress from that time until now, without a single notable exception, has been to allow the House—indeed the House has enforced the practice—to originate not only bills for the laying of taxes and the raising of revenue, but also bills for the expenditure of the money after it is received into the coffers of the Treasury. An attempt was made in the year 1856 by the Senate of the United States to originate certain general appropriation bills. They were passed in the Senate and sent to the House of Representatives, and there they were defeated by being laid upon the table, without reference to a committee. From that time until now, so far as I am aware, there has been no attempt on the part of the Senate to break through the Congressional practice of permitting appropriation bills as well as revenue bills to be originated by the House of Representatives.

And why? The reason is, it seems to me, that it was recognized by the fathers, and by all who have followed after them, that the same arm of the Government—the same branch of the legislature—which was charged with the responsibility of raising revenue should also be charged with the responsibility of proposing its expenditure; or, to put the last matter first, that those who had the privilege of recommending expenditure should at the same time be clothed with the power and responsibility of proposing measures for raising the necessary revenues.

And so, from the earliest days down to the year 1865, the Committee on Ways and Means of the House originated both the appropriation bills and the revenue bills. In that year the separate committee for appropriations was created, and from 1865 to 1885 that committee was charged with all bills for the appropriation of money with but two exceptions, viz, the agricultural bill, reported since the fiscal year 1880 by the Committee on Agriculture, and the river and harbor bill, jurisdiction over which was vested in a separate committee from 1883, if I mistake not.

Now, during the hard times which followed after the panic of 1873, as gentlemen may remember, the Democratic party secured control of the House of Representatives in 1874, upon the cry of "Retrenchment and reform." And for some years thereafter the Democrats did, and the Republicans did also, keep the expenditures down to a very reasonable limit. During that time the Hon. Samuel J. Randall, of Pennsylvania, was an honored leader of the Democratic party on this floor. He was three times chosen Speaker, and he was afterwards for several Congresses chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. Now, if there is any partisan moral to be drawn from this little history, it perhaps comes in here. Samuel J. Randall was one of the greatest practical statesmen that the Democratic party ever sent to this House, and was universally recognized as a leader and as a steadfast economist. But he committed one unpardonable fault. He was the leader of that wing of the Democratic party who believed that the tariff should be laid, not merely for the sole and only purpose of raising revenue, but that in laying the tariff it was not only permissible but proper to make reasonable discriminations in favor of the products of American industry. And so, in the Forty-eighth Congress, when the Hon. John G. Carlisle was Speaker, and the Hon. William R. Morrison, of Illinois, was engaged in his great project of horizontal reduction of the tariff, Mr. Randall opposed him, led the Democratic opposition, and joined with the Republicans in defeating that measure.

Therefore it was determined, on the assembling of the Forty-ninth Congress in the month of December, 1885, to "clip the wings" of Samuel J. Randall for having had the audacity to represent in some degree the protection sentiment of the country. The question arose, how they could do it. Well, Mr. Randall was chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, which gave him too great power, as they thought, and so the Democratic majority in the Forty-ninth Congress, under the leadership of Carlisle, Morrison, Springer, and others who acted with them, revised the rules of the House so that many of the appropriation bills were taken away from the Appropriations Committee and distributed among other committees of the House. In that way they distributed the Army appropriation bill and the Military Academy appropriation bill to the Committee on Military Affairs, the naval appropriation bill to the Committee on Naval Affairs, the Indian appropriation bill to the Committee on Indian Affairs, the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and the Post-Office appropriation bill to the Committee on Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Since that time the rules have remained unchanged in this respect and the Committee on Appropriations has had charge of but six of the fourteen great annual appropriation bills, namely, deficiency, District of Columbia, fortifications, legislative, pension, and sundry civil, the remaining eight being held by seven other committees. The result has been just what Mr. Randall and others predicted when the change was proposed. Instead of a single committee having entire charge of expenditures, acting without special interest in any particular branch or department of the public service, but desirous simply of doing justice by all, responsible at the same time, not only for the details, but for the total of expenditures, and charged with the duty of keeping the outgo within the income of the Government, there have been numerous committees preparing and reporting bills for expenditures, each committee impressed with the importance of some particular branch of the service and recommending appropriations for that branch without cooperation with the other committees, and necessarily without full knowledge whether extraordinary expenditures required at the same time in other directions might not raise the total of appropriations beyond a reasonable limit or even beyond the total revenues—no committee charged with keeping a proper balance or proportion between the expenditures in the several Departments; none charged with keeping the sum total within bounds, or with seeing that expenses do not outstrip revenues. As a consequence, the annual expenditures have largely increased in the past ten years, quite out of proportion to the increase of population in the country.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Will the gentleman state whether he is in favor of going back to the old rule on this subject and committing all the general appropriation bills to a single committee?

Mr. PITNEY. I will state that I intend to express no final opinion on that subject, for I have not investigated it far enough to form an opinion for which I should like to be held responsible. But I say that, inasmuch as the attention of the House and the country is attracted at this time to the increase of appropriations, I think we should investigate to the very bottom the causes which have produced the increase. If there is a moral to be drawn from the circumstances of the case, either by gentlemen on this floor or by our constituents in the country, they will be able to draw it when they know the full history of the matter.

Mr. GROW. Will the gentleman allow me a moment's explanation on a question of fact? I would not interrupt the gentleman if he had not already been interrupted. I wish to call the gentleman's attention to an occasion when, the House having sent to the Senate the Post-Office appropriation bill, the Senate amended it by increasing the postage on letters and papers; and this House, when the bill was returned to it from the Senate, sent it back to that body with the suggestion that, under the Constitution, revenue measures must originate in this House—that the Senate could not originate a revenue bill.

Mr. PITNEY. I am very much indebted to my distinguished friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. GROW] for his suggestion. It may be that he is referring to a different occurrence from the one to which I have already called attention.

Mr. GROW. The case to which I refer involves precisely the same question.

Mr. PITNEY. I will read from a speech delivered in this House on the 3d of March, 1871, by James A. Garfield, of Ohio, afterwards President of the United States:

In pursuance of this resolution—

Referring to a Senate resolution, passed, after much debate, on February 7, 1856, directing the Committee on Finance of that body to inquire into the expediency of reporting the appropriation bills for the support of the Government, etc.—

the Senate Committee on Finance reported the general appropriation bill for invalid pensions. It passed the Senate on the 28th of February. Soon afterwards the Senate also passed the general appropriation bill for the repair of fortifications. Both these bills were laid on the table of the House on the 17th of April, 1856, without having been referred or debated, thus ending the attempt of the Senate to change the uniform, unbroken custom of the Government from its foundation to the present time; and it may still be said, as Mr. Seward declared in 1856, that up to this time no general appropriation bill which originated in the Senate ever became a law.

Mr. GROW. I do not wish to take up the gentleman's time; but if he will look up the history of this matter previous to the time he refers to, he will find that the first occasion when this question arose was on a bill making appropriations for the expenses of the Post-Office Department. As I have already stated, the Senate having sent that bill to the House with an amendment increasing the postage on letters and papers, the House sent it back with a suggestion that it was not within the power of the Senate under the Constitution to originate a revenue bill; and when that bill went back to the Senate, Senator Toombs, of Georgia, spoke upon it until the end of the session, so that Congress adjourned without making appropriations for the expenses of the Post-Office Department. The incident to which the gentleman from New Jersey has referred was subsequent to that which I am now stating.

Mr. PITNEY. I am very much obliged to my friend for his suggestion.

Mr. GROW. I only wish to vindicate the truth of history.

Mr. PITNEY. Mr. Chairman, at the time when the House distributed the appropriation bills in the Forty-ninth Congress many able members besides Mr. Randall took the floor and pointed out the consequences which would follow. The distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], now the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, objected, and predicted that the result would be greatly increased appropriations. A very able member from New Jersey, now deceased, the Hon. William Walter Phelps, whose district included a part of the district I have now the honor to represent, protested against the measure. And that distinguished leader from Ohio, William McKinley, now soon to be inaugurated President of the United States, stood here and pointed out to the Democratic majority that the necessary consequence of the change would be vastly increased appropriations. Now, I do not say that the change of the rules is necessarily a subject of partisan criticism; but, since a little partisan flavor has been injected into this debate, I may be permitted to allude to the facts of the case.

Mr. SAYERS. If the gentleman is now of opinion that the action of the House of Representatives on this subject in the Forty-ninth Congress was properly subject to criticism, why does he not take advantage of the power of his own party in this House and secure a restoration of the old rule?

Mr. PITNEY. I will say to my distinguished friend from Texas that I have too much modesty to assume to myself a power of control over the majority of this House.

Mr. SAYERS. The gentleman's answer is not sufficient.

Mr. PITNEY. It is quite sufficient, and no one knows it better than my friend from Texas.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Let me ask the gentleman this question: Under existing circumstances, would the gentleman consent to a restoration of the old rule, unless he felt pretty well assured that he was going to be a member of the Appropriations Committee again?

Mr. PITNEY. The personal allusion is inopportune, and is entirely unmerited. If I thought that by declining or losing a place on that committee or on any committee (however much I might prize the honor of belonging to it) I could assist in keeping the expenditures of the Government within reasonable limits, I hope I should not allow my personal interests or feelings to stand in the way.

When this House shall come, if it does come, to act upon a proposition to restore the rule of placing the privilege of reporting appropriation bills, with its accompanying responsibility, in a single committee, it will doubtless be at the opening of the first session of a new House, when the entire body of rules is under discussion; that is to say, before the appointment of any committees. Certainly no new member could hope to increase his chances of being appointed upon a committee having charge of appropriations by advocating a proposition to confine that power and responsibility in a single committee. But when the time comes, I have no doubt that the principal obstacle in the way of a return to the old system or to any system which could be relied upon to produce similar results will be found in the fear of members generally that the privileges and prerogatives of this committee or that committee will be curtailed. And any member advocating a change will be suspected, if not accused, of a purpose to enhance his individual importance by securing a position upon the one committee that would be intrusted with the appropriation bills, if the change were adopted.

My friend from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] and my friend from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] both understand the springs of human action, which operate upon this floor as well as elsewhere, well enough to appreciate the difficulty of remedying the present system now that it has been established for more than ten years.

But, Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of my friend from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] and my friend from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] to the results which have followed from the division of responsibility as to expenditures.

The Agricultural appropriation bills for ten years preceding 1887 amounted in the aggregate to $3,238,740. For the ten years following they amounted to $23,480,347, an increase of 624.98 per cent. The Army bill, being a notable exception to the rule, was reduced from a total of $259,000,000 in the first decade to $240,000,000 in the second decade. The diplomatic and consular bills were increased from a total of $11,879,000 in the first period to a total of $15,870,000 in the second, an increase of 33.59 per cent. In the District of Columbia appropriation bills there was an increase in the annual average of the second decade as compared with the first amounting to 58.48 per cent. In the fortification bills the total for the first ten years, $4,735,000, was increased so that in eight of the next ten years they aggregated $22,489,000, an increase of 375 per cent in the annual average. The Indian appropriation bills increased from a total of $50,000,000 for the first decade to a total of $85,703,000 for the second decade, an increase of 70 per cent, although the Indians are fast disappearing from the face of the earth.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PITNEY. I should be glad to have a few minutes longer.

Mr. CANNON. I yield to the gentleman such time as he wants.

Mr. PITNEY. I thank the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] very much for his courtesy, and will endeavor to detain the committee but a short time.

The legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bills show a total of $178,000,000 in the first decade, and $213,000,000 in the second decade, or an increase of 19 per cent.

And so, Mr. Chairman, without going into details, I may say that the same is true with reference to the other appropriation bills. Without now detaining the committee with their reading, I propose, with the consent of the House, to embody in the RECORD as a part of my remarks, not merely the specific comparisons which I have given, but the tables from which they have been drawn. It seems to me they will be of great interest to the members of this body. At the same time I want to give credit for the very thorough, useful, and able research which produced these tables to the accomplished clerk of the Senate Committee on Appropriations, Mr. T. P. Cleaves, who prepared the tables a year ago for the use of the committee of which he is the clerk, and kindly placed a copy of them at my disposal. I think it will be a very good thing for the House and the country to have these tables before them in accessible form, and therefore I shall embody them in the RECORD, with the consent of the House, as they have not heretofore been published, even as a document.

Mr. BOATNER. Will the gentleman yield to me for a suggestion?

Mr. PITNEY. Certainly.

Mr. BOATNER. While the gentleman is discussing the cause of the increase in the expenditures, does it not occur to him that the rapid extinguishment of the public debt—the great debt incurred during the war—and the increase of revenue, as compared with expenses, which set in about 1883 or 1884, may largely account for this increase in appropriations? The fact that the Government had a large surplus revenue—did it not, in the judgment of the gentleman, have a tendency to rather increase than to diminish these expenditures?

Mr. PITNEY. The gentleman's suggestion is interesting, and there doubtless is such a tendency in times of surplus revenue; but I confess that my investigations do not lead me to believe that that tendency has been sufficient of itself to account for the results which are shown.

I am glad to have the subject investigated by others as well as myself, and have no motive whatever except to ascertain exactly the facts bearing upon the case and the reason for these expenditures, or rather increase of expenditures. I think it will scarcely be doubted that one of the prime causes, if not the principal cause, of the present large appropriations is the fact to which I have already alluded, viz, the distribution of the appropriation bills among several committees and the consequent absence of responsibility in any committee.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The suggestions of the gentleman from New Jersey are interesting, and I have no desire to question them. But at the same time I would suggest that the Senate Committee on Appropriations, during all the time to which he has referred, had the appropriations emanating from the Senate within their entire control, and I would ask whether it is not a fact that that committee, having charge of all these bills, has largely exaggerated the appropriations of the House? I draw no conclusions, but merely call his attention to the facts.

Mr. PITNEY. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] is, of course, aware of a rule of parliamentary debate which makes it, perhaps, improper for us to refer to the proceedings in the other body——

Mr. GROSVENOR. Oh, no; not in such a way as that.

Mr. PITNEY (continuing). But I will tell the gentleman, in entire frankness, what I understand to be the explanation. For years past the Senate Committee on Appropriations has been annually threatened with the same change which was made in this House in 1885; that is, that they would be deprived of the consideration of these bills, and that the several bills would be passed over to the control of the committees which had charge of the special objects of the appropriation. If my information is correct, the Senate Appropriations Committee have been constrained to submit to a kind of pressure for increasing the appropriations on the part of the committees having charge of the objects for which the appropriations would be expended, and they have yielded to the pressure perhaps more than they would have done if they had not been threatened with the loss of their prerogatives.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Would not the House committee be liable, also, to the same pressure?

Mr. PITNEY. Very likely. I am not now claiming to suggest an adequate remedy. On the contrary, I have expressly disclaimed undertaking to do so. But the inquiry of the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] reminds me of a circumstance which is worth noting in this connection. We are all aware, of course, that the Senate has uniformly exercised to the fullest extent its constitutional prerogative to propose amendments on appropriation bills. The members of the House have often been called upon to oppose what they deemed the too great liberality of the Senate with regard to expenditures. That tendency in the Senate is not, I presume, of recent origin, and it perhaps will account for the fact mentioned by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] without reference to the pressure upon the Senate Committee on Appropriations, from other committees, in the direction of increased appropriations. I am informed—and this is the interesting fact—that previous to the division of responsibility among the House committees the appropriation bills framed at this end of the Capitol were so uniformly and invariably reasonable and economical in amount that the Senate did not in a single instance find occasion to reduce the amount of any of the appropriation bills as passed by the House. During that period all Senate amendments were in the direction of increased appropriations. But since the change of the House rules, to which I have referred, so marked has been the tendency to increase appropriations at this end of the Capitol that in repeated instances even the liberal Senators have felt constrained to propose amendments reducing the appropriation bills as passed by the House. My information is that several instances of this kind occurred so recently as the third session of the Fifty-third Congress. And there was one notable example of it in the first session of the present Congress, when the Senate amended the naval appropriation bill by reducing the provision for the construction of new battle ships, cutting it down from four ships, as passed by the House, and making it provide for only two ships.

It is not necessary to make inquiry whether, in these specific instances, the Senate was right or wrong in reducing the appropriations. Nor is it worth while to inquire whether specific instances of the increase of appropriations, either by the Senate or by the House, have been wise or unwise. It is sufficient for us to know that a given system of legislative work has an inevitable tendency to increase the expenditures of the Government, and that another system has a tendency in the opposite direction. Experience tells us that where public expenditures are unduly increased the unworthy objects will increase out of all proportion, while, if a policy of restricted appropriations is pursued, the unworthy objects are more liable to be excluded. It becomes a question of the "survival of the fittest."

Congress makes appropriations upon the recommendations of the Executive Departments of the Government. If Congress is liberal with the money, the less urgent and less worthy recommendations receive equal treatment with those which are more important; while if Congress is economical, the Departments are constrained to "cut the garment according to the cloth," and omit from their recommendations the unworthy or unnecessary objects.

I will put into the RECORD, Mr. Chairman, in connection with the tables to which I have referred, a summary from which it will be seen that, excluding the pension bill, which of course would largely swell the percentage of the increase—and the increase of the pension bill and the cause of it are well known to the House and to the country—there was a net increase in the appropriation bills for the ten years 1887–1896 over the corresponding appropriations for the preceding ten years amounting to 46.43 per cent on the average.

Mr. PEARSON. Is that including the pension bills?

Mr. PITNEY. No; that comparison excludes them. The percentage would be still greater if you include the pension bills, for they increased 134 per cent.

And now let us consider for a moment how this increase of appropriations compares with the increase of population. In the midst of the first decade the census of 1880 was taken, and in the midst of the second decade the census of 1890 was taken. If you take the figures yielded by these two censuses as a correct basis for the average population in the two periods, you will find that the increase of population was 24.85 per cent, while the increase of appropriations was 46.43 per cent. This is exclusive of the pension appropriations, which, if included, would make the percentage of increase still greater.

Mr. SAYERS. Will my friend allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. PITNEY. In a moment. To complete my statement upon this point, I wish to say that the per capita appropriation for the first decade, that is, from 1877 to 1886, on the basis of the population of 1880, was $29.56 for each man, woman, and child in the country, while the per capita appropriation for the second decade, that is, from 1887 to 1896, upon the basis of the population of 1890, was $34.67, an increase of $5.11 for each man, woman, and child in the country.

Mr. SAYERS. The question I wish to put to the gentleman is this: Does he think that the appropriations should increase in proportion to population?

Mr. PITNEY. Frankly, sir, I do not think they should increase——

Mr. SAYERS. Should not the percentage of population and the percentage of appropriations widen?

Mr. PITNEY (continuing). I think, sir, that the change should be in the other direction, that as the population becomes more dense the proportion of appropriations to population ought to diminish per capita.

Mr. SAYERS. That is the question I put to you.

Mr. PITNEY. I answer it just as the gentleman, perhaps, expected I would answer it, and I think he agrees with the answer.

Mr. SAYERS. Yes.

Mr. PITNEY. Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not want to moralize about this matter any longer, and perhaps I should not have ventured to take the floor if it had not been for some allusions in the remarks of my distinguished friend from Texas [Mr. SAYERS], which it seemed to me had a little partisan flavor about them. I wish to say that I never have any difficulty in cooperating with my friend from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] and my friend from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] in their efforts to prevent unnecessary appropriations, nor any difficulty in securing their cooperation in the same direction.

Mr. HOPKINS. The gentleman does not wish to go to the extent of saying that as the population increases the aggregate expenses of the Government should decrease?

Mr. PITNEY. No; I did not say that.

Mr. SAYERS. But that the percentage should decrease.

Mr. PITNEY. As the population increases, the per capita appropriation ought to diminish.

Mr. HOPKINS. Still, the gentleman concedes that it costs more to run a country with 75,000,000 people than it costs to run a country with 50,000,000 people.

Mr. PITNEY. Of course I concede that; but what I say is that it ought not to cost more per capita.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have little further to say. I did not rise to advocate any change in the rules. I do not know that any change is feasible, but while we are on the subject of the increasing expenses of the Government, it is worth while to consider the history of the matter and ascertain, if we can, the causes of the increase. If the country desires that we shall continue in the policy, the country will have an opportunity to sustain the House of Representatives and the Senate in these increased appropriations. If, on the other hand, the country desires a change in the matter, the country, I believe, will find a way to force an issue and compel Congress, willingly or unwillingly, to reduce expenditures.

Shall we reduce river and harbor improvements? The difficulty at present is that the river and harbor improvements go forward without adequate scrutiny on the part of Congress. I have nothing further to say upon that subject. I leave the whole matter to the attention of the House. I ask you to study the tables which I will introduce into the RECORD, and when you see them in the morning they will repay your careful study.

Gentlemen may inquire, Do not these tables show that the appropriations covered by the six bills now emanating from the Appropriations Committee show an increase in the past ten years, as well as the eight bills reported by the seven other committees? I answer yes; although not to the same extent. Excluding the pension appropriations, the amount of which is the direct result of general legislation, the bills which have come from the single committee increased 32 per cent from the first period to the second; or but little more than the increase of population, which was about 25 per cent. The eight appropriation bills, which have latterly come from seven different committees, have increased nearly 54 per cent from the first period to the second, or more than twice as fast as the increase of the population of the country. This comparison indicates that, even under the present arrangement, where there has been the greatest responsibility there has been the least yielding to the constant pressure for increasing appropriations, and that those committees which have felt less responsibility for the total of expenditures have more easily yielded. This fact may to some extent answer the suggestion of my distinguished friend from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] that any one committee of the House, if charged with the whole responsibility, would be subjected to the same pressure which is now felt, doubtless, by the Senate Committee on Appropriations.

But if the 32 per cent increase shown by the bills that have proceeded from the Appropriations Committee since the change of the rules is objectionable, it does not weaken the point of my observations. The personnel of committees or the names of committees have nothing to do with the question. What I am inquiring about is the system. The Appropriations Committee is not what it was under the old rules; its power is less, its responsibility is less, its functions are different. That committee, like other committees charged with a part only, and an indefinite part, of the entire responsibility, has doubtless found it difficult to tighten the purse strings as well as they.

Mr. Chairman, perhaps I ought not to close without at least suggesting some change of system to remedy the present difficulty. I confess that it seems to me the facts of history carry their own suggestion; and my service in this House has been too brief to give any particular importance to any proposition coming from me, except as enforced by the lessons of experience.

The obvious and thoroughgoing remedy is to restore the system which was in operation from the adoption of the Constitution down to the close of the civil war. Place in the hands of a single committee—Ways and Means—the sole power to recommend any and all appropriations, as well as the sole responsibility, which they now have, of recommending measures for raising the necessary revenues to defray the expenditures. That committee—or any other committee having similar power and responsibility—will always be composed of the ablest, most experienced, and most patriotic members of the House. The Ways and Means Committee is not now overburdened with work, except on the rare occasions when a general tariff bill is under consideration. At such times its membership could be increased and its work divided among subcommittees and still kept within control. With such an arrangement, every motive possible would exist for keeping the total expenditures within reasonable bounds, or at least within the limits of the income of the Government. We should hardly see appropriations exceeding the revenues under such a system; there would either be an addition to the revenues or a reduction of expenditures.

The next best plan would be the one in force from 1865 to 1885, the Ways and Means Committee recommending revenue measures as now and a single other committee framing appropriation bills.

A third plan which suggests itself has more of the appearance of a makeshift, and has never been subjected to the test of experience, viz: Create a new committee—call it, if you please, the Committee on Finance—to be made up of the Speaker of the House and the chairmen of the several committees on Ways and Means, Appropriations, Military Affairs, Naval Affairs, Indian Affairs, Foreign Affairs, Post-Offices, Agriculture, and Rivers and Harbors, comprising all the committees now having charge of either revenue or expenditures. Give this committee adequate control over the whole subject, and perhaps some improvement would result. This suggestion, however, I submit with much diffidence.

But, with all confidence, Mr. Chairman, I do suggest that if the public expenditures are to be limited in the future some different system of legislation will be necessary. When the proposition to divide the appropriation bills was made in the Forty-ninth Congress, Mr. Randall, as a member of the Committee on Rules, submitted a minority report opposing the plan, in which he quoted from language used by himself on a former occasion when a similar project was under discussion in the Forty-sixth Congress, as follows:

If you undertake to divide all these appropriations, and have many committees where there ought to be but one, you will enter upon a path of extravagance you can not foresee the length of or the depth of until we find the Treasury of the country bankrupt.

Extravagant language, perhaps; and yet the tables which I submit will show that the appropriations for ten years following the division of responsibility which he opposed were $688,000,000 greater, exclusive of pensions, and over $1,400,000,000 greater, including pensions, than for the ten years preceding the change.

Of the $688,000,000, we can attribute only $368,000,000 to the increase of the population of the country, the remaining $320,000,000 being in excess of that growth. This vast sum is greater even than the $292,000,000 realized by the Government as proceeds of the bond issues of the past three years.

Mr. PEARSON. Do I understand the gentleman to say that he proposes to vote for this sundry civil bill just as it is reported by the committee? I ask that question because I have great respect for the gentleman's opinion.

Mr. PITNEY. I propose to vote for the bill just as reported, unless amendments are suggested; and then after debate I may change my mind upon some items. It is a very large bill, and involves a great many items; but the great controversy over the bill, if there is any controversy, is that it is $15,100,000 greater by reason of one single thing, namely, the large increase in expenditures required by contracts authorized by the river and harbor bill passed at the last session. I have sufficiently expressed my opposition to that bill, but since it has become a law, and contracts have been made under it, we are obliged to recognize those contracts and make provision for the payments as called for.

Mr. ANDREWS. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. PITNEY. Yes.

Mr. ANDREWS. Are those expenditures simply authorized, or is the law mandatory upon the Secretary of War to make the contracts?

Mr. PITNEY. I do not think it is mandatory. If my recollection serves me, it gives him the discretion to make the contracts.

Mr. ANDREWS. To make the contracts if he saw fit?

Mr. PITNEY. He could make them if he saw fit, and he could refrain from making them if he saw fit. I repeat what I said in the early part of my remarks, that if any authority is to nullify the act of last year, it ought not to be the Committee on Appropriations. It should be the Secretary of War, who might refrain from making the contracts which necessitate these appropriations.

Mr. ANDREWS. In other words, the House is left to a choice as between making the appropriations and a repudiation of the legal obligations which have been incurred by reason of the fact that the Secretary of War has exercised his discretion.

Mr. PITNEY. Practically so.

Mr. BOATNER. Could we refuse to make the appropriations without repudiating the lawful obligations of the Government?

Mr. PITNEY. We can not refuse to make the appropriations for those contracts which have already been entered into without repudiation. We can not refuse to make the appropriations for those contracts which the Secretary of War is now ready to enter into, and has determined to enter into, without nullifying legislation.

The following are the tables prepared by Mr. Thomas P. Cleaves, clerk of the Senate Committee on Appropriations, and referred to in the foregoing remarks:

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Chairman, just a word in closing this debate.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. PITNEY. I should like to have similar permission.

Mr. SAYERS. I should like to take the same privilege.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. CANNON. After a day's debate upon this bill, I apprehend there has been imparted much of information, possibly a little of misinformation; but on the whole, I suppose the day has been profitably spent on various questions, and I think they are germane. Evidently if we recognize Cuban independence, whether there is any government there or not, I suppose the Ways and Means Committee ought to take notice and provide an additional block of revenue. Certainly this would be necessary if we propose to dominate that island. However, appropriations should not stand in the way of our duty, if our duty is along that line. But, so far as I am concerned, with the knowledge I have, I am not prepared to recognize Cuba, its independence, or to accord belligerent rights.

When the executive performs its function and we are in possession of facts upon which to intelligently proceed, then I am quite content to take my share of responsibility. I know there is much of sympathy expressed with the downtrodden people of the earth, and properly so. The earth is 25,000 miles around. There are a great many improper things done inside of our borders, and a great many more outside of our borders. Lots of things happen in South America that ought not to, and in the islands of the sea that ought not to happen; and I am told that in the Dark Continent even yet there are multiplied thousands of people being killed and eaten by their brethren. Well, all these things always affect me, strike a chord of sympathy or beget indignation. It is easy to talk. After all, when it comes to the United States reaching out its hands and making all things right, that is quite another question.

Now a word as to this bill in good faith.

Mr. HYDE. Before the gentleman leaves that subject, I want to ask him if the action of this body at the present time upon the Cuban question is meritorious if we adjourn and do nothing more?

Mr. CANNON. Well, sir, I am not in possession of any knowledge that would authorize action on my part. Now, if I could just say in good faith to the gentleman, and meaning what I say——

Mr. HYDE. I have reference to the resolutions we have adopted and what has been done with them.

Mr. CANNON. I say, meaning exactly what I say, and measuring my words, I fear that the population in the Island of Cuba is not very desirable for self-government. There are a good many of them. I am not prepared at this time to say that the United States should, with or without the consent of Spain and the balance of the world, adopt a colonial policy and establish a protectorate and become responsible for the people of that island.

Mr. HYDE. Have not we done that in the case of Venezuela?

Mr. CANNON. Not by any manner of means. I would not be prepared to say it for Venezuela, either. I am not prepared to say, in my judgment, as the United States is without a colonial policy, that we should not at this time seek to acquire Cuba and make it a part of our territory, carving out one or more States. There are a good many things to think about before we enter upon that policy. In other words, while there is a failure of knowledge, I am willing to wait, notwithstanding that frequently people not charged with the responsibility are found to be in favor of conquest and war. Declamation is easy sometimes when performance is difficult. I did not intend to speak about Cuba, if it had not been for what had already been said on that subject.

Mr. PAYNE. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. PAYNE. I have listened to the debate, and tried and have gathered very much knowledge concerning the provisions of this bill; but there are some particular points I would like to have elucidated a little further. I understood the gentleman to say, in answer to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] this morning—and it was entirely pertinent to the inquiry of the gentleman from Iowa—that there were some particular things that involved new legislation in the bill.

Mr. CANNON. Yes, sir; that is correct.

Mr. PAYNE. If it will not divert the gentleman from the line of his argument on the bill, would he just give some suggestions to the House as to what this line of new legislation is?

Mr. CANNON. I would suggest to my very good friend, who I know reads readily, a perusal of the very short but terse report accompanying this bill that sets out every item.

Mr. PAYNE. Is it in print?

Mr. CANNON. The report is in print.

Mr. PAYNE. I wanted to get the information right from the fountain head, the chairman of the committee.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman says he can not get a copy of it, I am quite ready to explain any point that may occur to my friend's mind.

Mr. PAYNE. My request was to know what new items of legislation were in the bill.

Mr. CANNON. I have already referred to the report, and by a perusal he will find them fully set out, I will say to my friend.

Mr. PAYNE. If we had only known of this report, we might have saved the whole day and avoided all this general debate. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. My friend knows quite well that under the rules of the House a report must accompany each bill, and under the practice of reporting bills from the Committee on Appropriations the reports have always been short and terse and to the point.

Mr. PAYNE. Does it explain this Cuban matter, and all that sort of thing? [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. My friend, by his question, criticises my reference to Cuba. My remarks upon that subject were in response to the remarks of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND]; but for fear I may not meet the approval of my distinguished friend from New York, for whose judgment I have a great respect, and whose good opinion I am always anxious to secure, I will refrain from making any further remarks upon that question, and will conclude with a word or two directly about this bill. [Laughter and applause.] I thought I would get the applause of my friend from New York. I have labored hard to earn it. [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, this bill, as has been stated, is for a large amount. The reasons for the increase have been explained two or three times; yet the question which some gentlemen have asked convince me that they do not all understand just how and why the increase comes. I commend them to the report. [Laughter.]

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman a question. On page 48 there is an item of $19,500 for the support of the natives of the Pribilof Islands. The gentleman will remember that when we had this bill up last year I raised a point of order upon that provision that it was not in pursuance of existing law; but I was beaten then for the reason that points of order on the bill had not been reserved. This time the points of order have been reserved by some of our friends on the other side, and when we reach this item in the consideration of the bill I intend to raise the point of order against it. If, however, there is any merit in the item, I do not desire to obstruct the bill, and as we may not hereafter have an opportunity for discussing the merits, I will ask the gentleman if there is any good reason for continuing that appropriation, because if there is I do not care to raise the point of order.

Mr. CANNON. I think my friend is mistaken. I think points of order have always been reserved on the sundry civil bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. Not last year.

Mr. CANNON. I think my friend is wrong about that. However, if he desires to make a point of order, of course he can do so, though in my judgment the item is not subject to the point of order. My friend and I discussed this matter last session, so that it is not necessary to refer to it further at this time.

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. But the situation is different this year. Last year the Indians got pay for catching and cleaning about 8,000 seals. This year the number is about 30,000, so that if $19,500 was the right amount last year, it certainly can not be right this year.

Mr. CANNON. We will discuss that when we reach the item. I have no desire to give them one dollar beyond what is necessary to keep them from starvation.

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. The trouble is that you are not giving it to them.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, as to this bill and the increased appropriations made in it, they result largely from legislation for which my good friend from New York [Mr. PAYNE], like many other gentlemen, voted at the last session of Congress. Now, if anybody wishes to repeal that legislation, well and good. If it is repealed, it will not be necessary for the bill to carry these items; but if that legislation is not repealed, then, in pursuance of law, the appropriations should be made.

Mr. PEARSON. I desire to ask the gentleman a question, upon the answer to which will depend my course. Would it be an act of repudiation in this House to vote against any of these river and harbor items? I would like a very careful answer to that question.

Mr. CANNON. I do not think the question of repudiation comes in at all. Congress has authorized certain expenditures, and contracts for the same have been made. Under that legislation these items are reported for the consideration of the House. If the money is appropriated, or if it is not appropriated the Secretary of War, under the law, can make the contracts. If the money is not appropriated, the Secretary of War can make the contracts anyway.

Mr. PEARSON. Then we can honorably refuse to make the appropriation?

Mr. SAYERS. I will say to my friend from North Carolina that none of the appropriations made in this bill can be used before the 1st day of July next.

Mr. CANNON. Certainly not.

Mr. PEARSON. Then we can honorably refuse to vote for them?

Mr. CANNON. Each man must make up his mind as to what is honorable and what is not honorable in the matter.

Mr. BOATNER. If the Secretary of War has made contracts by reason of existing law and under the provision authorizing contracts in advance, can Congress, without repudiation, refuse to appropriate money sufficient to make those contracts good?

Mr. CANNON. I repeat, Mr. Chairman, that each gentleman must make up his mind upon that question for himself. For my own part, where contracts are made, I shall cheerfully vote for appropriations; and where they have not been made, but where it is perfectly patent to Congress that they are to be made, in my judgment the appropriations ought to be made. In my judgment the appropriation should be made. There is a way now to stop all these expenditures where contracts have not been made—that is, to repeal the law. I think that probably a proposition to repeal the law would not receive the hilarious support of a great majority of the House. [Laughter.] But I want to tell gentlemen just how they could practically get at this matter. During the whole of to-day we have had words, words, words; and I guess I have furnished my part of them for the amusement of the House, possibly more than its instruction. The practical way to get rid of all this river and harbor authorization where contracts have not been made is to repeal the law.

Mr. BOATNER. Does the gentleman think that the contract system has worked badly?

Mr. CANNON. I have not said so.

Mr. BOATNER. Does the gentleman think that it ought to be repealed?

Mr. CANNON. I think the contract system has worked well. I think it has procured cheaper service for the United States. Take the great harbor of Galveston, where you now have a depth of water, I believe, of almost 30 feet.

Mr. SAYERS. Twenty-five feet and over.

Mr. CANNON. Twenty-five feet and over; and the jetties are not quite complete. On that great improvement, costing, I believe, something like $5,000,000 under the continuous-contract system and furnishing a great seaport for the Gulf Coast, the money has been, in my judgment, profitably and economically expended under the continuous-contract system. So on the Great Lakes, the improvements at the Sault Ste. Marie, and various other great improvements. I would not abandon the contract system unless I abandoned river and harbor appropriations altogether. I do not want to go back to the old system. Gentlemen who did me the honor when I first addressed the House this morning to follow what I had to say will recollect that my criticisms were not so much upon the items of the bill—some of them are subject to criticism, but upon the whole they are better than those of most river and harbor bills—but my criticism went to the appropriation and authorization of $70,000,000 last session of Congress by the river and harbor act, when the Government is running almost that much of a deficiency. That was the purport of my criticism. But Congress has entered upon this policy, and unless you have the courage to repeal the laws which authorize these river and harbor improvements it necessarily follows that these appropriations will have to be made.

I will say only one word further. I hope that if this bill is to be considered under the five-minute rule until completed, we shall have prompt attention in the Committee of the Whole and shall press the bill to the earliest possible completion. I doubt whether when the bill is completed any item that is now in it will be out. It may be that some items not now in it will be included.

This is the 13th day of the month—almost the middle. Other appropriation bills are to follow this. In my judgment it would be well, if it were in our power, to send this bill to the Senate on Monday next. In my judgment it would be quite proper to pass it under a suspension of the rules. I do not know what the temper of the House may be. I shall try to ascertain that; and if the judgment of any considerable number or anything like a majority of the House is against a suspension of the rules, I should not feel warranted in asking recognition for such a motion.

Mr. SIMPKINS. Is it not a fact that, although the President of the United States vetoed the river and harbor bill last session, he distinctly approved of the particular feature under which these appropriations are being made? That is to say, did he not approve distinctly and specifically the continuing-contract system of appropriation?

Mr. CANNON. I do not recollect how that is.

Mr. DOCKERY. No; he distinctly disapproved the continuous-contract system.

Mr. CANNON. I do not recollect how that may have been.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in the absence of further query, I will move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly arose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HULL reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 10292) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bill and joint resolution of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

Joint resolution (S. R. 204) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to transport contributions for the relief of the suffering poor of India; and

A bill (S. 3513) to authorize the appointment of an additional judge of the United States court in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2, of Rule XXIV, the following Senate bills were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A bill (S. 3513) to authorize the appointment of an additional judge of the United States court in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. HAGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolutions of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 8672) conferring jurisdiction upon the supreme court of the District of Columbia having general equity jurisdiction, to decree the sale, lease, or surrender of any lease of real estate in said District belonging to insane persons, for purpose of reinvestment, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 6713) to extend North Capitol street northward through the property of the Prospect Hill Cemetery, to pay for land to be taken for such purpose, and for other purposes; and

Joint resolution (H. Res. 237) to furnish the daily CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to members of the press, etc.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. MAHON, by unanimous consent, obtained leave of absence for four days, on account of important business.

JOHN H. LANEY.

Mr. CROWTHER. I ask unanimous consent that a bill now on the Calendar, House bill No. 9763, granting a pension to John H. Laney, be recommitted to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

And then, on motion of Mr. CANNON (at 5 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination and survey of Marblehead Harbor, Massachusetts—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the president of the Columbia Railway Company, of the District of Columbia, transmitting the annual report for the year ended December 31, 1896, together with a list of the stockholders of the company—to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination of Homochitto River, Mississippi—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

SENATE.

MONDAY, February 15, 1897.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last, when, on motion of Mr. GALLINGER, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

LEGATION BUILDINGS ABROAD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of State, transmitting for the information of the Senate a memorandum showing the estimated cost of official residences of ambassadors and ministers of the United States at the capitals of the more important countries with which this Government maintains diplomatic relations, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented a petition of the legislative assembly of New Mexico, praying that a protective tariff be placed on all wools imported into the United States sufficient in amount and so regulated as to afford the American woolgrowers the protection necessary to preserve the industry; which was referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Your memorialist, the legislative assembly of the Territory of New Mexico, in its thirty-second session assembled, would most earnestly and respectfully urge the placing of a protective tariff on all wools imported in the United States sufficient in amount and so regulated as to afford the American woolgrowers the protection necessary to preserve this great industry and to render woolgrowing remunerative to the sheep owner.

We earnestly request that such inferior articles as waste and shoddy, used as adulterants of wool, be excluded by duty on such articles equivalent to the duty on the best and highest quality of wool of similar condition.

And your memorialists will as in duty bound ever pray, and so forth: and,

Be it resolved, That the secretary of the Territory be, and he is hereby, directed to send a copy of this memorial to each the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to Hon. THOMAS B. CATRON, Delegate in Congress for New Mexico, at Washington, D. C.

W. H. H. LLEWELLYN,
Speaker of the House.
W. C. REID,
Chief Clerk of the House.
ANTONIO JOSEPH,
President of the Council.
H. B. HOLT,
Chief Clerk of the Council.

Approved February 9, 1897.

W. T. THORNTON,
Governor.

[Indorsed.]

Filed in office of secretary Territory of New Mexico February 9, 1897.
LORION MILLER, Secretary.

TERRITORY OF NEW MEXICO, Office of Secretary, ss:

I have compared the preceding copy of substitute for C. J. M., No. 2, of laws of 1897 of the Thirty-second legislative assembly of New Mexico, it being a memorial to the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, with the original thereof on file in this office, and I hereby certify the same to be a correct transcript therefrom and of the whole thereof.

Witness my hand and the seal of the secretary of the Territory, at Santa Fe, the 9th day of February, 1897.

[SEAL.]

LORION MILLER.
Secretary of New Mexico.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented a memorial of the legislative assembly of New Mexico, remonstrating against the passage of the so-called Avery bill, to validate certain outstanding militia warrants against that Territory; which was referred to the Committee on Territories, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Joint memorial.

Whereas there is a large alleged and fraudulent indebtedness known as the "militia warrants" in the Territory of New Mexico; and

Whereas there is now pending in Congress of the United States a bill known as the "Avery bill," for the purpose of validating and legalizing said indebtedness and imposing payment of the same upon the Territory of New Mexico: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the legislative assembly of the Territory of New Mexico, That the Congress of the United States be, and is hereby, earnestly requested to defeat the passage of said bill No. —, for the reason that the passage or enactment of said bill into a law would impose a fraudulent and an unjust indebtedness upon the Territory of New Mexico, and would increase the influential burden of said Territory fraudulently and unjustly; and

Be it further resolved, That the chief clerks of the council and the house of representatives of the legislative assembly of the Territory of New Mexico are hereby directed to transmit to the President of the United States, to the House of Representatives, and to the Senate of the United States a certified copy of this joint memorial as soon as the same is passed by this legislative assembly and properly signed by the president of the council and the speaker of the house and the said chief clerks of the council and house, respectively.

We, the undersigned, president and chief clerk of the council and the speaker and chief clerk of the house of representatives of the Thirty-second legislative assembly of the Territory of New Mexico, do hereby certify that the above and foregoing is a full, true, and correct copy of a joint memorial passed by the respective houses of said legislative assembly.

In witness whereof we have hereunto set our respective hands and seals this 11th day of February, A. D. 1897.

ANTONIO JOSEPH.
President of the Council.
H. B. HOLT.
Chief Clerk of the Council.
W. H. H. LLEWELLYN.
Speaker of the House of Representatives.
W. C. REID,
Chief Clerk of the House of Representatives.

He also presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of South Dakota, praying for the enactment of legislation to raise the age of consent to 18 years in the District of Columbia and the Territories; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. MORRILL. I present a petition of sundry American citizens, officers of Polish-American organizations and representatives of the Polish-American press of the United States, praying Congress to amend the bill to regulate immigration so that it will not exclude Poles from admission into this country. As the bill on this subject has already been reported, I move that the petition lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS presented a petition of the legislature of Minnesota, praying for the passage of House bill No. 1, relating to the classification and compensation of clerks in the United States Railway Mail Service; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A bill for a joint resolution praying Congress to pass H. R. bill No. 1, relating to the classification and compensation of clerks in the United States Railway Mail Service.

Be it enacted by the legislature of the State of Minnesota, That whereas the United States Railway Mail Service is of inestimable value and increasing importance to all classes of our citizens, and especially to the business classes; and

Whereas it appearing that this branch of the Post-Office Department has not been reorganized nor the clerks reclassified since the year 1882, since which time the mail handled has vastly increased, both in volume and importance, making the service required of its employees arduous and exacting, calling for ability and sacrifice demanded in no other branch of the Government service; and

Whereas according to reports of the Post-Office Department clerks on through runs can stand the physical and mental strain of the work but fifteen years on an average; and

Whereas the continued improvements in the service demand additional requirements in the employees; and

Whereas a bill having been introduced into Congress, in behalf of the National Association of Railway Postal Clerks, which provides for a reclassification of railway postal clerks, and said bill having been indorsed by the honorable Postmaster-General, and reported upon favorably by the House Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads: Therefore

Be it resolved, That the legislature of the State of Minnesota does indorse said bill, which bears title as H. R. bill No. 1, and petition our Senators and Representatives in Congress to vote for and by all just means in their power endeavor to secure the passage of said bill; and

Resolved, That a copy of the foregoing preamble and resolution be immediately transmitted to our Senators and Representatives in Congress from this State.

STATE OF MINNESOTA, Department of State:

I, Albert Berg, secretary of state of the State of Minnesota, do hereby certify that I have compared the annexed copy with the original joint resolution in my office, Senate file No. 71, being a joint resolution praying Congress to pass H. R. bill No. 1, said Senate file No. 71 duly approved February 11, 1897, and that said copy is a true and correct transcript of said original resolution, and of the whole thereof.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State at the capitol, in St. Paul, this 11th day of February, A. D. 1897.

ALBERT BERG, Secretary of State.

Mr. DAVIS presented a petition of the Minnesota State Historical Society, praying that the frigate Constitution be restored, and that she be removed from Kittery, Me., to Washington, D. C., or Annapolis, Md.; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. ROACH presented a petition of the legislature of North Dakota, praying for the enactment of legislation to reclassify and prescribe the salaries of railway postal clerks; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A concurrent resolution for a memorial to Congress, praying for the passage of the bill (H. R.) to reclassify and presbribe the salaries of railway postal clerks.

Be it resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring), That the following memorial be presented to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

To the honorable the Congress of the United States:

Whereas the efficiency of the Railway Mail Service is of great interest and importance to all who have occasion to use the mail; and

Whereas there has not been a reorganization of the service within the past twenty-five years; and

Whereas there is, in consequence, great disparity in many cases between the value of the services rendered and the salaries paid therefor, particularly in view of the frequent accidents on railroads, subjecting railway postal clerks to fatal or serious injuries when passengers escape unharmed; and

Whereas the efficiency of the service would be greatly promoted by the payment of salaries commensurate with the value of the services rendered and the risks incurred: Therefore,

We, the representatives of the people of the State of North Dakota, in legislative assembly convened, do respectfully pray for the speedy passage by your honorable body of the bill (H. R. 1) to reclassify and prescribe the salaries of railway postal clerks, and we will ever pray, etc.

Be it further resolved, That copies of these resolutions, signed by the speaker of the house and the president of the senate, and attested by the chief clerk of the house and the secretary of the senate, be transmitted to Hon. HENRY C. HANSBROUGH and Hon. WILLIAM N. ROACH, representing this State in the Senate of the United States, and to Hon. MARTIN N. JOHNSON, representing this State in the United States House of Representatives.

E. A. WILLIAMS,
Speaker of the House.

STATE OF WYOMING,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, State of Wyoming, ss:

I, Charles W. Burdick, secretary of state of the State of Wyoming, do hereby certify that the annexed is a full, true, and correct copy of enrolled joint resolution No. 1, senate, State of Wyoming, passed by the Fourth legislature of the State of Wyoming.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State of Wyoming.

[SEAL.] CHARLES W. BURDICK,
Secretary of State.

Fourth legislature of the State of Wyoming. Enrolled joint resolution No. 1, senate, State of Wyoming.

Joint resolution and memorial to the Congress of the United States, praying for the ceding of all unoccupied public lands within the State of Wyoming to the control of the State.

Your memorialists, the Fourth legislature of the State of Wyoming, would most respectfully represent:

That all of the lands within the boundaries of the State of Wyoming are what is known as "arid" lands; the reclamation and settlement of these lands must be accomplished under different conditions from those confronting the settler in the humid portions of this country; that none of the lands now the property of the State can be sold for less than $10 per acre, which is the minimum price allowed by the terms of the act of admission and the State constitution, thus causing unfair competition with United States lands which are sold to settlers under the provisions of the several acts of Congress at prices ranging from 50 cents to $2 50 per acre.

Experience has demonstrated that the present land system is not suited to the conditions which prevail in this State, and as a result many obstacles are interposed to the development of the country.

The reclamation of the agricultural lands imposes upon the settler and upon the State labor and expense not incurred in the humid portions of the country; ditches must be constructed and the lands prepared for the application of water before there is any return to the farmer; in addition to this great labor and expense it is necessary for the State to exercise a supervision over them in order that just distribution of water may be made to those entitled to it.

Thus far the State has borne the entire expense of the investigation of its agricultural resources and the supervision of the public waters.

The efficiency of this work has been greatly impaired by reason of the inability of the State to assist in any way in the reclamation and settlement of the desirable lands or to restrict the diversion of water on the less desirable.

The importance of the pastoral interests of this State makes it desirable that provision be made for the utilization of the grazing land in connection with the contiguous irrigable areas. These grazing lands comprise the greater part of territorial extent.

None of the present land laws make adequate provision for securing possession or management of these lands. In our judgment it is impossible for Congress to pass a general law which will operate with equal justice and success on the arid belt as a whole. Conditions differ in different sections of the United States, and the people of each section are best calculated to determine the system best suited to their needs. We believe that by giving to the State full control over all classes of land the best results can be obtained.

If the State controlled the lands, it would be possible to connect water rights with land titles of all irrigable lands; that this is desirable is admitted by all familiar with the subject.

The results already achieved are a sufficient guaranty of what can be accomplished under more favorable conditions. Even with the imperfect means at hand the value of lands have not only been enhanced, but its productive capacity has been correspondingly augmented. Such results are of interest and value to the whole nation, and in our opinion entitles the State to generous recognition.

The water laws of this State have been highly recommended. The State constitution and statutes contain provisions requiring the inauguration of the most systematic and complete supervision of its public waters yet undertaken by any Commonwealth in this country.

It is only, however, by uniting the control of both water and land under one authority that our irrigation system can have the fullest measure of stability and success.

We believe that the control of this subject can wisely and safely be intrusted to the State, since the practical knowledge is almost wholly confined to those engaged in the work. By endowing the State with means and placing upon it the responsibility for the development of our resources, a great impulse will be given to the diffusion of intelligence on the subject and to local pride in the success of the undertaking. It will put the solution of this problem in the hands of the people best informed as to its details and most interested in its success.

Because of the facts hereinbefore detailed, your memorialists respectfully pray that Congress will, by suitable legislation, grant to the State of Wyoming the unoccupied and unappropriated public lands within said State.

Resolved, That the secretary of state be, and he is hereby, respectfully requested, on the approval of this memorial, to forward a duly authenticated copy thereof to the Senators and Representatives in Congress from this State, in order that the same may be brought to the attention of Congress.

GEORGE E. ABBOTT,
President of the Senate.

A. D. KELLEY,
Speaker of the House.

Approved February 8, A. D. 1897.

WM. A. RICHARDS, Governor.

Mr. CLARK presented a petition of the legislature of Wyoming, praying for the ratification of the treaty with the Shoshone and Arapahoe tribes of Indians; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE OF WYOMING,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, State of Wyoming, ss:

I, Charles W. Burdick, secretary of state of the State of Wyoming, do hereby certify that the annexed is a full, true, and correct copy of enrolled joint resolution No. 5, house of representatives, State of Wyoming, passed by the Fourth legislature of the State of Wyoming.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State of Wyoming.

Done at Cheyenne, the capital, this 11th day of February, A. D. 1897.

[SEAL.] CHARLES W. BURDICK,
Secretary of State.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION, NO. 5.

House of representatives, State of Wyoming. Joint memorial to Congress.

Your memorialists, the Fourth legislature of the State of Wyoming, respectfully represent:

That they believe it would be of great benefit to the people of the United States, as well as the people of Wyoming, if the treaty recently made between the United States and the Shoshone and Arapahoe tribes of Indians, whereby said tribes agreed, in consideration of the sum of sixty ($60,000) thousand dollars, to cede to the United States Government a tract of land 10 miles square, situated in the northeast corner of the Wind River or Shoshone Indian Reservation, upon which are the famous Big Horn Medical Springs, were ratified, for the following reasons:

First. Owing to a tribal superstition said springs are never used or frequented by the Indians.

Second. Being on the reservation, no adequate accommodation can be furnished the people who flock there for relief.

Third. If the tract is ceded to the Government, ample accommodations for invalids and visitors will be at once provided, a railroad will certainly be built, and their cession to the United States would result in a great good to afflicted people everywhere.

Fourth. The springs cover a large tract of land and are possessed of the most marvelous curative properties of any waters of the known world. Though remote from railroad transportation, they were visited by nearly 400 afflicted people the past summer, all of whom were either cured or greatly benefited and, without other accommodations than that furnished by tents, at this time no less than sixty people are there, bearing the storms of winter, bathing in the waters.

Therefore your memorialists would most respectfully urge Congress to give the matter of the ratification of said treaty, and the appropriation therefor, immediate and favorable consideration, to the end that afflicted humanity everywhere may have the benefit of this wonderful provision of nature to cure their ills and heal their diseases. And your memorialists will ever pray, etc.

Resolved, That an authenticated copy of this memorial be forwarded by the secretary of state to each Senator and to the Representative in Congress from this State, and they are hereby respectfully requested to bring the matter to the attention of Congress and to use every honorable means to secure favorable action thereon.

GEORGE E. ABBOTT,
President of the Senate.
A. D. KELLEY,
Speaker of the House.

Approved February 8, A. D. 1897.

WM. A. RICHARDS.

Mr. PERKINS presented a joint resolution of the legislature of California, urging attention to the necessity of protecting the asphalt interests of the United States by a suitable tariff; which was referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate joint resolution No. 8. Introduced by Senator Androus, January 15, 1897. Referred to committee on Federal relations.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION NO. 8.

Whereas the asphalt business of the United States is becoming one of the important industries of the country and the improvement of streets and highways of the greatest importance to the public health and comfort: and

Whereas the asphalt used in such improvements is obtained principally from foreign lands, amounting approximately to 100,000 tons per annum, paying to foreign countries large royalties and export charges: and

Whereas within the confines of the United States, and particularly in the State of California, there exist inexhaustible deposits of asphalt of the highest quality, and if protection is given to this domestic industry it may be developed to such an extent as to supply a large amount of the asphalt used within the United States: Therefore

Be it resolved by the senate (the assembly concurring), That our Senators be instructed and our Representatives be earnestly requested to use their best endeavors to have adequate protection to the asphalt interests inserted in the new tariff bill now being prepared, and that the secretary of the senate be, and he is hereby, instructed to transmit to our Senators, Representatives, and Representatives elect a copy of these resolutions.

Mr. PERKINS presented a joint resolution of the legislature of California, relative to foreign immigration and the proper restriction thereof; which was ordered to lie on the table, and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate joint resolution No. 10, introduced by Senator Bulla, January 20, 1897.

Read and adopted.

Senate joint resolution relating to foreign immigration and proper restriction thereof.

Whereas immigration to the United States of the illiterate, pauper, and criminal classes of other countries has grown to such proportions as to seriously endanger the interests of our people and even threaten the perpetuity of our institutions; and

Whereas there is now pending in Congress proposed legislation for the correction of this rapidly growing evil: Now, therefore,

Be it resolved by the senate (the assembly concurring), That our Senators in Congress be instructed, and our Representatives be earnestly requested, to vote for and use all honorable means to secure the passage of such pending measures as they deem best fitted to secure proper and sufficient restriction of foreign immigration, to the end that the interest of our people shall be adequately protected and the blessings of free government maintained and assured.

Barnett, of Belleville; of Rev. W. H. Lehmann and sundry other ministers, of Lima; of 21 citizens of Stryker; of Edwin P. Thomson, of Springfield; of 23 citizens of Cleveland; of 4 citizens of Waverly, and of 4 citizens of Toledo, all in the State of Ohio, praying for the enactment of legislation prohibiting the sale of railroad tickets by unauthorized persons; which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a petition of 14 citizens of Youngstown, Ohio, praying for the enactment of legislation prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors in the Capitol building; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Troy, Ohio, praying for the ratification of the pending arbitration treaty with Great Britain; for the prohibition of the sale of intoxicating liquors in the Capitol building, and for the passage of the so-called Loud bill, relating to second-class mail matter; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented petitions of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Cedarville; of the Vindicator Printing Company, publishers of the Youngstown Vindicator, of Youngstown; of William F. Maag, publisher of the Rundschau, of Youngstown; of F. T. Lane, publisher of the Toledo Blade, of Toledo; of W. H. Gate, publisher of the Ashland Press, of Ashland, and of the Sun Publishing Company, publishers of the Morning Sun, of Springfield, all in the State of Ohio, praying for the passage of the so-called Loud bill, relating to second-class mail matter; which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. VILAS presented petitions of members of the Congregational Church of Menasha; of Charles Boucher and 9 other citizens of Fond du Lac; of W. C. Whitford and 25 other citizens of Milton; of F. F. Frawley and sundry other citizens of Eau Claire; of William E. Plummer and sundry other citizens of Durand; of T. H. Rumsey and sundry other citizens of Berlin; of H. T. Bueller and sundry other citizens; of H. E. Knapp and 39 other citizens; of W. H. Iliff and 25 other citizens of Fond du Lac; of W. W. Stevens and 12 other citizens of Fort Atkinson, and of W. T. Pinkerton and 31 other citizens of Mazomanie, all in the State of Wisconsin, praying for the passage of the antirailroad ticket scalping bill; which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented the petitions of J. C. Wilmarth, publisher of the Gazette, of Janesville; of Ellis B. Usher, publisher of the Chronicle, of La Crosse, and of Ryan & Bro., publishers of the Evening Crescent, of Appleton, all in the State of Wisconsin; and the petition of William P. Thompson and 11 other citizens of Philadelphia, Pa., praying for the passage of House bill No. 4566, to amend the postal laws relating to second-class mail matter; which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented the petitions of William Gill, of Roberts; of William W. Sleeper, of Beloit; A. E. Smith, of Richland Center; F. Osterheld, of Stoughton; the Pilgrim Congregational Church, of Milwaukee; Alexander E. Matheson and Harry Morris, of Racine; the Methodist Episcopal Church, of Columbus; the board of trustees of Beloit College, Beloit; Alfred S. Badger, of Stevens Point; R. L. Adams, of Omro; the Presbyterian Church of Omro, and Rev. Lucius Smith and 26 other citizens of Darlington, all in the State of Wisconsin; the Evangelical Alliance for the United States of America, and the New York Yearly Meeting of the Religious Society of Friends (Orthodox) of New York, praying for the ratification of the pending arbitration treaty with Great Britain; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CALL presented a petition numerously signed by citizens of Florida, praying for the establishment of a life-saving station on the Atlantic coast opposite Daytona in that State, or in the immediate vicinity; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. GIBSON. I am directed by the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10122) to amend an act entitled "An act to prohibit the interment of bodies in Graceland Cemetery, in the District of Columbia," passed August 3, 1894, to report it without amendment. I ask that it may take the place on the Calendar of No. 1498, being the bill (S. 3602) to amend an act entitled "An act to prohibit the interment of bodies in Graceland Cemetery, in the District of Columbia," approved August 3, 1894, and that the latter bill may be postponed indefinitely.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, it will be so ordered.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3072) to prevent the spread of contagious diseases in the District of Columbia, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. FAULKNER, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9842) relating to the adulteration of foods and drugs in the District of Columbia, reported in with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3575) to regulate the sale of poisons in the District of Columbia, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9142) to regulate privies in the District of Columbia, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9023) to prevent the spread of contagious diseases in the District of Columbia, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9099) for the regulation of cemeteries and the disposal of dead bodies in the District of Columbia, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent to make a single observation concerning the bills which I have just reported.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. GALLINGER. They are four important bills that relate to the health of the District, and I will say that there are on the Calendar at the present time two or three somewhat similar bills. I trust that, notwithstanding we are apparently blocked in the matter of legislation, there may be some way devised to enable the Committee on the District of Columbia to secure the consideration of these bills. I will say to the members of the Committee on Appropriations, which committee will have the right of way very soon, that I am quite sure the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia will confer with them with a view of getting a day for the purpose of clearing the Calendar of these very important bills regarding the health of the District, in which we are all so much interested.

Mr. GEAR, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3608) setting apart a plot of ground in the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia, for memorial purposes, under the auspices of the National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. HANSBROUGH, from the Committee on the Library, reported an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HAWLEY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported an amendment to the bill (S. 2202) to reorganize the line of the Army, etc., and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

PREVENTION OF FOREST FIRES.

Mr. DUBOIS. I am instructed by the Committee on Public Lands to report favorably the bill (H. R. 9123) to prevent forest fires on the public domain. I ask that it may be put upon its passage. There will be no objection to it. It is a very short bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill, which will be read for information.

The bill was read, and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLIARD TABLES IN THE DISTRICT.

Mr. WETMORE. I move that the bill (S. 1232) to license billiard tables, and for other purposes, now on the Calendar and reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments on the 11th of February, 1896, be indefinitely postponed, as a House bill relating to the same subject is now in conference.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be postponed indefinitely.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. QUAY introduced a bill (S. 3690) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a steel bridge over the St. Louis River between the States of Wisconsin and Minnesota," approved April 24, 1894, as amended by an act approved August 4, 1894, entitled "An act to amend an act to authorize the construction of a steel bridge over the St. Louis River between the States of Minnesota and Wisconsin;" which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BURROWS introduced a bill (S. 3691) for the relief of Catherine Holland; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3692) granting a pension to Marvin Older; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3693) granting a pension to Catharine Kelley, widow of John Kelley; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3694) granting a pension to Irene M. Chase, dependent sister of Abner W. Chase; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. THURSTON introduced a bill (S. 3695) granting a pension to Robert W. Oliver; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3696) granting a pension to Mary A. Arnold, of Omaha, Nebr.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3697) granting a pension to Michael Evans, of Decatur, Nebr.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PLATT introduced a bill (S. 3698) appointing commissioners to revise the statutes relating to patents, trades, and other marks; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Patents.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. MCMILLAN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the District appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WILSON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the District of Columbia appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CHANDLER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the District of Columbia appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HAWLEY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the fortifications appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GRAY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PERKINS submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SMITH submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on the Library, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. TELLER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the fortifications appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MARTIN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CAMERON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SHERMAN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. QUAY, it was Ordered, That David S. Taylor be granted leave to withdraw from the files of the Senate the papers submitted by him in support of the bill restoring him to the pension rolls.

AMERICAN INSURANCE COMPANIES.

Mr. DAVIS submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the President be, and he is hereby, requested, if not incompatible with the public interest, to transmit to the Senate copies of all correspondence of the Department of State with the German Empire with reference to American insurance companies.

THE CLAYTON-BULWER TREATY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a joint resolution introduced by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], which will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

A joint resolution (S. R. 206) declaring the Clayton-Bulwer treaty abrogated.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the treaty, known as the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, between Great Britain and the United States, which was concluded on the 19th day of April, 1850, is hereby declared to be abrogated.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President——

Mr. CULLOM. Unless the Senator from Alabama is anxious to go on this morning, I should like very much to submit a report from the conferees of the two Houses on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill. It has been delayed on account of the illness of one of the members of the conference on the part of the House. We have been awaiting his recovery. I have now the report ready to be acted upon by the Senate, and I should be very glad to dispose of it, because the time is getting short.

Mr. MORGAN. I must claim the courtesy of the Senator from Illinois this morning for a short time, that I may present the views I entertain in regard to the necessity of passing the joint resolution. I will not keep the floor long.

Mr. CULLOM. I do not care to disturb the Senator from Alabama if he is anxious to go on, but I should like to have the conference report disposed of.

Mr. CHANDLER. I will say to the Senator from Alabama that I gave notice that I should like to submit some remarks this morning. I am very anxious to go on, too.

Mr. MORGAN. All the Senators here who have morning business or business to be transacted in the morning hour will probably have full opportunity after the very brief remarks which I propose to make on the joint resolution.

Mr. CULLOM. I do not feel like interfering with the Senator from Alabama, although the appropriation bills have the right of way ordinarily. I feel that almost everything ought to give way to the appropriation bills now, as it is getting so late in the session, in order to secure their final disposition.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, we are engaged, as the world knows——

Mr. ALLEN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. ALLEN. I introduced a resolution on Saturday last which, under objection, went over until this morning. I desire to know if that resolution does not have precedence of the one now before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair has upon his desk the resolution submitted by the Senator from Nebraska. The joint resolution laid before the Senate has precedence in point of time. The Senator from Alabama is recognized.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, the world knows that we are engaged now——

Mr. SHERMAN. I rise to a point of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Alabama will suspend. The Senator from Ohio will state his point of order.

Mr. SHERMAN. I raise the point of order that a resolution to repeal a treaty or any law must be a joint resolution, and a joint resolution can not be brought up in the morning hour, postponing all the other business of the Senate. I raise the question of order that if it is a joint resolution its consideration must be moved; there must be a motion to take it up, which must be decided without debate. I do not like to interfere with my friend the Senator from Alabama.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair requests Senators to refrain from conversation. The remarks of Senators can not be heard at the desk. The Senator from Ohio will please state his point of order again.

Mr. SHERMAN. My point of order is that this is necessarily a joint resolution, which must be taken up or not taken up without debate, on motion, if objection is made. I object to its being taken up.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask leave, then, to submit a conference report.

Mr. MORGAN. I do not think any Senator has a right to take me off the floor, even to make a conference report.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will sustain the point of order made by the Senator from Ohio. That is the first thing before the Senate.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Chair kindly allow the joint resolution to be again read?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again read the joint resolution.

The Secretary again read the joint resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. This is a joint resolution. The Chair sustains the point of order made by the Senator from Ohio, and recognizes the Senator from Alabama to make a motion, if he so desires, to proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. MORGAN. I appeal from the decision of the Chair first. I desire to debate that appeal.

The friends of peace in the United States, Mr. President, are——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Alabama will suspend for a moment. The question before the Senate is upon the appeal taken by the Senator from Alabama from the decision of the Chair sustaining the point of order made by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. MORGAN. The friends of peace in the United States——

Mr. SHERMAN. Is that question debatable? If it is, that is the end of the rule of the Senate.

Mr. MORGAN. Oh, yes; it is debatable.

Mr. SHERMAN. I raise the point of order that it is not debatable.

Mr. MORGAN. It is debatable. The Senator must have forgotten what the rules are.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair decides that the appeal from the decision of the Chair is not debatable, and the Chair submits to the Senate the question, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President——

Mr. SHERMAN. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MORGAN. Whenever a matter of this kind is submitted to the Senate I think it becomes debatable.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks that the appeal from the decision of the Chair in this case is not debatable. The Chair submits to the Senate the appeal of the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. MORGAN. That makes it debatable.

Mr. SHERMAN. Not at all.

Mr. MORGAN. That makes it debatable.

Mr. QUAY. It seems to me the Senator from Alabama ought to be allowed to proceed in this case by unanimous consent, and I make that suggestion to the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is another question. The Chair submits to the Senate the request of the Senator from Pennsylvania that the Senator from Alabama be permitted by unanimous consent to debate the appeal taken from the decision of the Chair. Is there objection?

Mr. SHERMAN. I object, Mr. President. Let us go on with the regular order of business.

Mr. FAULKNER. I hope the Senator from Ohio will not object. I can not understand why this is not a debatable question. An appeal from the decision of the Chair on any question of this sort certainly is debatable when submitted to the Senate.

Mr. MORGAN. There is no question in the world about it. It has always been ruled that way. I am willing to stand here and be victimized by the Chair and the Senator from Ohio upon this question; I am willing to take it; but they will not escape this question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair states that he has no disposition to victimize the Senator from Alabama. There is no occasion for his remarks.

Mr. MORGAN. The rulings have always been the other way.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair has decided the point of order raised. This is not a debatable question.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair submits to the Senate the request of the Senator from Pennsylvania that the Senator from Alabama be permitted to debate the pending joint resolution. Is there objection?

Mr. SHERMAN. I object.

Mr. CHANDLER. I desire to submit a request for unanimous consent that the Senator from Alabama be permitted to withdraw his appeal and proceed with his remarks.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. SHERMAN. I object. I insist upon the regular order. I do not think it is within our rule. But I will not debate the matter, because it is not a debatable question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is interposed.

Mr. MORGAN. I submit a motion to proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution, on which I ask for the yeas and nays.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senator please state his motion so that the Chair can hear it distinctly?

Mr. MORGAN. I submit a motion to proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama withdraw the appeal? The appeal is pending now.

Mr. MORGAN. If I have no right to debate it, there is no use for me to say anything about it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Unless the appeal is withdrawn, the Chair must submit it to the Senate. The Chair submits to the Senator whether he will withdraw the appeal.

Mr. MORGAN. I withdraw it, not because I believe my position is incorrect, but I withdraw it——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The appeal is withdrawn. The Chair submits to the Senate the motion of the Senator from Alabama, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution. [Putting the question.] The ayes seem to have it.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The yeas and nays are demanded.

Mr. MORGAN. No; I beg pardon. I withdraw the call, the Chair having announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. SHERMAN. We may as well have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS]. I do not know how he would vote on this question.

Mr. FRYE (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN].

Mr. GEAR (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON].

Mr. McBRIDE (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE]. I do not know how he would vote on this question, and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. MORRILL (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS], and therefore withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. DANIEL. I beg leave to state that I am paired with the Senator from Washington [Mr. SQUIRE].

The result was announced—yeas 32, nays 31; as follows:

YEAS—32.

Allen,	Cameron,	Murphy,	Smith,
Bacon,	Chilton,	Pasco,	Stewart,
Bate,	Gallinger,	Peffer,	Tillman,
Berry,	Gibson,	Pettigrew,	Turpie,
Blackburn,	Gorman,	Pritchard,	Vest,
Blanchard,	Hansbrough,	Pugh,	Voorhees,
Brown,	Mills,	Quay,	Walthall,
Call,	Morgan,	Roach,	White.

NAYS—31.

Baker,	Gray,	Mantle,	Sewell,
Burrows,	Hawley,	Martin,	Sherman,
Caffery,	Hill,	Mitchell, Wis.	Shoup,
Cannon,	Hoar,	Nelson,	Thurston,
Carter,	Irby,	Palmer,	Vilas,
Chandler,	Lindsay,	Perkins,	Wetmore,
Cullom,	Lodge,	Platt,	Wilson.

Brice,	Faulkner,	Jones, Ark.	Squire,
Butler,	Frye,	Jones, Nev.	Teller,
Clark,	Gear,	Kenney,	Warren,
Cockrell,	George,	Kyle,	Wolcott.
Daniel,	Gordon,	McBride,

So the motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

Mr. HOAR. Let the joint resolution be read.

The Secretary again read the joint resolution.

Mr. HOAR. I suggest that under the rule the matter ought to be dealt with in executive session.

Mr. PLATT. It requires secrecy.

Mr. HOAR. It requires secrecy.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senate will be in order. The Senator from Massachusetts will state his motion.

Mr. HOAR. I suggest that under the rule the matter is one that requires secrecy.

Mr. SHERMAN. I second the motion.

Mr. MORGAN. That is not an executive session.

Mr. HAWLEY. I second the motion. The motion requires a second.

Mr. MORGAN. It is to be a secret legislative session.

Mr. SHERMAN. The motion is that the doors be closed.

Mr. MORGAN. For a secret legislative session, not an executive session.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair was unable to hear the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. MORGAN. I say the motion is not in order if it is an executive session that is asked for. It is to be a secret legislative session.

Mr. PLATT and others. That is it.

Mr. MORGAN. That is what the Senator from Massachusetts desires, I suppose.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Under the rule, the motion having been seconded, the Sergeant-at-Arms will clear the galleries and close the doors.

The Senate, with closed doors, proceeded to consider the joint resolution; and, after debate, it was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Upon motion of Mr. TURPIE, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After two hours spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10134) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9966) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. WADSWORTH, Mr. HENRY of Connecticut, and Mr. CLARDY managers at the conference on the part of the House.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (H. R. 6713) to extend North Capitol street northward through the property of the Prospect Hill Cemetery, to pay for land to be taken for such purpose, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 8672) conferring jurisdiction upon the supreme court of the District of Columbia having general equity jurisdiction to decree the sale, lease, or surrender of any lease of real estate in said District, belonging to insane persons, for purpose of reinvestment, and for other purposes; and

A joint resolution (H. Res. 237) to furnish the daily CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to members of the press, etc.

UNIFORM SYSTEM OF BANKRUPTCY.

Mr. HOAR. I ask that the regular order be laid before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is House bill 8110.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 8110) to establish a uniform law on the subject of bankruptcies throughout the United States.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to have the bill read, but I shall not ask a vote upon it this afternoon.

Mr. CULLOM. It will take all the afternoon to read it.

Mr. HOAR. I wish to have it read now. I suppose the bill as it came from the House of Representatives should first be read, and then the amendments proposed by the Senate committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHANDLER in the chair). The bill will be read at length.

The Secretary proceeded to read the amendment submitted by the Committee on the Judiciary, to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and insert a substitute.

Mr. HOAR. That is not the House bill which is being read. I suppose the bill as it came from the House of Representatives should first be read through.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary is proceeding to read the amendment submitted by the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CULLOM. I think it is unnecessary to read the House bill. Let the substitute reported by the Senate committee in place of the original bill be read.

Mr. HOAR. But I understand it is necessary that the entire bill shall be read.

Mr. ALLISON. The very reverse of that is the custom of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. By unanimous consent, the reading will be confined to the proposed Senate amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. To the House bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. To the House bill.

Mr. HOAR. Very well; I have no choice.

Mr. TELLER. I suppose both the House bill and the substitute will have to be read. I do not suppose the matter can be disposed of by simply reading the substitute bill.

Mr. CULLOM. It frequently occurs, where a substitute is reported for another bill, that the substitute takes the place of the original bill and the substitute only is read.

Mr. ALLISON. But that must be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. CULLOM. Yes.

Mr. TELLER. The bill reported by the Senate committee does not meet the approval of some members of the committee, and I do not suppose they would wish to have the reading of the original bill omitted.

Mr. HOAR. There is a difference of opinion to be harmonized in order to determine whether the Senate substitute or the bill as it came from the House shall be passed.

Mr. ALLISON. Allow me to suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts that if any Senator requests the reading of the House bill, it will have to be read, as it has not yet been read; but, by unanimous consent, that can be dispensed with, and the amendment proposed by the Senate committee can be read.

Mr. HOAR. I have no objection to doing that.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope that will be done; and I ask unanimous consent that it may be done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the reading of the House bill be dispensed with, and that the reading of the proposed Senate substitute may now take place.

Mr. HOAR. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Iowa? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The Secretary read the amendment reported by the Committee on the Judiciary, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill, and in lieu thereof to insert:

That if any debtor owing $200 or more who is unable to pay his debts shall execute an assignment or cession of his property, valid by the laws of the State, Territory, or District of Columbia, in which he may reside, or if he have property in any other jurisdiction, then as to such property, valid according to the laws thereof, and also in accordance with the requirements of this act, it shall have the effect hereinafter provided for. Said assignment or cession shall be duly filed or recorded in the manner and in the offices wherein mortgages and deeds in trust on said property are by law required to be filed or recorded; and the original or a copy thereof shall, within thirty days from the date of its execution, be filed in the office of the court in which the petition of the debtor is hereinafter required to be filed.

SEC. 2. That such assignment shall convey all of the estate of the debtor, except such as is exempt by the law of his domicile from execution and liability for his debts, and shall be for the equal benefit of all his creditors, subject to all valid liens, except with the preference hereinafter allowed. It shall contain a list of the names and residences of all his creditors, and a schedule of his property exempt and unexempt from execution or seizure for his debts, and the amount due to each creditor, and a statement of the liens or other incumbrances upon his property, all of which shall be verified by the oath of the debtor to be correct, as near as he can make them.

Said assignment shall also contain a provision conveying all his unexempt property, though not specified in said schedule, and shall provide for all his creditors, whether named in the list or not; and the omission of any property or creditor from said list or schedule, or any misstatement as to liens and incumbrances, shall have no effect against the debtor's rights under this act, unless the same be fraudulent; but a creditor whose name has not been returned to the court prior to the decree of discharge of the debtor shall not be bound by such discharge. The property so assigned or surrendered shall be administered and distributed among creditors according to the laws of the State where the property is situated, subject to the provisions of this act.

SEC. 3. That such assignment shall contain the following preferences, namely: Debts due to the United States, or to any State or Territory, and the District of Columbia, in which any of the property of the debtor is situated, and debts due to the servants or laborers of the debtor for labor performed or services rendered within one year. Also, if the debtor be the head of a family, he may prefer a debt which is a lien or incumbrance on his homestead; but no more than $1,000 shall be used for that purpose.

SEC. 4. That the fees to be allowed by said assignment to the trustee or trustees, or the person managing the estate, shall not exceed in any case the amount allowed by the laws of the State in which the debtor is domiciled to executors or administrators for the settling of the decedent's estate in their charge; and should any trustee or other person named in said assignment or by a competent court as manager of the said estate be removed or resigned, so that it shall be necessary to appoint another person in his stead, then the fees and allowances shall be divided between them, so that not more than the maximum allowable to one shall be allowed to all.

SEC. 5. That any such debtor, within the period of thirty days from the date of the execution of the assignment, may file his petition in the district court of the United States for the district or the division thereof in which he resides; or if he be a resident of the District of Columbia, then in the supreme court of the said District; or if he be a resident of a Territory, then in the district court of such Territory of the district in which he resides, asking for a discharge from his debts; but the petition shall not be filed in any court unless the debtor has resided in said district or division at least six calendar months immediately preceding the making of the assignment. The petition shall state the debtor's inability to pay his debts and contain a prayer for a discharge from the debts of the petitioner and an averment that the list and schedule filed in the court are correct as therein amended, and shall be verified by the oath of the petitioner. It shall also contain a schedule and list of any other property or creditors which he may have since the making of the assignment discovered or remembered; and said petitioner may, from time to time, prior to his discharge, amend and correct said list and schedule of property and creditors, so that the same shall conform to the facts. And he shall deposit with his petition for costs such sum as the court may direct, not exceeding $20.

SEC. 6. That the creditors of the petitioner shall be made parties defendant, and the judge shall, on filing the petition, or as soon thereafter as practicable, make an order declaring the petitioner a bankrupt, and fixing a time and place for the hearing thereof, and directing notice to be given, which time shall be not less than ninety days nor more than six calendar months subsequent to the date of the order, and a copy of such order shall be duly served on each of the creditors named in the list of creditors or otherwise made known to the court, in the manner following: The service of notice of said order shall be made by mailing a copy of the order to each creditor, directed to the post-office nearest to his residence or place of business or to the post-office at which he is accustomed to receive his letters. The notice shall be mailed within thirty days from the date of the order by the clerk of the court, and the petitioner shall pay to the clerk for mailing the notice such reasonable sum as the court may allow, not exceeding 25 cents for each notice. The said order shall also be published once a week for four consecutive weeks in one or more newspapers, to be designated by the court, due regard being had to the general circulation of the same in that portion of the district in which the bankrupt and his creditors reside. The first publication shall be within thirty days from the date of said order. If the publication of notice shall appear to be irregular, the court may order a new publication for such time as the court may decide, and appoint another day for the hearing. But publication in a newspaper shall be dispensed with unless it can be made for such cost as the court shall decide to be reasonable.

SEC. 7. That the creditors, or any of them, may appear and answer said petition on the day named in the order of publication, and if no answer be filed on that day the petitioner shall have a right to an order of discharge from his debts. The answer may contest the petitioner's right to a discharge on the following grounds, and no other:

First. That the debtor has intentionally concealed some of his property by omitting the same from his schedule or assignment, and has also intentionally failed to correct said omission as hereinbefore provided for, or has intentionally refused to give information which may aid and assist in recovering any property which ought to be subject to the payment of his debts.

Second. That he has, since the date of three calendar months prior to the passage of this act, conveyed or assigned or concealed his property, or some part of it, or given or suffered a lien or incumbrance thereon, which assignment, conveyance, concealment, lien, or incumbrance was contrived and devised with the actual intent and purpose to defraud his creditors, in which intent the debtor participated.

Third. That the debtor, being a banker, broker, merchant, trader, manufacturer, or miner, in addition to the foregoing grounds, shall be refused a discharge if, since said date, he, being at the time insolvent, has given any preference to creditors other than such as are allowed to be preferred in the assignment as provided in section 3 of this act, or since said date has, with intent to give such prohibited preference, created or suffered any lien on his property by attachment, judgment, or otherwise. Should a discharge be refused, the same proceedings shall be had in the administration and distribution of the bankrupt's estate as if he were discharged.

SEC. 8. That all preferences by any merchant, broker, banker, trader, manufacturer, or miner given or suffered after the passage of this act and within four months prior to the assignment by the petitioner, he being then insolvent, other than such preferences to creditors as are herein allowed, are hereby made illegal and void as against the creditors of any debtor who shall make an assignment and file his petition under the provisions of this act; and all the money or other property which may have been given or transferred in such prohibited preferences shall be and remain a part of the assets of the said petitioner and shall pass under the general clause conveying all the debtor's unexempt property by this act required to be inserted in said assignment; and all conveyances or transfers of property made at any time by any petitioner, which by the laws of the State or Territory in which the property is situated are illegal and void or voidable by creditors, or if the transfer be of money, then void or voidable by the law of the State or Territory in which the debtor resides, and all liens or other interest in said property which are prohibited by the laws of a State or Territory wherein it is situated, shall be held for all the purposes of this act to be void or voidable by creditors and the property to have passed under said assignment, and it shall be distributed as other property conveyed in the same; and full recovery may be had of the said property so assigned or encumbered within the period allowed by the laws of the State or Territory in which it is situated, or if the property be money, then within the time allowed by the laws of the State or Territory where the receiver resides, and suits in behalf of the creditors for such recovery may be brought by the trustee or other manager of the assignment.

SEC. 9. That if on the hearing of the petition it shall appear that the assignment provided for in the first and second sections of this act has been duly made and filed and recorded as herein provided for, and no valid objection has been presented against a discharge, or, being presented, the same is not sustained by proof, then it shall be the duty of the court to grant to the petitioner a discharge from all his debts to the persons mentioned in his petition, or afterwards disclosed to the court, except the debts excluded by section 10 of this act. But said discharge shall not have the effect in any court to prevent a recovery, by proper proceedings against the property and the persons claiming and possessing the same, of any property which had been prior to the discharge fraudulently or illegally assigned or concealed or encumbered by such debtor, or omitted from his schedule, within such limitation as to time for bringing such suits as is fixed by the laws of the State in which the property is situated. The declaration of the petitioner as a bankrupt shall have the effect, in all courts in which proceedings may be had to subject such property to the payment of the bankrupt's debts, of dispensing with a judgment against the bankrupt as a prerequisite to such proceedings.

SEC. 10. That the discharge of the debtor from his debts shall not include any debt or obligation which shall have been created in consequence of his defalcation as a public officer, or as an executor, administrator, guardian, or trustee, or while acting in any other fiduciary capacity, nor any debt or obligation to any surety of the debtor who has paid or may pay any such fiduciary debt or any part of it, nor any debt or obligation created by the obtaining of money or property under false pretenses. But this exclusion of said debts from the discharge shall take place only when said debts shall be ascertained in the decree of discharge and by the court directed to be so excluded. If the petitioner shall be discharged, property acquired by him after the filing of the assignment or a copy thereof in the clerk's office of the court of bankruptcy shall not be liable for his debts created before that time, nor shall any debt created by him after such filing be barred by such discharge.

SEC. 11. That the district courts of the United States in the several States, the supreme court of the District of Columbia, and the district courts of the several Territories are hereby made courts of bankruptcy, with full jurisdiction, both at common law and in equity, to carry out this act and to try and determine all suits and controversies necessary to a full execution thereof; and said courts shall have also full power to cause said petitioner, or bankrupt, his wife, or either of them, to be examined under oath touching any charge of concealment or illegal transfer of any property of said bankrupt and to issue a writ of ne exeat against the bankrupt to continue in force so long as it may be necessary to have such examination. The said courts, for the exercise of every jurisdiction conferred by this act, shall be considered as always open, and the judges of the said several courts may exercise in chambers any jurisdiction conferred on said courts by this act. But the said courts shall not interfere with, in any manner, the administration of the bankrupt's estate by the trustee or trustees or other manager mentioned in the assignment or appointed according to law unless it shall be made to appear to the said court that said trustee, or trustees, or manager is mismanaging the said estate, or the said trustee or manager shall by petition ask the court for directions as to such management. The court shall also have full jurisdiction to enjoin or otherwise manage or control all suits or actions pending against the bankrupt at the time of filing his assignment in the clerk's office of the court of bankruptcy, as hereinbefore required, and to manage and control all suits or actions pending at that time in his favor, and to cause the same to be prosecuted or defended by the trustee or manager of said assignment, and to make all necessary orders and decrees to secure a proper distribution of the assets according to law.

SEC. 12. That partners may jointly make an assignment as provided for in this act for separate and single debtors, but in such case the assignment shall contain a separate list and schedule of the partnership and separate creditors and property; and the preferences allowed by this act shall be for partnership creditors out of the partnership property, and for separate creditors out of the separate assets of the partner giving the preference; and the separate and partnership debts shall be provided for in the assignment in the same way. The petition shall be filed in the district or the division thereof in which the partnership business was carried on, up to a period of six calendar months prior to the assignment. If the business has not been so carried on within said period, then in the district or division thereof where all the partners reside, one of whom at least having resided there for six months prior to the assignment: and if they do not all reside in that district or division, then in the district or division in which a majority of them shall reside, or if a greater number do not reside in the same district or division, then in the district or division in which any one of them resides; but in all cases the residence required must be for six calendar months preceding the making of the assignment. If one or more of the partners be deceased, then the survivor or survivors may proceed as in this section provided, but in that case the legal representatives of the deceased shall have such notice as the court may direct.

SEC. 13. That if some of the partners are unwilling to join in such assignment and petition for discharge, then any of them may separately make an assignment of his separate property and file his petition as is hereinbefore provided for, and in the assignment shall include in general terms, with his separate property, his interest in the partnership property after the partnership debts are paid, and the names and residences of his other partners, specifying those in whose possession and control the assets of the partnership or any part of them may be, and such partners shall have such notice of filing the petition as the court may direct. He shall file with his assignment also a list of the partnership creditors and the amount due each, all of whom shall have notice as in other cases of proceedings under this act. The separate property assigned shall first be applied to the separate debts and the remainder, if any, to the partnership debts.

SEC. 14. That the court, on the hearing of the petition, or as soon afterwards as practicable, shall ascertain whether the partnership property is sufficient to pay the partnership debts. If it be found sufficient, the court shall so adjudge and order the separate property of the debtor to be distributed among his separate creditors; and if found more than sufficient, the court may direct a sale, on such terms as the court may prescribe, of the debtor's interest in the said partnership, and order the distribution of the funds arising from such sale among his separate creditors. But in both these cases the court shall make no further order interfering with said partnership estate. If the partnership property be found insufficient to pay the partnership debts, the court shall make such orders as may be deemed equitable and just, to convert said property into money and to wind up the affairs of said partnership and distribute the assets among the partnership creditors. The court shall direct said winding up to be done by one or more of the partners not petitioning for a discharge and designated by the court for that purpose, and shall hold said partner or partners so designated accountable to the court as a receiver, giving to him or them all the powers of collecting and distributing said partnership estate, as is necessary therefor, and as might be properly vested in a receiver. But if the court shall deem all of said nonpetitioning partners for any cause unfit for designation for such purpose, or if all of them deemed by the court fit to discharge that duty shall refuse to accept it, then the court shall appoint a receiver with full powers to take charge of said partnership estate and wind it up. And the court shall, in case of insolvency of the partnership estate, make all necessary orders and decrees, not inconsistent with the provisions of this act, as may be consonant to the rules of equity, in reference to said estate, as in cases of a dissolution of said partnership and a distribution of the assets by decree of a court of equity.

SEC. 15. That the said courts of bankruptcy shall have power to make all proper rules not inconsistent with this act for the exercise of the jurisdiction vested in them by this act.

SEC. 16. That any person who is unable to pay his debts and owes $200 or more, and who has no property besides what is exempt by law from execution and liability for his debts, may, without making any assignment as provided for in this act, file his petition in the court for the district or division thereof in which he has resided for six months previously, for a discharge from his debts as herein provided for, accompanying the same with a list of creditors; and thereupon the court shall take such proceedings as are provided for in this act for cases where there is an assignment, so far as the same may be applicable. In this case the filing of the petition shall have the operation provided for in the last clause of section 10 as to discharge from debts and the acquisition of property.

SEC. 17. That where any debtor, who, being a banker, broker, merchant, trader, or manufacturer, owing $500, and who is unable to pay his debts, shall make any assignment, transfer, or conveyance of his property, real or personal, or any part thereof, or give or suffer any lien or incumbrance on the same, contrived or devised with the actual intent on his part to defraud his creditors or any of them, such act when found and ascertained as hereinafter provided shall be deemed an act of bankruptcy; and a creditor or creditors having debts against said bankrupt to the amount of $500 may file a petition against said fraudulent debtor in the court of bankruptcy of the district in which said debtor may reside, alleging such fraudulent acts of bankruptcy. The debtor shall have such reasonable notice of the filing of said petition as the court shall prescribe; and on the day fixed by the court, if the debtor shall answer, denying the facts alleged in the petition, the said court shall hear the parties and the evidence, and if it shall be proven to the satisfaction of the court that such actual fraud was committed with the fraudulent intent and purpose aforesaid, and that the said debtor was at the time of committing said act without sufficient property to pay his debts, or if the debtor shall fail to answer, the said court shall adjudge him to be a bankrupt; and if not so satisfied the court shall dismiss said petition with costs to the defendant.

Either party may demand that said issues shall be tried by a jury under the direction of the court, as in other cases at common law.

If the debtor shall be adjudged a bankrupt as aforesaid, then the court shall take such other proceedings by the appointment of an assignee or receiver and by such other and further orders as may be necessary to recover said property and all other property so found to be fraudulently transferred or conveyed, belonging to said bankrupt, not exempt by law from seizure, to pay his debts, and to distribute the same among his creditors, excluding from any participation therein the person or persons for whose benefit said conveyance, assignment, lien, or incumbrance was made or suffered, if such person had actual notice of the fraud of the debtor aforesaid.

Said petition shall not be filed unless within four months next after the commission of said act of bankruptcy.

All the other provisions of this act so far as the same may be applicable shall apply to proceedings under this section.

SEC. 18. That this act shall not be construed to repeal, annul, or suspend the laws of any State or Territory now in force, or which may hereafter be enacted, for the compulsory distribution of an insolvent's estate among his creditors; nor to interfere with proceedings under said laws for that purpose which shall have been commenced prior to the filing of the petition as hereinbefore provided; and said petitioner shall not be permitted to dismiss his petition after filing the same without the consent of the court; but the jurisdiction of the court shall continue and remain after such filing for the purpose of recovering all property liable to the petitioner's debts and distributing the same among creditors until full and complete distribution shall be had: Provided, That the court may, if it shall deem the ends of justice will be subserved thereby, with consent of two-thirds of the creditors in amount and number, authorize a dismissal of said proceedings.

SEC. 19. That the court shall have power to appoint a sufficient number of auditors to transact such business as may be committed to them under this act. The auditors shall have power to administer oaths, state accounts, and under orders of the court examine witnesses, and perform such other duties, not of a judicial character, as may be prescribed by the rules of the court. The auditors shall also have power to make the necessary orders declaring the petitioner a bankrupt, and for serving notice of filing the petition of bankruptcy and for fixing the day at which a hearing on the petition shall be had. The fees of the auditor shall be fixed by the court, but in no case shall any fee exceed the sum fixed by the laws of the State in which he holds his office for similar services rendered by State officials.

SEC. 20. That all oaths required to be administered in any proceeding under this act may be taken before and certified by any officer of the State in which they are taken, authorized by the laws thereof to administer oaths.

SEC. 21. That there shall be kept at each place at which said courts of bankruptcy may be held, by the clerk thereof, a docket, in which shall be entered the filing of each petition and schedule and list and other papers, and a short statement of every order or decree of the court and of the auditors in that case, and copy of the decree granting or refusing a discharge; and such entries on the docket, together with the papers filed, shall constitute the record in such case. The cost of such docket shall be paid for as other record books and dockets of the district courts are paid for. The fees of the clerk, when not otherwise specified in this act, shall be fixed by the court, but shall not exceed the sum of $1 for service in any case of bankruptcy.

SEC. 22. That this act shall continue in force two years and no longer, except as to all proceedings commenced under it within that time, and as to them shall continue in full force and effect until they are finally disposed of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the committee.

Mr. TELLER. We are not going to act on that to-night.

Mr. CULLOM. I present a conference report which I desire to have considered.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

Mr. CULLOM. Before doing so, however, I yield to the Senator from Minnesota to offer an amendment to the bankruptcy bill.

Mr. NELSON. I desire to offer an amendment as a substitute for the first sixteen sections of the amendment that has been read. I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD, the reading to be dispensed with.

Mr. HOAR. Let it be received and, by unanimous consent, printed in the RECORD as having been read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be received and ordered to be printed without reading, if there be no objection.

Mr. HOAR. I asked unanimous consent in a little different way, that the amendment should be received and treated as having been read, and printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts requests that the amendment may be treated as having been read in the Senate and also printed in the RECORD.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to have it read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection, it will be so ordered.

Mr. BATE. We do object. We wish to have it read.

Mr. STEWART. Let it be read.

Mr. CULLOM. It is a pretty long amendment, and there are two conference reports here now.

Mr. TELLER. Let it be read later.

Mr. CULLOM. It may be read later. I have no objection to that. It will be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made to the request that the amendment shall be treated as having been read.

Mr. HOAR. I withdraw that request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The request is withdrawn.

Mr. NELSON. I understand the amendment is to be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. CULLOM. It will be.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. STEWART. It will be in the RECORD and also in the usual form, so that we may have it on our tables.

Mr. HOAR. It has been printed already in the regular way.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be reprinted in bill form, and will also be printed in the RECORD.

The amendment is as follows:

Mr. NELSON proposes the following as a substitute and amendment for sections 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, and 16 of the substitute reported by Senator TELLER as an amendment to H. R. 8110, entitled "An act to establish a uniform law on the subject of bankruptcies throughout the United States:"

"SECTION 1. That any debtor, other than a railroad corporation, owing $200 or more, who is unable to pay his debts, may file his petition in the district court of the United States for the district or division thereof in which he resides, or if he be a resident of the District of Columbia, then in the supreme court of said District, or if he be a resident of a Territory, then in the district court of such Territory of the district in which he resides, asking for a discharge from his debts, and offering to surrender all his property for the payment of his debts, except such as are exempt by the law of his domicile from execution and liability for debts. But the petition shall not be filed in such court unless the petitioner has resided in said district or division at least six calendar months immediately preceding the filing of the petition. The petitioner shall attach to his petition a schedule and list of all his property, exempt and unexempt, and a schedule and list of all his creditors, with the residence and post-office address of each, if known, and shall in his petition state his inability to pay his debts, and that the list and schedule of property and creditors is true and correct, and shall conclude with a prayer for a discharge from the debts of the petitioner, which petition shall be duly verified by the oath of the petitioner. And the petitioner shall deposit with his petition such sum of money with the clerk of the court to pay the cost of the proceedings as the court shall direct, not exceeding in all $20.

"SEC. 2. That as soon as said petition is filed as aforesaid the court shall be deemed to have acquired jurisdiction of the subject-matter of said proceedings, and all the creditors of the petitioner shall be made party defendants. The court shall thereupon make an order fixing a time and place for the hearing and consideration of said petition, which time of hearing shall be not less than thirty nor more than ninety days subsequent to the date of such order. Such order shall be served by the clerk of the court on each of the creditors by mailing a copy thereof, at least thirty days before said hearing, to each creditor in a proper envelope, with postage prepaid, addressed to the creditor at the post-office address specified in the schedule of creditors attached to the petition. A copy of said order shall also, in the meantime, be published once a week for four successive weeks prior to said hearing in a weekly or daily newspaper of general circulation in the vicinity of where the petitioner resides, such newspaper to be designated by the court at the time of issuing the said order. When said order has been served and published as aforesaid, the court shall be deemed to have acquired jurisdiction of the person of the creditors.

"SEC. 3. That the court in which said petition is filed shall be deemed to be always open, sitting, and in session for the consideration of any and all matters pertaining to or connected with the matter of said petition or the proceedings arising therefrom. And material issues of fact arising at any stage of the proceedings shall, on the demand of the petitioner or a creditor, be tried by a jury, and if a jury is not then in attendance the court may specially summon a jury for such trial, or the trial may be postponed until a regular petit-jury panel is in attendance. Except in the cases where a jury trial is demanded as aforesaid, all issues of fact shall be tried by the court without a jury.

"SEC. 4. That at the time and place fixed in said order for the hearing and consideration of said petition any of the creditors may appear and answer said petition and take issue with any of the matters and facts therein alleged, and may contest the right of the petitioner to a discharge from the payment of his debts upon the following grounds and no other, to wit:

"First. That the petitioner has knowingly concealed or withheld some part of his property by omitting the same from the schedule or list appended to the petition or otherwise, or has in any other manner concealed or withheld any of his property from the knowledge of the court or his creditors.

"Second. That the petitioner has at any time within six months prior to said hearing, or at any time after becoming insolvent and unable to pay his debts, conveyed, assigned, or concealed his property, or some part thereof, or has suffered a lien or incumbrance to be placed thereon, with intent in either case to defraud any of his creditors.

"Third. When the petitioner, being a banker, broker, merchant, trader, manufacturer, or miner, shall have given, at any time after becoming so insolvent, as aforesaid, or at any time within six months prior to such hearing, any preference to any of his creditors, other than such preferences as are allowed by law, or shall have suffered any of his creditors to acquire any such preference by legal proceedings or otherwise.

"Should a discharge be refused by the court upon any of the grounds specified aforesaid, the same proceedings shall be had in the administration and distribution of the petitioner's estate as if he were discharged.

"SEC. 5. That at the time and place set for said hearing the court shall proceed to hear, consider, and try the matter embraced in said petition and any issue made by any answer thereto; and if the court finds that the facts alleged in the petition are true, it shall adjudge the petitioner a bankrupt and make an order assigning and transferring all his property, not exempt by the law of his domicile from execution and liability for debts, to some suitable and competent person termed 'assignee,' with power and authority in such assignee to sell and dispose of such property and convert the same into money, under the direction and subject to the approval of the court, and to distribute the proceeds thereof among the creditors of the bankrupt in the manner hereinafter specified.

"SEC. 6. That said assignee shall, before entering upon the discharge of his duties, give a bond in such sum as the court may direct, with satisfactory sureties, subject to the approval of the court, for the faithful performance of the trust thus conferred upon him. He shall also take and file an oath that he will honestly and diligently, and without fear or favor, duly perform and faithfully discharge all the duties of his trust. As soon as the assignee has qualified as aforesaid he shall proceed, under the direction of the court, to convert all the property of the bankrupt into money and distribute the proceeds thereof among the creditors of the bankrupt, under the direction of the court, in the manner hereinafter specified.

"SEC. 7. That all preferences by any merchant, broker, banker, trader, manufacturer, or miner, given or suffered, within four months prior to the filing of the said petition, the petitioner being then insolvent, other than such preferences as are herein allowed, are hereby declared illegal, null, and void as against the creditors of the petitioner; and all money or other property which has been given, transferred, or assigned by the petitioner for the purposes of making such illegal and void preference as aforesaid shall, if not exempt from execution and liability for debts, be and remain a part of the assets and estate of the said petitioner, and shall pass to the said assignee, whose duty it shall be to reclaim and recover the same by legal proceedings, or otherwise, for the benefit of the creditors. And all conveyances or transfers of property made at any time by the petitioner which, by the laws of the State or Territory or District in which the property is situate, are illegal, void, or voidable, as against the creditors of the petitioner, are hereby declared null and void; and all liens or incumbrances upon the property of the petitioner which are void or voidable as to his creditors, by the laws of the State, Territory, or District where the property is situate, shall, for the purposes of this act, be deemed null and void as against the creditors of the petitioner; and all of the property aforesaid, unless exempt from execution or liability for debts, shall be deemed a part of the estate and assets of the petitioner, and shall pass to the assignee for the benefit of the creditors of the petitioner; and the assignee shall have full authority to institute and prosecute the necessary legal proceedings to recover and reclaim any property so transferred, assigned, or encumbered in fraud of the rights of the creditors as aforesaid.

"SEC. 8. That as soon as the petitioner has been adjudged a bankrupt as hereinbefore specified, all creditors shall, without any other or further notice, be required within thirty days thereafter to make and file, in writing and under oath, due proof of their claims, accompanied with a statement as to any and all securities held for such claims. Creditors holding securities shall only be entitled to an allowance of so much of their claims as exceeds the value of the securities held by them, unless, at the time of making their proof, they filed a due and proper relinquishment and assignment of their securities to the assignee of the bankrupt. No claim shall be paid until it has been passed upon and allowed by the court or under its direction. The claims of the creditors who have obtained undue preferences within the provisions of this act shall not be allowed unless such creditors shall first voluntarily surrender to the court and the assignee, without any legal proceedings, all property acquired by them by way of preference as aforesaid.

"SEC. 9. That the following debts shall have a preference in the distribution of the estate of the bankrupt over other debts, to wit: Debts due to the United States or to any State or Territory or to the District of Columbia, and debts due to the servants or laborers employed by the bankrupt for labor performed or services rendered by them within six months prior to the filing of the petition hereinbefore specified. But none of such debts shall be recognized or paid unless duly proved and allowed, as prescribed in reference to other debts and claims against the bankrupt.

"SEC. 10. That it shall be the duty of the assignee, after he has reduced and converted the estate of the bankrupt into money, to distribute the same, under the direction of the court, among the creditors whose claims have been proved and allowed as aforesaid, and for the expenses and costs of the proceedings and the administration of the estate, as follows:

"First. He shall pay, out of such money, all the costs and expenses of the proceedings and the administration of the estate, to be taxed and allowed by the court.

"Second. He shall next pay the preferred creditors of the bankrupt in full, or if there is an insufficient amount for that purpose, then the claims of the servants and laborers of the bankrupt shall, first of all, be paid in full, and the residue of the proceeds, if any, shall be paid in equal pro rata share to the other preferred creditors of the bankrupt.

"Third. The residue of the money, if any, shall be paid to the other creditors whose claims have been duly proved and allowed, in equal pro rata shares.

"SEC. 11. That after the estate of the bankrupt has been converted into money and distributed among the creditors, as hereinbefore provided, the court shall, upon the application of the assignee or bankrupt, order a final hearing for the purpose of finally determining his condition and status with reference to his creditors. The court shall, by its order, fix the time and place for such final hearing, which time shall be not less than thirty nor more than ninety days subsequent to the date of such order, and notice of such final hearing shall be given to the creditors by serving upon them the said order and publishing the same in the manner prescribed for the service and publication of the order prescribed and provided for in section 2 of this act.

"SEC. 12. That at the time and place fixed for said final hearing the court shall proceed to a final disposition and final determination of the proceedings; and if the court shall find that all the estate of the bankrupt not exempt from execution or liability for debts has been converted into money and distributed among the creditors of the bankrupt as herein prescribed and shall find that all the costs and expenses of the proceedings have been duly paid, and shall also find that the bankrupt is not subject to have his right to a discharge from his debts denied upon any of the grounds upon which his right to such discharge may be contested, as prescribed in section 4 of this act, then, and in that case, the court shall enter a final judgment and decree, discharging and acquitting the bankrupt from all his debts and liabilities due any of the creditors described in the schedule attached to his petition, or to any of the creditors who may, at any time subsequent thereto, become a party to the proceedings. But such discharge shall not include any debts or obligation which shall have been created in consequence of his defalcation as a public officer, or as an executor, administrator, guardian, or trustee, or while acting in any other fiduciary capacity; nor any debt or obligation to any surety of the debtor who has paid or may pay any such fiduciary debt or any part of it, nor any debt or obligation created by the obtaining of money or property under false pretenses; and if it shall appear to the court, at the time of the first hearing upon the petition described in the first section of this act, that the petitioner does not possess or own property of any kind, except that which is exempt by the law of his domicile from execution or liability for debts, and no creditor shall appear to contest the same or claim otherwise, then, and in that case, the court shall adjudge the petitioner a bankrupt, and shall enter a final judgment and decree, discharging him from all his debts and liabilities in like manner and to the same extent, and subject to the same exceptions as provided upon the final hearing, hereinbefore described.

"SEC. 13. That no attorney's fee shall be taxed or allowed, either for the bankrupt or any of the creditors. The assignee shall be entitled to a fee not exceeding $5 a day for every full day actually employed in the performance of his duty, and in no case shall he receive in the aggregate a fee in excess of $100. In case the clerk of the court is paid by a salary instead of fees he shall receive no compensation, but only his actual disbursements, for any of the work done by him in the matter of the proceedings under this act. In case he is not paid by a salary, then he shall receive the like fees for his services under this act that he would be entitled to receive for similar services in other cases, except that for mailing to creditors the copies of the orders herein provided for, he shall receive for each copy mailed a fee of 10 cents, and no more. For publishing the orders herein prescribed a like fee shall be allowed the publisher as is allowed for legal notices and publications in similar cases. All disbursements of the assignee necessarily incurred and expended in taking care of the estate of the bankrupt, and in converting the same into money and distributing the same among the creditors, as herein provided to be taxed by the court, shall also be allowed and paid; but no other costs, fees, and expenses than those aforesaid shall be incurred or allowed in the proceedings.

"SEC. 14. That a firm or partnership, where all the partners concur and join, or in case of dissolution for any cause on the application of any one of the firm may, in like manner and under like conditions and limitations, institute and carry on to a final determination bankruptcy proceedings in the same manner and to the same extent, and subject to the same conditions and limitations as is hereinbefore provided and prescribed in the case of an individual.

"SEC. 15. That the district courts of the United States in the several States, the supreme court of the District of Columbia, and the district courts of the several Territories are hereby made courts of bankruptcy, with full jurisdiction, both at common law and in equity, to carry out this act and to try and determine all suits and controversies necessary to a full execution thereof; and said courts shall have also full power to cause said petitioner, or bankrupt, his wife, or either of them, to be examined under oath touching any charge of concealment or illegal transfer of any property of said bankrupt, and to issue a writ of ne exeat against the bankrupt to continue in force so long as it may be necessary to have such examination. The said courts, for the exercise of every jurisdiction conferred by this act, shall be considered as always open, and the judges of the said several courts may exercise in chambers any jurisdiction conferred on said courts by this act. That the said courts of bankruptcy shall have power to make all proper rules not inconsistent with this act for the exercise of the jurisdiction vested in them by this act. The court shall also have full jurisdiction to enjoin or otherwise manage or control all suits or actions pending against the bankrupt at the time of filing his petition in the clerk's office of the court of bankruptcy, as hereinbefore required, and to manage and control all suits or actions pending at the time in his favor, and to cause the same to be prosecuted or defended by the assignee, and to make all necessary orders and decrees to secure a proper distribution of the assets according to law."

Mr. CULLOM. I have sent to the desk the conference report on the legislative bill. Before it is taken up, however, I yield to the Senator from Utah [Mr. CANNON], who wishes to submit a very brief conference report.

UNITED STATES COURTS IN UTAH.

Mr. CANNON submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 2367) to provide times and places for holding terms of United States courts in Utah, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House, and agree to the same.

GEO. F. HOAR,
WILLIAM P. VILAS,
FRANK J. CANNON,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

CASE BRODERICK,
CHARLES G. BURTON,
J. W. BAILEY,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope we may now proceed with the conference report on the legislative appropriation bill, which I have sent to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The conference report will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9643) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 31, 32, 46, 48, 62, 68, 69, 70, and 79.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 27, 29, 30, 33, 35, 36, 37, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 66, 67, 71, 72, 75, 76, 77, 78, and 80, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 26, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out, in line 5 of the matter inserted by said amendment, the words "to be approved by the Joint Committee on the Library;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 28, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Register of copyrights, $3,000, who shall, on and after July 1, 1897, under the direction and supervision of the Librarian of Congress, perform all the duties relating to copyrights, and shall make weekly deposits with the Secretary of the Treasury and make monthly reports to the Secretary of the Treasury and to the Librarian of Congress, and shall, on and after July 1, 1897, give bond to the Librarian of Congress in the sum of $20,000, with approved sureties, for the faithful discharge of his duties."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 34, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 16 of the matter inserted by said amendment, after the word "dollars," insert the following: "And said superintendent shall report to Congress at its next regular session the number of employees and the compensation of each employed hereunder;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 38, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 23 of the bill, in line 5, strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 47, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following:

"Chief clerk, $2,500; four law clerks revising accounts and briefing opinions, one at $2,100 and three at $2,000 each; three clerks of class 4."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 49, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$39,700;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 63, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed in said amendment insert "$5,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 64, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Assay office at Deadwood, S. Dak.: The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to use the unexpended balance of the appropriation of $15,000 for establishing an assay office at Deadwood, S. Dak., made by the sundry civil appropriation act approved June 11, 1896, for rent of a suitable building for such purpose, for providing the same with necessary furnaces, fixtures, and apparatus, and for wages of workmen and contingent expenses; and said assay office shall be conducted under the provisions of the act entitled 'An act revising and amending the laws relative to the mints, assay offices, and coinage of the United States,' approved February 12, 1873."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 65, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$2,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 73, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$7,250:" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 74, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$9,250;" and the Senate agree to the same.

S. M. CULLOM,
W. B. ALLISON,
F. M. COCKRELL,
Conferees on the part of the Senate.

HENRY H. BINGHAM,
JOHN E. McCALL,
ALEX. M. DOCKERY,
Conferees on the part of the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the conference report.

Mr. CALL. I do not think there is anybody in the Senate who understands anything about the report or what it means except the members of the conference committee. I should be very glad to have some idea of what it is proposed that we shall adopt.

Mr. CULLOM. If the Senate will allow me, I will state that by the report it is proposed that the Senate shall recede absolutely from only nine amendments which we made to the bill in the first place. One of them relates to the increase in the appropriation for the purchase of books for the Library, as to which we were compelled, in order to get an agreement, to accept a reduction from $6,000 to $4,000. Another one is in relation to the compensation of a chief clerk in the office of the Comptroller of the Treasury, where a reduction of $200 is made from the salary as fixed by the Senate. The Senate conferees receded from that amendment.

Another one is the reduction of one clerk of class 3 in the office of the Comptroller of the Treasury from the number fixed by the Senate. We yielded upon that point. Another is in relation to the wages of workmen in the United States mints and assay offices, being a reduction of $5,000, I think, from the amount fixed by the Senate. That was done after very considerable discussion and after the parties directly in interest were heard on the subject.

Another is as to the compensation of the Commissioner of the Bureau of Education. The Senate increased the salary of the Chief of that Bureau to $3,600, the salary being $3,000. After very much conference and delay the Senate conferees felt obliged to yield the proposed increase of the salary of that officer, so that it stands as it is in the law now, at $3,000. Another is the compensation of a statistician in the Bureau of Education, where there is a reduction of $200 from the amount fixed by the Senate. We had to yield the amount of the increase.

Another is the provision relating to the United States courts in the Indian Territory. That was agreed to finally after consultation with the people interested especially in that subject. Those, Mr. President, are the only items as to which the Senate receded absolutely and entirely from its original position on the questions involved.

The House recedes from its disagreement to amendments of the Senate, and agrees to the same with amendments, to which I will call attention. On page 19 of the bill, item 26, we strike out in line 5 of the amendment the words, "to be approved by the Joint Committee on the Library." The Senate undertook to make the rules provided by the Librarian subject to the approval of the Joint Library Committee. The Senate conferees, after a good deal of delay and discussion, and after everything else had been agreed to, concluded to yield that part of the amendment which we had made. So the Librarian will make his rules; and under the bill now there is nothing further to be said about it.

The next item is to insert in lieu of the Senate amendment the following:

Register of copyrights, $3,000, who shall, on and after the 1st of July, 1897, under the direction and supervision of the Librarian of Congress, perform all the duties relating to copyrights, and shall make weekly deposits with the Secretary of the Treasury, and make monthly reports to the Secretary of the Treasury and the Librarian of Congress; and shall, on and after July 1, 1897, give bond to the Librarian of Congress in the sum of $20,000, with approved sureties, for the faithful discharge of his duties.

The Senate, in the first place, provided that the register of copyrights should deposit his money with the Treasury Department and make reports to the Treasury Department monthly, and so on, but he was not required to report to the Librarian. After consultation with the conferees on the part of the House, we agreed that it would be more harmonious to require the copyright officer, who is to be appointed by the Librarian and is subordinate to him, to report to the Librarian, and to make his reports of money directly to the Secretary of the Treasury and make weekly and monthly statements as to what he has done.

Mr. GRAY. To be audited like the accounts of other disbursing officers?

Mr. CULLOM. To be audited like the accounts of other disbursing officers.

In reference to the superintendent of the Library building and grounds, in line 16 of the Senate amendment, after the word "dollars," we inserted:

And said superintendent shall report to Congress at its next regular session the number of employees and the compensation of each employed hereunder.

In the organization of the Library and grounds we provide for a superintendent and make him the disbursing officer of all the money paid out to employees of all kinds in connection with the Library building and grounds, requiring him to give a bond in the sum of $20,000, with sureties to be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, I think, for the faithful discharge of his duties.

The next amendment reduces the bond of the Librarian of Congress from $50,000 to $20,000. By mistake, I think, on the part of the committee, we got his bond up to $50,000. It was an enormous bond, as he does not handle a dollar of money except his own salary, and we thought it was only proper to reduce it to $20,000, which is a pretty large bond still.

Then, on page 36, item 47, we provide, in lieu of the Senate amendment, for "chief law clerk, $2,500; four law clerks, revising accounts and briefing opinions, one at $2,100 and three at $2,000 each; three clerks of class 4." That is substantially the law as it is now; in fact, it is almost exactly the same, except as to verbiage.

The next item is a reduction from $7,500 to $5,000 in the appropriation for contingent expenses at the Carson City mint.

The next is a provision in relation to the assay office at Deadwood, S. Dak. It authorizes the use of an unexpended balance of an appropriation of $15,000 for the establishment of an assay office at that town. The original appropriation was made in the sundry civil act of 1896, but none of the money has been expended, and we simply reappropriate that money and nothing more.

The next is a reduction of $500 in the provision for a mathematician in the Nautical Almanac Office.

The next relates to the provision for clerks in the office of the surveyor-general of Oregon, being a reduction from $8,000 to $7,250. The Senate made the amount $8,000, but afterwards in conference it was impossible for us to keep in the amount as we put it in the bill in the Senate.

Those, Mr. President, are all the amendments which have been made. There is a very large number of recessions by the House, but, with the exceptions I have referred to, the bill stands exactly as it passed the Senate. So I think it is a very plain matter, and that there can be no question as to what the Senate ought to do with the report. I hope it will be concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the report of the committee of conference.

The report was concurred in.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CULLOM. The Agricultural bill is now upon the desk, and I ask that it may be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9961) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate agree to the conference asked for by the other House.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Presiding Officer was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. CULLOM, Mr. QUAY, and Mr. CALL were appointed.

CONSIDERATION OF PENSION BILLS.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent that we may now proceed to the consideration of pension bills on the Calendar. I will state that there are very few of them, and it will take but a short time to dispose of them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the pension bills on the Calendar. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I expected to call up the Indian appropriation bill this afternoon, but it is so late now that I give notice I shall try to get it up immediately after the routine morning business to-morrow.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand that a while ago unanimous consent was given to the Senator from New Hampshire who now occupies the chair [Mr. CHANDLER] to make some observations to-morrow immediately after the routine business. I hope the Senator from South Dakota will modify his notice.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I modify the notice, then, and will ask the Senate to take up the Indian appropriation bill immediately after the conclusion of the remarks of the Senator from New Hampshire.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The first pension bill on the Calendar will be proceeded with.

ISAAC N. WILLIAMS.

The bill (H. R. 1104) granting a pension to Isaac N. Williams was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 7, before the word "Michigan," to strike out "first;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the act of June 27, 1890, the name of Isaac N. Williams, Company F, First Regiment Michigan Engineers, and pay him a pension of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments, in line 5, before the word "Company," to strike out "of" and insert "a sergeant in," and, in line 7, before the word "dollars," to strike out "thirty-five" and insert "thirty;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Daniel Phillips, late a sergeant in Company D, Thirteenth Regiment Wisconsin Infantry, and to pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month, in lieu of his present pension.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Daniel Phillips."

CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Chair be good enough to lay before the Senate the bill S. 1862, which has come from the House of Representatives with amendments?

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1862) to amend the act creating the circuit court of appeals in regard to fees and costs, and for other purposes.

The amendments of the House of Representatives were, on page 1, line 13, to strike out "The senior justice;" on page 1, line 14, to strike out "of" where it first occurs; on page 1, line 14, to strike out "each" and insert "Each;" and on page 1, line 16, to strike out "the same" and insert "said table."

Mr. HOAR. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

JOSIAH P. BRADBURY.

The bill (H. R. 5852) to increase the pension of Josiah P. Bradbury was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to increase the pension of Josiah P. Bradbury, late private in Company M, First Maine Heavy Artillery, and to pay him $30 per month in lieu of the pension now paid him.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JESSE DURNELL.

The bill (H. R. 3108) to grant a pension to Jesse Durnell, late second-class pilot on gunboat Lexington, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 7, before the word "dollars," to strike out "twenty-four" and insert "twenty;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Jesse Durnell, late second-class pilot on the gunboat Lexington, and pay him a pension of $20 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Jesse Durnell."

WILLIAM G. BUCK.

The bill (H. R. 8388) for the relief of William G. Buck was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 6, before the word "dollars," to strike out "thirty" and insert "twenty;" so as to make the bill read:

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

FRANCIS M. ROSS.

The bill (H. R. 5986) granting a pension to Francis M. Ross was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place upon the pension roll the name of Francis M. Ross, late a private in Company B, Forty-second Indiana Infantry, and to pay him a pension of $12 a month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN ZELLERS.

The bill (H. R. 4519) granting a pension to John Zellers was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll, at $30 per month, the name of John Zellers, of Coffeyville, Kans., late of Company K, Sixty-eighth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and Company B, One hundred and forty-fourth Regiment of Illinois Volunteer Infantry, in lieu of the pension now received.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARGARET KIRKPATRICK.

The bill (H. R. 6099) granting a pension to Margaret Kirkpatrick was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place upon the pension roll of the United States the name of Margaret Kirkpatrick, army nurse, at $12 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FREDERICK A. DRISCOL.

The bill (H. R. 4655) granting a pension to Frederick A. Driscol was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Frederick A. Driscol, late sergeant Company E, Twelfth Regiment Rhode Island Volunteer Infantry, and Company I, Ninth Regiment Rhode Island Volunteer Infantry, and to pay him a pension of $12 a month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HARRIET WOODBURY.

The bill (H. R. 1299) to pension Harriet Woodbury, of Windsor, Vt., was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Harriet Woodbury, late widow of Aaron G. Firman, of Company I, Seventh Regiment Vermont Volunteers, and to pay her a pension of $12 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY L. ARNOLD.

The bill (H. R. 4548) granting a pension to Mary L. Arnold was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Mary L. Arnold, mother of Isaac Arnold, late a private in Company B, Thompson's Battalion Six Months Missouri State Militia, and to pay her a pension of $12 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE W. FERREE.

The bill (H. R. 10040) granting an increase of pension to George W. Ferree was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 9, before the word "dollars," to strike out "thirty" and insert "twenty;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of George W. Ferree, late a private in Company E, Twenty-second, and first sergeant in Company E, Fifty-ninth, Regiments of Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension of $20 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

MRS. ELIZABETH S. ROBERTS.

The bill (S. 3670) to increase the pension of Mrs. Elizabeth S. Roberts, widow of the late Gen. Benjamin S. Roberts, United States Army, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Mrs. Elizabeth S. Roberts, widow of the late Gen. Benjamin S. Roberts, United States Army, at $50 per month, in lieu of the pension now received by her.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELIZABETH WELLONS.

The bill (H. R. 8898) to increase the pension of Elizabeth Wellons was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to increase the pension of Elizabeth Wellons, widow of a soldier of the war of 1812, from $12 per month to $20 per month.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move to amend the bill by inserting, after the words "Elizabeth Wellons, widow of," in line 5, the words "William S. Wellons;" so as to read, "Elizabeth Wellons, widow of William S. Wellons, a soldier of the war of 1812."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

ANNIE M. ERMER.

The bill (H. R. 1095) granting a pension to Annie M. Ermer was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Annie M. Ermer, widow of Henry Ermer, late of Company G, Tenth Regiment Maryland Infantry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LEVI T. E. JOHNSON.

The bill (H. R. 2317) to increase the pension of Levi T. E. Johnson was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to increase the pension of Levi T. E. Johnson, late a private of Company B, Fifty-second Indiana Volunteers, from $10 to $30 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JULIA H. H. CROSBY.

The bill (H. R. 446) to increase the pension of Julia H. H. Crosby was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Julia H. H. Crosby, widow of Freeman H. Crosby, deceased, late a lieutenant in the United States Navy, commanding the U. S. S. McArthur, at $35 per month, in lieu of the pension which she is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This concludes the Calendar of pension bills.

THE WATER HYACINTH.

Mr. PASCO. I ask unanimous consent that Senate bill No. 3651 be taken up and put on its passage.

The Secretary read the bill (S. 3651) to provide for an investigation of the obstruction of the navigable waters of Florida, Louisiana, and other South Atlantic and Gulf States by the aquatic plant known as the water hyacinth, and for other purposes; and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

Mr. CALL. How much money does the bill appropriate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Ten thousand dollars.

Mr. PASCO. That is the amount which was recommended by the Secretary of War in order to carry out these experiments.

Mr. CALL. I shall support the bill, and hope that it will pass, but I regret that the Secretary of War did not make a recommendation for a larger amount of money. It is a very important work and ought to be done thoroughly.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PASCO. I ask that the report of the Committee on Commerce be published in the RECORD in connection with my remarks.

There being no objection, the report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TO INVESTIGATE THE OBSTRUCTION OF NAVIGABLE WATERS OF SOUTHERN AND GULF STATES BY WATER HYACINTHS.

February 4, 1897, Mr. PASCO, from the Committee on Commerce, submitted the following report, to accompany S. 3651:

The Committee on Commerce have had under consideration a letter from the Secretary of War, referred to the committee on the 5th day of January last, transmitting, in response to a Senate resolution adopted on the 15th day of December last, a report of the Chief of Engineers relative to the obstruction of the navigable waters of Florida and other South Atlantic and Gulf States by the aquatic plant known as the water hyacinth, and the report and other papers accompanying the letter, all included in Document No. 36, and submit the following report of their action thereon, with a bill framed to carry out the recommendations of the Chief of Engineers transmitted to the Senate by the Secretary, and the committee recommend that the bill do pass:

The water hyacinth is an aquatic plant that has of late years appeared in our Southern waters, notably in the States of Florida and Louisiana. It is said to be a native of Venezuela, and it appears to have been introduced into the eastern part of Florida to adorn the grounds of some of the large hotel establishments. It thrived and flourished in the little ponds fed by fountains and was valued for its rarity and beauty. The leaves are borne in swollen stems, which are filled with spongy air cells. The blossoms are of a lilac color, produced in large spikes like a hyacinth, and it flowers freely in the summer and fall. Its hairy roots hang down into the water, but do not attach themselves to the soil beneath. The plants were given away and distributed about and in a few years became so abundant that people ceased to care much for them. Later they escaped from cultivation, and as they invaded the fresh-water navigable streams and lakes they became troublesome to the log men and to the small craft which plied the upper waters of the St. Johns and its tributary streams and connections, and still later they often obstructed the passage of steamboats and sailing vessels.

The plant is of quick growth, is moved about by the winds and currents, and as the masses of roots and leaves develop and thicken they form into floating islands, which often conceal logs and other obstructions menacing the safety of any vessel that strikes them. A prevailing wind lasting for some time drives these floating masses against a bridge or some shoal or point in the river, and it is hard to detach or penetrate them. The plants are propagated from seeds and by runners, and when they have once obtained a hold on the river bank or a shoal they grow rapidly and spread toward the middle of the stream, and in some of the tributaries of the St. Johns they have extended from each shore line and met in the channel, and the passage grows more difficult from month to month, and unless a remedy is speedily afforded even steamboat navigation will be impossible.

The following account of difficulties encountered by the steamer City of Sanford on one of her trips on the St. Johns early last summer is taken from the Times-Union, published in Jacksonville, Fla., and shows the necessity of speedy action to protect and keep open this great waterway:

"NAVIGATION ALMOST CLOSED—WATER HYACINTHS HAVE ALMOST BLOCKED THE UPPER ST. JOHNS.

"The cold weather this winter has had no effect on the water hyacinths, and unless Congress soon takes some steps to rid the St. Johns and tributary streams of the plant, before next summer navigation of the upper St. Johns will be entirely blocked.

"On the last trip of the steamer City of Jacksonville from this city to Sanford great difficulty was experienced in getting through a solid bed of the hyacinths, which extended for 1¼ miles south of Volusia Bar at the head of Lake George. The wind has been blowing from the north and northwest, and has caused the plants to be blown out of lakes and streams and into the form of a solid mass across the river.

"Captain Shaw, of the steamer, says that in places the hyacinths roll over and over until a solid bank several feet thick is formed, and when the steamer gets into the floating mass it is with the greatest difficulty that she can be gotten out.

"If the steamer is going at full speed when a bank of the hyacinths is struck, she will soon come almost to a standstill.

"Only a few days ago a small steamer on the upper river was completely stalled in a bed of the hyacinths, and it took several hours for men in rowboats to open up a passage for her to get out.

"At every landing along the river mill men and loggers complain that their business is being ruined by the water hyacinths, and all of them hope that Congress will soon take some action to afford relief."

The Palatka Advertiser furnishes another interesting incident which teaches the same lesson:

"Three men in two rowboats attempted to cross the St. Johns River at Palatka before day Wednesday morning, and were caught in the water hyacinths. The steam tug Frank made two unsuccessful attempts to get to them. A rescuing party from the schooner Russell went out Wednesday afternoon about 3 o'clock with boards, and, throwing them on top of the hyacinths, succeeded in rescuing two of the men, who were thoroughly chilled and wet through. At 4 o'clock the other man was still in his boat in about the center of the river, calling loudly for help, and working hard to reach the trestlework of the drawbridge, as all efforts to reach him had proved futile. The Picolata mail packet Alice M., after it had left the dock, was also delayed about three hours trying to get through the hyacinths."

The following letter from Maj. James B. Quinn, of the Corps of Engineers, which was among the papers communicated to the Senate by the Secretary of War, shows that a like condition exists in Louisiana, where the same pest obstructs the navigable waters and impedes commerce:

"OFFICE UNITED STATES ENGINEER,
"New Orleans, La., September 22, 1896.

"GENERAL: I have the honor to inclose a petition from the citizens interested in the navigation of the tributaries of the Tickfaw River in Louisiana.

"The water hyacinth is a plant that has developed wonderfully within the past few years in the rivers and bayous of Louisiana, and its growth has been so compact in many cases as to completely obstruct the passage of boats. The plants form such a dense mass in the canal which leads into Lake Ponchartrain at West End in this city at one season as to require their removal by means of a tug and a floating rake, the plants being towed out into the lake in large patches. The operation was necessarily an expensive one, although it proved effective.

"I have been informed that in Bayou Plaquemine, Louisiana, an experiment was made with gasoline, the gasoline being pumped into the water in considerable quantities and set fire to, and from all accounts this seemed to destroy the plants and the seeds, but the results were confined to a small space, and I have no idea what might be expected when the method was tried on a large scale. It seems to promise good results and might perhaps be worthy of trial.

"This matter affects the submission of a project for the improvement of these rivers under the appropriation made for the improvement of Tickfaw River and its tributaries, Louisiana, and I therefore request to be informed whether the appropriation which was made when such a contingency as an aquatic growth obstructing navigation was unknown is applicable to the removal of same under the same classification as snags and overhanging trees, etc., the only obstructions considered in the reports relative to the improvement of these streams.

"Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

"JAMES B. QUINN,
"Major, Corps of Engineers.

"Brig. Gen. W. P. CRAIGHILL,
"Chief of Engineers, U. S. A."

The rapid growth and spreading of this plant began to excite alarm and cause trouble about four years ago, but it was not called to the attention of the War Department till February, 1895, when Hon. C. M. COOPER, Representative of the Second district of Florida, referred to the Secretary a petition of certain citizens of Palatka, calling attention to the matter and seeking relief. At this time much trouble was experienced by the accumulation of the growth about the bridge across the St. Johns near Palatka.

The petition was referred to Maj. Thomas H. Hanbury, Corps of Engineers, and on the 10th day of April, 1895, he made a report to the Chief of Engineers from which the following extracts are taken:

"It appears from Mr. Crill's communication and from conversation that I have had with him and others familiar with the environments of the bridge across the St. Johns River at Palatka that considerable difficulty was experienced by boatmen in that vicinity last summer and fall on account of the plant called the water hyacinth, mentioned in his letter. At times this would give trouble at other points in the river south of Palatka. This plant has given no trouble until about two years ago, when it commenced to increase rapidly, collect in large patches, and float about upon the surface of the water as wind and current might direct. A long-continued southeast wind would cause large quantities of this to collect on the south side of the bridge in the angle formed by it and the shore. The shape of the deep bend at this point also favors the collection in this locality of floating substances when the wind is from this direction.

above described are such as obtained last fall. Since then the thermometer has twice gone below the freezing point along the St. Johns River, which has resulted in killing off most of this troublesome plant. In the latter part of last February I went down the St. Johns from Sanford to Jacksonville. At that time there was scarcely any of it visible. The only evidence of its existence was an occasional floating bulb or a patch half hidden away under some bushes or in a small bay along the shore. While at Palatka a few days since I noticed only a few bulbs about the wharves and in the vicinity of the bridge.

"Judging from the evidence of the last two years, these small remnants will be quite sufficient to again spread the plant to troublesome proportions. It does not seem to be able to withstand cold below the freezing point, nor will it live in salt or brackish water. It flourishes best in warm, sluggish, fresh water.

"From the information that I can gather, I am inclined to the opinion that it is the same plant that is beginning to give trouble in the bayous of Louisiana. There it is believed to have been brought from Colombia, South America. How it got into the St. Johns River, Florida, I have not been able definitely to ascertain. It certainly threatens to give great trouble to navigation.

"THOS. H. HANDBURY,
"Major, Corps of Engineers."

The opinion expressed by Major Handbury that the remnants of the plants were sufficient to again spread its growth to troublesome proportions was well founded, and last year the people of Palatka and other places on the St. Johns again called for relief against this obstruction to the commerce of their river. The matter was again referred to the Chief of Engineers, and it was investigated by officers of the corps.

The following extract is taken from the report of J. W. Sackett, assistant engineer to Lieut. Col. W. H. H. Benyaurd:

"UNITED STATES ENGINEER OFFICE,
"St. Augustine, Fla., October 14, 1896.

"COLONEL:

* * * * * * *

"The subject has been sufficiently investigated to show that there is no question but that the plant forms a serious obstruction to navigation, and that it is increasing to an alarming extent. In this respect I beg to refer to my report submitted September 9, 1896. To determine the best method of removing the plant from the river it would appear most rational to have a series of experiments undertaken. The subject is a novel one. To my knowledge such a condition of affairs has never been the subject of discussion from an engineering standpoint before. I have thought of many plans and have received many suggestions, but most of them seem impracticable. I beg to suggest the following, however, as the best that has presented itself:

"A specially constructed stern paddle-wheel steamer, having a double bow, or outriggers, which, upon being forced into a mass of the plants, would cause them to gather toward the middle of the boat, where an inclined carrier would pick them up and deposit them in front of large rollers driven by machinery that would crush them and force the water from them, thus greatly reducing their bulk. The crushed plants could then be delivered by suitable carriers into barges alongside, which, when loaded, would be used to carry the material and permit it to be deposited at some place on shore to be disposed of as compost material for fertilizer, or burned. A cremator could be arranged on a barge alongside the boat and save further handling. Experiment might show that the plant would not grow again or produce other plants after being crushed. If so, it could simply be thrown overboard from the boat."

The following extract is taken from the report of Lieutenant-Colonel Benyaurd to Brigadier-General Craighill, Chief of Engineers:

"UNITED STATES ENGINEER OFFICE,
"St. Augustine, Fla., November 9, 1896.

* * * * * * * *

"The subject has been sufficiently investigated to show that the plant forms a serious obstruction to navigation and that it is increasing to an alarming extent. The matter of the obstruction to navigation of the St. Johns River by this plant was made the subject of an examination by Maj. Thomas H. Handbury, and his report was submitted April 10, 1895, as fourth indorsement on letter of E. S. Crill, through Hon. C. M. COOPER, M. C.

"At the time of Major Handbury's examination the plant was thought to have been destroyed by the freezing weather that had prevailed in Florida that winter.

"By reason of the obstruction caused by an accumulation of the plant above the railroad bridge of the East Coast Railway Company at Palatka (shown on photographs transmitted), the matter was again brought up and referred to me for report upon letter of George P. Fowler, forwarding petition of mayor of Palatka and others, under date of August 12 last. The report thereon was rendered by me under date of September 18, upon an examination made by Mr. J. W. Sackett, assistant engineer, to which attention is respectfully invited.

"The matter is now brought up again, with request for further investigation and for steps to be taken to remove the plant from the river.

"It might first be stated that there are no funds on hand available for making any attempts toward removing the plant.

"As stated in my letter of September 18, above referred to, the plant is found on all the tributaries of the upper St. Johns. It appears to be extending on all the streams. Under favorable conditions its propagation is so rapid as to keep in advance of any efforts tending to its removal from the areas over which it has already spread. It would appear, therefore, that the first efforts should be directed toward some measures to stop the propagation of the plant. The experiments in this direction would, in my opinion, come properly within the province of the Agricultural Department. The growth of the plant in the swamps and small tributaries might at first seem of no consequence or injury to navigation, but with the rising of the waters large masses of the growth are carried out into the main stream and tend to form the serious obstructions to navigation against which so many complaints have been made.

"Mr. Sackett, assistant engineer, who has long been familiar with the Florida streams and their present condition, due to the presence of the hyacinth, recommends the construction of a light-draft stern-wheel steamer, having a double bow, or outrigger, which, being forced into a mass of the plants, would cause them to gather toward the middle of the boat, when an inclined carrier would pick them up and deposit them in front of rollers driven by machinery which would force the water from them, thus greatly reducing their bulk. The crushed material could be delivered to barges alongside, to be deposited where no injury could again result to navigation, or a cremator could be arranged on a barge alongside of the boat and so save additional handling.

"The first expense for this work would be in the cost of the construction of the light-draft steamer; subsequent expenses would be simply in the running expenses. It is thought that with moderate appropriations the St. Johns River could be kept sufficiently clear to prevent interference with navigation.

"In recent dredging operations at Volusia Bar, the work was delayed beyond the expected time of completion owing to the presence of the plant greatly interfering with the proper working of the machinery.

"As there will probably be no appropriation for rivers and harbors until 1898, it is earnestly recommended that some efforts be made looking to an appropriation for this much-needed work at the coming session of Congress. The plant increases so rapidly that before the end of two years it is feared that it will have spread to such an extent as to seriously endanger the navigation of the lower St. Johns, and any delay in undertaking the needed improvement must materially add to the expense of subsequent operations.

"Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

"W. H. H. BENYAURD,
"Lieutenant-Colonel, Corps of Engineers.

"Brig. Gen. W. P. CRAIGHILL,
"Chief of Engineers, U. S. A."

General Craighill, upon receipt of this report, returned the petition with its indorsements to the Secretary with the following communication:

"OFFICE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS, UNITED STATES ARMY,
"November 12, 1896.

"Respectfully returned to the Secretary of War.

"The within petition calls attention to the alarming increase in the aquatic plant known as the water hyacinth in the St. Johns River, and requests that an investigation be made and steps taken toward removing the same from the river.

"The matter has been investigated by Lieut. Col. W. H. H. Benyaurd, Corps of Engineers, who states, in report of the 9th instant, that the plant forms a serious obstruction to navigation, and that it is increasing to an alarming extent.

"Previous investigations have demonstrated the same thing, and the interference with navigation by these floating masses has been fully recognized by the Department, but there have been, and are at present, no funds available for making any attempts toward removing the plant. It is possible that Congress at the coming session may take some action in the matter and provide a fund for exterminating the plant. It would seem, as suggested by Colonel Benyaurd, that the first efforts should be directed toward taking some measures to stop the propagation of the plant, and that the experiments in this direction come within the province of the Agricultural Department. It is recommended, therefore, that these papers be referred to the Secretary of Agriculture with request for such suggestions along this line as he may be able to make.

"W. P. CRAIGHILL,
"Brigadier-General, Chief of Engineers."

When the Senate resolution of December 15, 1896, was received by the Secretary of War, it was referred to the Chief of Engineers, and the following extracts are taken from his report, which has been transmitted to the Senate by the Secretary:

"In answer to the reference of this resolution to me for report, I beg to submit the accompanying copies of papers relating to the presence of this plant in the St. Johns River, Florida, and also to state that, in the absence of necessary funds, no active measures have been undertaken under my direction looking to the removal or destruction of the plant at this locality. Lieut. Col. W. H. H. Benyaurd, Corps of Engineers, is under instructions to confer with the railroad company with a view to having certain desirable changes made in the bridge across the St. Johns River at Palatka.

"In September last Maj. James B. Quinn, Corps of Engineers, stationed at New Orleans, La., asked whether money on hand from appropriations heretofore made for the improvement of the Tickfaw River and its tributaries could be used for the removal of water hyacinths from those streams (copy of letter herewith), and he was advised October 6 that the money available might be used. This is the only instance where 'efforts have been made to remove such obstruction to commerce,' and I regret that I am not able to report the results of the efforts of Major Quinn in this direction, but time has not permitted the commencement of active operations on his part under the recent authority granted him.

"The legislation I would suggest in this connection is an appropriation of $10,000 to enable a proper investigation of this subject to be made and some experimental work to be carried out, with a view to permitting some definite conclusion to be reached as to the best method of freeing our Southern waters of this pest, which has already become a serious obstruction to several important fresh-water streams of the South Atlantic and Gulf States.

"Some correspondence has been had with the Department of Agriculture on this subject, and a copy of a letter addressed to the Secretary of War by the Secretary of Agriculture is herewith submitted.

"The resolution of the Senate is herewith returned.

"Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

"W. P. CRAIGHILL,
"Brigadier-General, Chief of Engineers.

"Hon. DANIEL S. LAMONT,
"Secretary of War."

The committee are satisfied that prompt efforts should be made to remove this obstruction to our commerce and to this end some method of dealing with the evil should be devised. The recommendation of the Department is approved and the accompanying bill has been prepared by the committee to carry out the views of the Chief of Engineers.

PROPOSED RESTRICTION OF IMMIGRATION.

Mr. LODGE. I desire to give notice that on Wednesday, immediately after the morning business, I shall call up the conference report on the immigration bill. The Senate has fixed 4 o'clock on Wednesday as the time for taking the vote, and I desire to call up the report immediately after the morning business, because the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GIBSON], who will be unable to be in the Senate to-morrow, wishes to address the Senate; and I shall ask that it be taken up at the earliest moment, so that he can have an opportunity of speaking upon it.

NONPARTISAN INDUSTRIAL COMMISSION.

Mr. QUAY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the labor-commission bill, being House bill 9188, authorizing the appointment of a nonpartisan commission to collate information and to consider and recommend legislation to meet the problems presented by labor, agriculture, and capital.

Mr. STEWART. I object to that.

Mr. PLATT. If that is a motion, I shall ask for a division of the Senate on it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania to proceed to the present consideration of the bill which he has indicated.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to ask the Senator from Pennsylvania if he will object to allowing me to make a previous request which, I think, will not take any time. I am afraid that the result of his motion may be such as to prevent the Senate from doing any more business this afternoon.

Mr. QUAY. I will yield if it will not take much time.

Mr. HOAR. With the permission of the Senator from Pennsylvania, I request that the bill to which he refers be laid aside informally that I may move to take up the bill (S. 3628) to provide for the revision and codification of the criminal and penal laws of the United States, which ought to come up at once in order that it may go to the other House. Let it be read for information.

Mr. STEWART. The labor-commission bill has not been taken up.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President, it is likely, as the Senator from Massachusetts has suggested, that if I should press my motion it would disclose the want of a quorum. For that reason I am willing to withdraw the motion for the present, but give notice that I shall renew it on Wednesday at the expiration of the morning business.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania is withdrawn.

Mr. PLATT. May I be permitted to say one word with reference to the bill of the Senator from Pennsylvania? I have no desire to object improperly to the consideration of that bill. When it shall be taken up, if it is brought before the Senate, it will excite considerable discussion, and I do not think there ought to be an attempt made to pass it in a very thin Senate. I think there ought to be a fairly full Senate for the consideration of the bill.

Mr. QUAY. I have just stated that I withdrew the motion to proceed to its consideration for that reason, because there is a small number of Senators present.

Mr. PLATT. That is all right.

Mr. QUAY. And I give notice that I shall renew the motion on Thursday, instead of Wednesday, at the conclusion of the morning business.

CRIMINAL AND PENAL LAWS.

Mr. HOAR. I ask that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 3628.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3628) to provide for the revision and codification of the criminal and penal laws of the United States. It provides that the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint three commissioners, whose duty it shall be, under the direction of the Attorney-General, to revise and codify the criminal and penal laws of the United States.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, to insert at the end of the bill the following additional section:

SEC. 5. That the work of said commissioners shall be completed and their term of office shall expire on the first day of the meeting of any session of Congress held more than one year after the passage of this bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISTRICT COURT OF APPEALS.

Mr. HILL. As it will be very easy to take up the next number on the Calendar, I ask unanimous consent to call up the very next bill, also reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, being the bill (S. 3538) to amend section 8 of the act of Congress entitled "An act to establish a court of appeals for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved February 9, 1893.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That in all cases in which by law the decrees and judgments of the court of appeals of the District of Columbia are final it shall be competent for the Supreme Court to require, by certiorari or otherwise, any such case to be certified to the Supreme Court for its review and determination, with the same power and authority in the case as if it had been carried by appeal or writ of error to the Supreme Court.

Mr. HILL. The object of the bill is simply to place the court of appeals of the District of Columbia on a par with the circuit courts of appeals of the various States, and to correct a manifest error which exists in regard to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. STEWART. I inquire of the Senator from New York if the amount in dispute will have any figure as a jurisdictional question under the amendment?

Mr. HILL. No; it allows the Supreme Court in its discretion to review a case; not otherwise.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to authorize the Supreme Court of the United States to issue writs of certiorari to the court of appeals of the District of Columbia in the same cases and manner that it may do in respect of the circuit court of appeals."

THE POTOMAC PARK.

Mr. WETMORE. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 3307) declaring the Potomac Flats a public park, under the name of the Riverside Park.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment, in line 6, before the word "Park," to strike out "Riverside" and insert "Potomac;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the entire area formerly known as the Potomac Flats and now being reclaimed, together with the tidal reservoirs, be, and the same are hereby, made and declared a public park, under the name of the Potomac Park, and to be forever held and used as a park for the recreation and pleasure of the people.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill declaring the Potomac Flats a public park, under the name of the Potomac Park."

ANNA W. OSBORNE.

Mr. NELSON. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 114) for the relief of Anna W. Osborne.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to pay to Anna W. Osborne $600, the same being the amount of personal property belonging to her and to John W. Osborne, her late husband, of the United State Army, destroyed by fire at the destruction of the post hospital at Fort Ripley, Minn., July 21, 1870.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ESTATE OF J. W. TUCKER.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Order of Business 1590, being a resolution reported a few days ago from the Committee on Claims.

There being no objection, the resolution reported by Mr. CAFFERY from the Committee on Claims on the 10th instant was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the bill (S. 3463) entitled "A bill for the relief of the estate of J. W. Tucker, late of Lafourche Parish, La.," now pending in the Senate, together with all the accompanying papers, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims, in pursuance of the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States," approved March 3, 1887. And the said court shall proceed with the same in accordance with the provisions of such act, and report to the Senate in accordance therewith.

CONTINENTAL AND OTHER FIRE INSURANCE COMPANIES.

Mr. ALLEN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 567) for the relief of the Continental Fire Insurance Company and others.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to cause the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to reopen and reexamine the funding claims of the Continental Fire Insurance Company; the Eagle Fire Insurance Company; the City Fire Insurance Company; the Commercial Mutual Insurance Company of the State of New York; the Maryland Fire Insurance Company; the Western National Bank; the Merchants' National Bank; the Chesapeake Bank of the State of Maryland, and the Eastern Railroad Company of the State of Massachusetts, for taxes erroneously paid by them and now on file in his office, and to refund such amounts as he may find those companies and banks have paid as a duplicate tax upon the same identical income or profits, and to transmit his allowances to the proper accounting officers of the Treasury for certification to Congress, in compliance with the second section of the act of Congress approved July 7, 1884.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CAPT. WILLIAM N. TISDALL.

Mr. HAWLEY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1427) to provide for promoting Capt. William N. Tisdall, United States Army, now on the retired list, to the rank of major.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. BATE. I ask the Senator from Connecticut if that bill was unanimously reported by the Committee on Military Affairs?

Mr. HAWLEY. So far as I remember, I do not recall any protest against it.

Mr. BATE. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL], who keeps particularly well informed in regard to all such measures, is now absent from the Senate, and, on account of his absence, I think the bill ought to go over.

Mr. HAWLEY. I hope not.

Mr. BATE. I do not desire to oppose the bill, as it is reported from the Committee on Military Affairs, of which I am a member, but I would like the Senator from Missouri to be present when it is considered. I do not know that this is a unanimous report.

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not remember anything in the nature of a protest. The bill was considered in the committee, and it is one of those cases of equity which the committee agrees to report upon once in a while.

Mr. BATE. I understand the bill is reported by a majority of the committee.

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes.

Mr. BATE. I should like to have the bill go over, Mr. President.

Mr. HAWLEY. If the Senator objects, I will let the bill go over.

Mr. BATE. Let the bill go over until the Senator from Missouri is present.

Mr. HAWLEY. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

CAPT. W. J. KOUNTZ.

Mr. QUAY. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration at this time of the bill (H. R. 3715) for the relief of Capt. W. J. Kountz.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to release and discharge Capt. W. J. Kountz from charges aggregating $22,845.51, resulting from a contract dated the 12th of March, 1878, between him and the quartermaster's department of the United States Army at St. Paul, Minn., for the transportation of troops and supplies on the Yellowstone River.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN CAMPBELL.

Mr. MCBRIDE. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (S. 1972) to provide for the carrying out of the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of John Campbell.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to pay to John Campbell, of the State of Oregon, $1,165, being the amount found due by the Court of Claims for property taken by the Army during the war of the rebellion, as reported to Congress in House Miscellaneous Document No. 132 of the second session of the Fifty-third Congress.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BEQUEST OF PETER VON ESSEN.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration at this time of the bill (S. 2986) authorizing the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to accept the bequest of the late Peter Von Essen for the use of the public white schools of that portion of said District formerly known as Georgetown.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments, in line 4, after the word "authorized," to insert "and required;" in line 13, after the words "required to," to strike out "expend" and insert "distribute;" and in the same line, after the word "funds," to strike out "for the use of the white public schools of that portion of the said District formerly included within the limits of the city of Georgetown as they, in their discretion, may determine may be most beneficial for the said schools" and insert "among the heirs of the said Peter Von Essen, deceased, share and share alike, upon satisfactory proof of such heirship;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and required to accept the bequest of $12,057.24 bequeathed by the will of the late Peter Von Essen to the late corporation of Georgetown for the use of the free white schools of said town, and which sum has been decreed to be turned over to said Commissioners, as the successors of said corporation, by the supreme court of the District of Columbia in equity cause No. 5338; and that said Commissioners be, and they are hereby, required to distribute the said funds among the heirs of the said Peter Von Essen, deceased, share and share alike, upon satisfactory proof of such heirship.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LIGHT-HOUSE AT ORIENT POINT, NEW YORK.

Mr. HILL. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 853) providing for the erection of a light-house at Orient Point, Long Island, New York; which has been favorably reported from the Committee on Commerce without amendment.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to appropriate not to exceed $30,000 for the erection and equipment of a light-house, with fog signal, at the site of the beacon heretofore standing at Orient Point, or Oyster Pond Reef, on the west side of Plum Gut, at the entrance of Long Island Sound, in the State of New York.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THOMAS ANTISELL.

Mr. BURROWS. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (S. 315) for the relief of Thomas Antisell.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported by the Committee on Claims with amendments, in line 3, before the word "thousand," to strike out "ten" and insert "two;" in the same line, after the word "thousand," to insert "five hundred;" after the word "taken," at the end of line 9, to strike out "by said troops used," and in line 10, after the word "and," to strike out "destroyed by reason of said occupation" and insert "consumed by the United States for military purposes; said sum to be in full satisfaction for his claim against the Government by reason of such occupation and use;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $2,500 be, and is hereby, appropriated, to be paid out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Dr. Thomas Antisell, late surgeon and brevet lieutenant-colonel of volunteers, in compensation for the use and occupation of his land near Fort Albany, Va., by the troops of the United States during the war of the rebellion, and for property taken and consumed by the United States for military purposes; said sum to be in full satisfaction for his claim against the Government by reason of such occupation and use.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. STEWART. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, February 16, 1897, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, February 15, 1897.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was read and approved.

EVENING SESSIONS FOR PENSION BILLS.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit the following privileged report from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Rules, to whom was referred the following House resolution—

Resolved, That the House shall, on Monday and Tuesday, February 15 and 16, at 5 o'clock p. m., take a recess until 8 o'clock, at which evening sessions such business as is provided for by section 2 of Rule XXVI shall be considered, and said evening sessions shall not extend beyond 11 o'clock and 30 minutes—have had the same under consideration, and herewith report it back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. HENDERSON. The Committee on Rules, to whom was referred the foregoing resolution, having considered the same, report it back with the recommendation that it be passed.

I demand the previous question on the adoption of the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. HENDERSON. I reserve my time.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, I simply desire to say that while I think the resolution devoting nights to the consideration of this class of bills is better than to have given a day, and the nights are intended in lieu of the day, yet I am unable to bring myself to believe that the House ought to be kept in session until 11.30 o'clock, instead of 10.30, as under former rule. But even that, as I have said, is better than giving a day for this work.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Foreign Affairs to report back to the House the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill, with Senate amendments, with the recommendation that the Senate amendments be concurred in.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Foreign Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10134), with Senate amendments, making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, beg leave to report the same back with the recommendation that the Senate amendments be concurred in, and the bill as amended be passed.

Mr. HITT. Inasmuch as the amendments of the Senate are many of them verbal, and none of them objectionable to the House committee—in fact, are mainly such as were desired by us, but which we were prevented from incorporating in the bill by the rules of the House—I ask that the Senate amendments be considered by the House as in Committee of the Whole, in order that I may make a motion to concur in them.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman presents the diplomatic appropriation bill, with Senate amendments, and asks that they be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

Mr. MCMILLIN. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman what is the nature of the amendments put on by the Senate?

Mr. HITT. As I have just stated, some are only verbal. Those that are not verbal in their nature are matters which the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House desired to incorporate in the bill, but could not do so under the rules of the House. There is an increase in three consulates' salaries, and one item is a provision of $10,000 inserted by the Senate for a new edition of the Digest of International Law, a very important work, long since exhausted, and necessary for the Department and for members of the House; and a half year's allowance to Minister P. M. B. Young's heirs, as is the custom in case of ministers dying at their posts.

Mr. DOCKERY. That is all right.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to considering the bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendments.

The Senate amendments were read at length.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, I will briefly explain the amendments. The amendments from No. 1 to No. 4, inclusive, are merely verbal in their nature and make no change in appropriations. No. 5 is a provision for the heirs of Mr. Young, following the practice heretofore established, but giving the heirs only one-half of the annual salary instead of the salary for a year, as was formerly done in similar cases.

Amendment No. 6 provides the sum of $10,000 for a new edition of the Digest of International Law, a document which is sought for so much by members of the House, and which has become scarce; in fact, the edition was entirely exhausted long ago. The Secretary of State will expend the money, or so much of it as is necessary, to have the work reedited, condensed, and brought down to this time. Amendments No. 7 and 8 are merely to correct the footings. Amendment No. 9 is to raise the pay of the consul at Santos from $1,500 to $2,500. The Secretary asked for $3,000. This is the largest coffee-exporting port in South America, and the consul is overworked and underpaid, and we desire to concur in that amendment. Ghent is similar—that is, the business is large, and the salary is raised from $1,000 to $2,000. The official fees collected there during the past year amounted to $3,457, showing how large is the trade passing through that consul's office. At Newcastle-on-Tyne the salary has been increased from $1,500 to $2,000; the Secretary estimated for $2,500 and we have agreed to $2,000, and Horgen is restored with $2,000, and clerk hire of $600 allowed. Patras, Greece, an important point in the Zante currant trade, has been fixed at $1,000. The fees there last year were $767. The salary we have agreed to is the lowest in the service. At Alexandretta the compensation is $1,500; this is not a change of law, only the appropriation which was last year in the sundry civil bill is now placed in this bill, where it properly belongs. The amount of the bill is $1,695,308.76 now, as against $1,672,708.76, as it passed the House.

I move that the House concur in the Senate amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. HITT, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed the bill (S. 3500) for the relief of Stewart & Co., A. P. H. Stewart, agent; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 9123) to prevent forest fires on the public domain.

CREVASSE IN PASS A LOUTRE, MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

Mr. REEVES. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors to move to suspend the rules and pass the bill S. 3614, with an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. REEVES], on behalf of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, presents the bill S. 3614, and moves to suspend the rules and pass it with an amendment. The Clerk will first report the bill and then report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $250,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to close the crevasse in Pass a Loutre of the Mississippi River, to be expended under the direction and according to the plan and specifications of the Secretary of War.

SEC. 2. That nothing herein contained shall be held or construed to destroy or impair any right or rights of the United States arising under the acts of March 3, 1875, June 19, 1878, and March 3, 1879, containing the contract or contracts between James B. Eads and such persons as might become associated with him and the United States or to release the legal representatives of said James B. Eads from any obligation, expressed or implied, arising under and from said acts of March 3, 1875, June 19, 1878, and March 3, 1879.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will now report the amendment which it is proposed to suspend the rules and pass.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That the sum of $250,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to close the crevasse in Pass a Loutre of the Mississippi River, to be expended under the direction and according to the plans and specifications of the Secretary of War.

"SEC. 2. That nothing herein contained shall be held or construed to destroy or impair any right or rights of the United States arising under the acts of March 3, 1875, June 19, 1878, and March 3, 1879, containing the contract or contracts between James B. Eads and such persons as might become associated with him and the United States, or to release the legal representatives of said James B. Eads or other persons associated with him, jointly or severally, from any obligation, expressed or implied, arising under and from said acts or other acts pertaining thereto: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be held or construed to release in any wise the executors of the estate of James B. Eads as such executors, or the associates of said James B. Eads, jointly or severally, in whole or in part, from any liability which now exists, if any such liability does exist, for a failure to close said Pass a Loutre crevasse, and the question of such liability shall be referred to the Attorney-General for his decision; and should the decision of the Attorney-General be to the effect that the responsibility for the closing of the said Pass a Loutre crevasse rests upon the executors of the estate of James B. Eads as such executors, and the associates of the said James B. Eads, jointly or severally, under existing laws, then upon the completion of the twenty years' contract for the maintenance of the channel in South Pass outlet of the Mississippi River, as the same now exists, the Secretary of War shall withhold so much of the money then to be paid to the executors of the estate of James B. Eads as such executors, or to the associates of the said James B. Eads, jointly or severally, as shall have been expended under the authority of this act, until the same shall be judicially or otherwise legally determined in favor of such executors as such executors, or said associates of James B. Eads, jointly or severally."

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a second.

The SPEAKER. A second is demanded.

Mr. REEVES. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman [Mr. REEVES] asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, one moment. We should like to have——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman reserves the right to object.

Mr. SAYERS. No, I do not object to the second, provided a full explanation of the bill is to be given.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection to considering a second as ordered. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. REEVES] has twenty minutes, and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] has twenty minutes.

Mr. REEVES. Mr. Speaker, I do not know that the House needs any special information on this bill, and I shall only offer a word in explanation. Of the three outlets of the Mississippi River, only one of them, known as South Pass, is navigable at the present time. A crevasse has occurred within the last few years in one of these passes, and has been constantly enlarging, at a distance of about a mile and a quarter below the head of the pass. The effect of this crevasse has been to draw away from the other two passes of the river a portion of the water that should go through the navigable outlet of the river. The engineers of the Government in charge at this part of the river inform us, and we are also informed by men engaged in business on the river, that if this crevasse is not stopped the entire commerce of the Mississippi River below New Orleans is threatened.

The Committee on Rivers and Harbors, after hearing from the engineers of the Government and others, among them business men from New Orleans, decided to inspect the condition of affairs down there, and twelve of us went to this place and closely examined it. The committee are unanimously of the opinion that unless this crevasse is stopped the entire commerce of the river, which is more than 5,000,000 tons annually, is threatened. I take it that the necessity of keeping this river open is not a question before this House or the country. The only question is as to the necessity for doing this at this time. The best judgment we have been able to obtain is that this crevasse can now be stopped for $250,000, whereas if it is not stopped until the high floods come again and again it will cost the Government a million of dollars to do it. The committee are unanimously of the opinion that an emergency does exist, that it is outside of and away from the functions or duty of the executors of the Eads estate, and that there is nothing left for us to do but to take this course, or jeopardize the commerce of the river.

Mr. DOCKERY. Do I understand the gentleman to express the opinion that the executors of the Eads estate are not liable for the amount that may be necessary to repair this crevasse?

Mr. REEVES. Our committee have not passed upon that question, but have carefully guarded it, as the gentleman will see by reading the bill, in the event that the proper law officer of the Government shall conclude there is any liability or responsibility. If the gentleman will refer to the bill, he will see that that has been most carefully guarded.

Mr. DOCKERY. Is the gentleman able to state in this connection what amount is yet due to the estate of James B. Eads?

Mr. REEVES. Five hundred thousand dollars will be due in about two years and a half, and we direct in this bill that so much of that shall be retained as shall be expended under authority of this bill, provided the Attorney-General concludes that there is any liability whatever on the part of the Eads estate.

I do not care to say anything further, Mr. Speaker, but reserve the balance of my time.

And then (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill passed as amended.

Mr. REEVES. I desire to move to change the title so that it shall read:

A bill to provide for closing the crevasse in Pass a Loutre, one of the outlets of the Mississippi River.

There being no objection, the title was so amended.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the following bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10292) making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and for other purposes.

Mr. PEARSON. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PEARSON. I desire to ask whether under the rules of the House it is competent for one committee to report a bill of another committee, as in this case I understand the river and harbor bill is reported as a part of another known as the sundry civil bill?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not understand the gentleman.

Mr. PEARSON. I ask if it is competent for one committee to report a bill which is within the jurisdiction of another committee, that other committee having the right to report at any time? Now, I understand——

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the correct view to be taken of the matter is that if the point had been made at the proper time and on the proper day then it would probably have been sustained.

Mr. PEARSON. May I ask if it is too late now to make the point?

The SPEAKER. The proposition now before the House is on the motion of the Committee on Appropriations to suspend the rules and pass the bill which is about to be reported.

Mr. DOCKERY. I suggest to the gentleman, in view of what was said on Saturday, that the title of the bill might be amended so as to obviate the difficulty.

Mr. PEARSON. I do not catch the gentleman's point.

Mr. DOCKERY. You might change the title, so that it will read "A bill providing for sundry civil and river and harbor expenses," and then you would cover the point. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will proceed with the reading.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. The gentleman is not well founded in his facts or in his law.

Mr. PEARSON. I may be confounded by the majority in favor of the measure; but I would like very much to have three minutes to express my opinion of this congeries of horrors.

Mr. CANNON. Well, I ask unanimous consent to have a second considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to considering a second as ordered? The bill will first be read.

Mr. PEARSON. If the gentleman will allow a yea-and-nay vote on this bill, I will not object.

Mr. HOPKINS. You can have a yea-and-nay vote on the passage, and if a second is ordered there will be forty minutes for debate.

The SPEAKER. There will be forty minutes for debate. The Clerk will proceed to read the bill.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered as read. Nearly every member has read the bill. It will take an hour or more to read the bill.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, I think that an explanation is due from myself as to why I should oppose that request. My judgment is that there is no necessity——

Mr. CANNON. I do not care to debate this bill. If the gentleman is not willing——

Mr. SAYERS. Well, if the gentleman will, instead of the usual time allowed for debate on this bill, allow us thirty minutes on this side, I think the minority here will agree to dispense with the reading of the bill, inasmuch as it has been read.

Mr. CANNON. That is, to allow thirty minutes on a side instead of twenty.

Mr. SAYERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. CANNON. All right.

Mr. TURNER of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I think the bill ought to be read.

The bill was read at length.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on suspending the rules and passing the bill, and there are twenty minutes allowed for debate on either side.

Mr. PEARSON. Has a second been ordered?

The SPEAKER. A second has been ordered.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The Chair is in doubt about whether a second was ordered.

Mr. PEARSON. I make the point that there has been no demand yet for a second. I have been waiting for the purpose of demanding a second.

Mr. SAYERS. Let a second be considered as ordered.

Mr. PEARSON. I object to a second being considered as ordered, because there is no opportunity for amendment or debate.

Mr. SAYERS. I will give you three minutes.

Mr. PEARSON. I demand a second.

Mr. SAYERS. Then I withdraw the offer.

Mr. PEARSON. Then I accept the situation.

The SPEAKER. A second is demanded. The gentleman from Illinois and the gentleman from Texas will take their places as tellers.

Mr. PEARSON. I demanded a second.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri demanded a second.

Mr. SAYERS. It was the gentleman from North Carolina who demanded a second.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri demanded a second, and the Chair submitted to the House whether a second should be considered as ordered.

Mr. SAYERS. All right, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. PEARSON. I object to having it decided that a second has been considered as ordered, and demand a second, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not demand a second, and a second is considered as ordered.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, if members will give me their attention, I will state very briefly why it is that I am opposed to the passage of this bill under a suspension of the rules. I will not stand in my place here and say that the items in this bill are improper. My judgment is that, with the exception of the river and harbor appropriations, there is scarcely an item in the bill which could not safely undergo the criticism and investigation of this House. The Committee on Appropriations have considered every item carefully, and their recommendations have been in response to estimates from the executive branch of the Government, sustained by the testimony of those who came before the committee. To almost every item in the bill, save and except the river and harbor items (which embrace an appropriation of about $16,000,000), I give assent. If the bill were considered in the ordinary way, I do not believe that the House would upon deliberation reject any of the other items, and if it did, they would be very few, amounting to a very small sum of money. As to the river and harbor items, the committee have not been called upon to judge as to the wisdom or the policy of making those appropriations. They found them in the estimates, and they found that those estimates corresponded with the provisions of the river and harbor act which passed at the first session of the present Congress. All that the committee did, therefore, was simply to call before them the officer in charge of the Engineer Department and examine him as to contracts and advertisements, and also as to the amount of money that would be needed for each work during the coming fiscal year.

Mr. Speaker, the objection that I have to the passage of this bill under a suspension of the rules is this: I believe that the House ought to be afforded an opportunity to pass upon each and every item, and I think I can state for the minority that they would not interpose any captious objection to the prompt consideration of this bill. If the bill were considered regularly and a captious spirit should be manifested, so as to delay its passage within reasonable time, it would be within the power of the majority of this House, through its Committee on Rules, to bring in an order which would force the House to vote upon the bill, and my judgment is that by to-morrow evening, or at latest by the close of our session on Wednesday, this bill will have passed here and gone to the Senate without the necessity for the intervention of an order to bring the House to a vote upon it. This is the reason and the only reason I have for objecting to passing this bill under a suspension of the rules. It is just to the Committee on Appropriations, and especially to the majority of that committee, that I should make this statement as to the character of the bill. I repeat, that with the exception of the river and harbor items the bill has been most carefully prepared, and that the river and harbor items have been included only because we were compelled to do so by the law and by the rules of the House.

Mr. HULICK. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. SAYERS. Certainly.

Mr. HULICK. If I understand the gentleman correctly, he approves of the items in this bill, and my question is, What advantage would it be to have further consideration by discussion?

Mr. SAYERS. I do not approve of the appropriations made in this bill for rivers and harbors to carry out the provisions of the river and harbor act passed at the first session of this Congress.

Mr. HULICK. Do you think that part of the bill ought to be modified?

Mr. SAYERS. I can not say I think it ought to be modified, for the reason that these items are placed in the bill in pursuance of existing law. What I wish to do is to impress upon the House that in the matter of those particular items, aggregating about $16,000,000, the Committee on Appropriations ought not to be held responsible, and for one I desire to avoid the responsibility.

Mr. QUIGG. Suppose there were a failure to pass the bill under a suspension of the rules, does the gentleman mean that he would advise us to reject those items?

Mr. SAYERS. I would not, because I know nothing about them.

Mr. QUIGG. Then what would be the advantage of further consideration of the bill in detail by the House?

Mr. SAYERS. During the consideration of it those members who favor the items in question might be able to give the House reasons why they should pass.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Is the work provided for in the items referred to in such a state that a failure to appropriate for it at this time would cause damage?

Mr. SAYERS. Some of the works embraced in these items are already under contract; for some of the projects advertisements have already been made, and as to the larger items, for instance, those affecting the Mississippi and Missouri rivers, by the terms of the river and harbor act no contracts are necessary. The War Department is allowed to expend the money for those rivers either by contract or by day work, so that the contract system does not necessarily apply either to the Yazoo River, the Lower Mississippi, the Upper Mississippi, or the Missouri River.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Suppose that the appropriations for those items should fail, what damage would accrue?

Mr. SAYERS. That is not for me to say, because the committee have not inquired into that question. The committee have confined themselves to complying with the rules of the House and, responding to the provisions of the river and harbor act passed at the first session of this Congress, have therefore brought in these items for the consideration of the House.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. It occurred to me that if no particular harm would come from failing to make appropriation for these items, they might perhaps be properly omitted at this time.

Mr. SAYERS. The gentleman will not understand me as expressing an opinion upon that subject

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I do not so understand the gentleman; I am merely explaining to him the reason for my question.

Mr. PAYNE. I would ask the gentleman from Texas whether in all probability, if we did not make these appropriations now, we should not have claims for damages here on account of these contracts for the next twenty-five years?

Mr. SAYERS. That is a question I can not answer.

Mr. PAYNE. But has not that been the experience in the past?

Mr. CATCHINGS. There would be great damage to some of these works if the House now failed to appropriate for them.

Mr. SAYERS. Members will understand me as not undertaking to advise the House as to these river and harbor appropriations, because the committee has not been able to examine into them in detail. If there is any other item in the bill excepting those covering the river and harbor appropriations about which gentlemen wish information, I shall be more than pleased in my time to give it so far as it is within my power. I think I understand the character of the bill quite thoroughly, and may be able to satisfy gentlemen who wish to ask questions or have doubts in reference to it.

Mr. MILNES. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. SAYERS. Certainly.

Mr. MILNES. There is an item, I see, on page 94 of the bill, appropriating $200,000 for the construction of a soldiers' home at Danville, Ill. Can the gentleman give some information with reference to the necessity for that work?

Mr. SAYERS. I will say in regard to that item that the Board which has charge of the Soldiers' Homes throughout the country, with General Franklin at its head, came before the Subcommittee on Appropriations and expressed their opinion that we would have to do one of two things, either to build a new home or to expend fully as much as is appropriated here for the extension of those Homes already in existence. Gentlemen can examine the testimony of General Franklin and others who have expressed an opinion.

Mr. MILNES. But why was it fixed at Danville, Ill., in place of some other point?

Mr. SAYERS. Oh, well, the gentleman can ask some one else that question.

Mr. MILNES. Does any member of the Committee on Appropriations reside at Danville?

Mr. SAYERS. The gentleman need not ask me that. He knows who it is. Why does he not in a bold and direct manner assault the proposition if it be an improper one?

Mr. MILNES. I have not had an opportunity.

Mr. SAYERS. The gentleman will have an opportunity.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Does the gentleman know of a better place for the construction of this home than Danville?

Mr. MILNES. I do not think it necessary to build it at Danville or anywhere else.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Were you present at the taking of the testimony with reference to it?

Mr. MILNES. No, sir; I was not.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Do you not think you ought to have been if you object to this appropriation for that purpose?

Mr. MILNES. No, sir.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, it is immaterial to me what policy the House may adopt in reference to the item in question. Gentlemen will readily perceive why I should not seek to reject an item reported favorably by the Committee on Military Affairs or to criticise an item which concerns the survivors of the Union Army during the late war.

Mr. PAYNE. If this appropriation is made at all, is it not necessary that the home shall be built in somebody's district?

Mr. SAYERS. Undoubtedly.

I yield five minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PEARSON].

Mr. PEARSON. Mr. Speaker, I am greatly indebted to the gentleman from Texas for his courtesy, and I desire to say in absolute candor that I know my remarks will be unavailing on this occasion. I know that this bill is going to pass, and my object in rising is simply to express my opposition to the method by which it is to be passed, and to ask, furthermore, if the river and harbor bill or the features of it embodied in this bill are meritorious, why can not they be allowed to stand on their own merit and footing; and, if necessary, why should the bill embodying these items not run the gantlet of a Presidential veto?

The feeling I have with reference to the matter is that it is an improper way of legislating. That there are many meritorious items in the bill I do not pretend to question; that there are many indispensable appropriations embodied in it is beyond all doubt. But the objection I have is that the bad ones and unjustifiable ones are to be dragged through by being tied to the good ones. That seems hardly fair, particularly when we have no opportunity to move to strike out any portions of the bill to which these objections lie. If I had an opportunity, I think I could convince gentlemen of the impropriety of passing certain items in the bill. But I am bound hand and foot, and it is simply by courtesy that I am even occupying the floor for the few minutes now at my disposal.

Mr. Speaker, if I had the opportunity, I would move to strike out the appropriation of $400,000 fixed in the bill for the improvement of the mouth of the very river upon which I was born, because I know that it is a useless and an extravagant appropriation. I have appealed to you on this floor for a measure expediting the mails in my section that I knew to be a wise and a meritorious one. But I certainly would not ask what is proposed by this bill, the sum of $400,000, for the improvement of Winyaw Bay, South Carolina. The collector of customs only takes in $356 a year, and it will be two million years before he will take in enough to pay the amount of the appropriation provided by this bill, which is only a beginning of the outlay.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. Where is Winyaw Bay?

Mr. PEARSON. It is about 3,000 miles from Keweenaw Bay, for which an appropriation of $400,000 is also made [laughter], and about a thousand miles from the Yazoo River, which gets $400,000, and about the same distance from Bayou Plaquemine, in Louisiana, which also gets $400,000 [laughter]. And let me say, respectfully, that I mean no personal aspersion on the members of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, but it is a strange fact, and will be recognized as a fact by the country, that almost every member of the committee has a $400,000 appropriation for some place, more or less obscure, in his own State or district. If these things are meritorious, why not have the manhood to put them upon their passage on their own merits, and not tie them up in this congeries of enormities, in which you can not separate the good from the bad?

Mr. CATCHINGS. May I ask my friend a question?

Mr. PEARSON. In a moment. Here are sixteen several appropriations of $400,000 each; but I desire to say, in justice to the chairman of the committee, that he is more modest than the others, and takes only $398,258 for a place called Dunkirk, which I suppose is the beginning of indefinite appropriations for an unknown time in the future.

Mr. SAYERS. The gentleman refers to the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, of course.

Mr. PEARSON. Yes, sir. There are other things in this bill that I should like to oppose, but I have not time. There is an appropriation here of $50,000 to employ spies in my district. I should like to antagonize that.

Mr. SAYERS. That is about the best appropriation in the bill.

Mr. PEARSON. The gentleman says that because he lives so far to the Southwest that he does not know the needs of the civilized and enlightened community where this moonshine liquor is made. [Laughter.]

Mr. SAYERS. That is the best appropriation in the bill.

Mr. PEARSON. Now, I want to say this: Why not allow this river and harbor bill to go to the President as a separate measure and meet the objections he will make to it? Here it is tied up and bound up in such a way that it means, and is obliged to mean, extravagant appropriations for unworthy places. I would vote for every one of these important points, and for as much money as is required. But it is hard on me to have to vote either against the whole bill——

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. PEARSON. Why, certainly.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. What particular river was it you were anxious to have an appropriation made for and failed?

Mr. PEARSON. I have never asked for any appropriation for any river. I will say to the gentleman that I live in the Land of the Sky, where we are innocent of harbors and guiltless of rivers.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I understood the gentleman to say that he tried to get an appropriation and failed.

Mr. PEARSON. On the contrary, I was with the gentleman in asking an appropriation for a deserving facilitation of mails in that country, because I knew that that was worthy and that it would do good.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Oh, yes.

Mr. PEARSON. But I am opposed to such legislation as this, when it does not stand on its own merits, and will not bear the light of discussion nor the test of examination and amendment.

Mr. CANNON. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE].

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Speaker, if the sundry civil subcommittee had given less consideration to the details of this bill, had gone over it hurriedly, as some of the members have who are criticising it, we might have been able to get it into the House much earlier; but the fact is that that committee has been wrestling with that bill ever since the session of this Congress began. I think I am correct in that statement, that very soon after this session began the chairman of the committee called the subcommittee together and submitted this bill to them. We have done the best we could, and made all the speed we could.

Now, in reference to the manner of passing the bill, let me say that we have got only two weeks, practically, of this session remaining. There are other bills that have not been acted upon yet. There are plenty of precedents for attempting to pass this bill under a suspension of the rules. The Fifty-second Congress passed a number of its appropriation bills under a suspension of the rules.

Mr. SAYERS. Only one.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. What one was that?

Mr. SAYERS. That was the legislative, executive, and judicial bill, which is made up simply of salaries.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Very well—and the Fifty-third Congress——

Mr. SAYERS. Not one.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. The Fifty-third Congress was obliged to pass what is known as the Wilson tariff bill, not under a suspension of the rules, but under an order, where only a majority vote was required, with two hours' debate. I find no fault with that. It became necessary, in order to enact that measure into law, and it is necessary now, in the judgment of the committee, if you want this bill to become a law, to pass it under a suspension of the rules.

There is nothing in the bill that the committee have to fear. We believe that the bill would pass, with all of its present items in it, under the five-minute rule. The only thing that could change it would be some probable additions; but it would consume a week of time, and then it must go to the Senate. The Senate have ever exercised their judgment in reference to additions to the sundry civil bill. Then it would have to come back to the House and be reconsidered here. So that it is not a question of the items or the discussion, or the manner of the consideration of the items in the bill, but it is a question of the passage of the bill.

Mr. QUIGG. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Now I yield to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. QUIGG. I would like to ask the gentleman if there is anything in the bill anywhere that would be amenable to a point of order under the five-minute debate?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Not in my judgment. I do not think there is.

Mr. QUIGG. I think there is a great deal.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I do not think so. This bill has been debated under general debate for a whole day. The objectionable items, as a matter of course, were those considered in the discussion on Saturday.

Mr. MILNES. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Yes.

Mr. MILNES. Do you not think that this item on page 94 for the building of a new soldiers' home is subject to a point of order?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. No; and I will tell you why.

Mr. MILNES. Is it not new legislation?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. General Franklin, of the Board of Managers of Soldiers' Homes, was called before that committee, and if the gentleman had read his testimony he would have found the reason for that item in this bill. He testified that the soldiers in these Homes were so crowded that they had to sleep in the dining room, in the kitchen, and in the corridors—two, three, four, or five thousand men, who are distributed to different places with no accommodation.

Mr. STEELE. The Committee on Military Affairs had considered the matter.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. The Committee on Military Affairs had this matter before them, and fully considered it. The testimony before both of these committees was that either one of two things must be done, or else these old soldiers would have to go into the streets—either we would have to enlarge the present Homes or construct a new one. The testimony before the Board, and the opinion of both these committees, was that it was far more expedient to construct a new home than to expend the same amount of money in enlarging the existing Homes. First, the Committee on Military Affairs deemed this more expedient; and second, the subcommittee, and third, the full Committee on Appropriations, deemed it more expedient to construct a new home. The question of location may be a question open to criticism. The testimony of General Franklin was that it should be located in the Mississippi Valley. This point of Danville was the only point ever suggested or considered. If the gentleman had objected to it, he would have been heard. We would have been glad to hear the gentleman.

Mr. MILNES. I did not know anything about it then.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. The gentleman seems to know a very great deal about it now.

Mr. MILNES. I know more about it since the bill has been printed.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Give me another minute.

Mr. CANNON. I yield another minute to my colleague.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. The time to object was when the committee was considering the matter; and there was no objection. The sessions of the committee were not secret. We heard everybody who wished to be heard. It seems to be an available place. Danville is a city of from 10,000 to 20,000 people, and they have all the facilities for the accommodation of a soldiers' home. From all the testimony before the committee, and from all the information the committee could obtain, it was supposed to be the best place and the most convenient for this purpose.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CANNON. Does the gentleman from Texas desire to use all his time?

Mr. SAYERS. You can consume the balance of your time.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman does not desire to consume any further time?

Mr. SAYERS. No.

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Speaker, if I can have the attention of the House, I think I can say in a very few minutes what I desire. I was pleased to hear my colleague on the committee [Mr. SAYERS] representing the minority bear testimony that he did about this bill. He is on the subcommittee that helped to prepare it and on the full committee that considered it. I do not feel called upon, after his statement, to discuss the matters which he referred to. I agree with him on every item of the bill that he referred to; and I am not now referring to the river and harbor items. I will speak of them in a moment.

I have helped to prepare many appropriation bills, and I undertake to say that, considering the condition of the Treasury and the increase of appropriations, I never helped to prepare any bill that has been so thoroughly and exhaustively examined touching every item as this bill. So that it is not necessary for me to speak of the propriety of the items that the gentleman from Texas indorses, which includes every item except the river and harbor items. We discussed those items Saturday. Gentlemen know about them. The legislation that begat them, that breathed the breath of life into them, gave them vitality, was had almost one year ago, and these recommendations follow as a logical sequence in pursuance of law. Now, we omitted over $3,000,000 that some gentlemen seem to think might well have been put in, because it seems that the works, as I explained on Saturday, can not be completed under the authorization. We omitted Yakima Bay entirely, because, as I have explained, independent of whether we make the appropriation, not one cent of it could be expended during the coming year. Now, I do not care to thrash over old straw. The law is there, and the committee in reporting this $15,000,000, which explains the increase, followed the law under the rules of the House. That is all I desire to say, and having said that, however, I will speak of one other matter. I do not believe there is one item in this bill that, if the Committee of the Whole had considered it under the five-minute rule, would have gone out. Possibly others might have gone on; I do not know.

Mr. PEARSON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him——

Mr. CANNON. I have not time. The gentleman has had an opportunity to address the House. Now, in view of these facts, why take from three to five days to consider this bill when there is but little over two weeks remaining of the session? It is a great bill. The committee have put two months and a half work upon it, faithful work; the Senate must perform its work upon it in two weeks. We want time for consideration of this bill in detail, not as it stands now, but as it will stand with the Senate amendments when it comes back to this House. Then will be the time for real discussion. Then will be the necessity for consideration, as we may agree with the Senate or disagree with the Senate. If we consume from three to five days in useless discussion now, we shall not have any time to consider the new and important amendments that the Senate may put upon the bill, and the whole matter will have to be disposed of practically without discussion. From every standpoint, therefore, for good legislation, for desirable results, it is wise to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

Mr. LACEY. May I ask a question for information?

Mr. CANNON. Let me complete my statement, and then if I have time I will yield to the gentleman. A word now in answer to the remark addressed by the gentleman from Michigan to the gentleman from Pennsylvania. This bill does contain an item of $200,000 for the construction of a branch soldiers' home. It does locate that home in the State of Illinois, in the county of Vermilion, in "the town of Danville." That was done after full investigation. It was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and it came to the House with a favorable and unanimous report from that committee, so that we felt fully justified in putting it in this bill.

What are the facts? For many years the inmates of these Homes have increased in numbers from year to year, and are increasing. A great many die, but, as the years go on, the number of veterans who become disabled is greater than the number who die. They are overcrowded, sleeping in corridors—not good for the health, not good for comfort. Two thousand of them that were entitled to relief under the law had to be turned away during the last fiscal year. The committee believed, following the policy of the Government, that an additional home ought to be authorized. We could, to be sure, add to some of the existing Homes, but they are already completed, and it would be necessary to add to everything, hospitals, barracks, quarters, and the decision of the managers, and of others familiar with the subject, was that there are quite enough inmates—from 2,500 to 4,500—now in the existing Homes, and that it would be better to supply additional accommodations by erecting a new home. That being determined upon, it was decided to locate the home as it appears in the bill, and I suppose if that had not been done, the item would not have provoked attention or criticism here.

This new home, if this bill becomes a law, will be located in the county which I represent and in which I reside. I will put in my remarks in the RECORD the report of the Committee on Military Affairs, which shows the wisdom of that selection. It is a center of soldier population. There is good water, good sanitary sewerage, good railway communication, cheap fuel—all the requisites for maintaining the home at a minimum. If the location is to be criticised, I assume the responsibility of it so far as I am concerned. I say to this House candidly that in a quarter of a century's service in the House of Representatives, coming from an agricultural district which has been kind to me, I have, through all these years, assisted in legislation from the standpoint of an American citizen and an American Representative. Chicago, the Great Lakes, the Mississippi River, the great seaports, whenever appropriations were to be made for the promotion of their legitimate interests, I have, according to my best judgment, in the service of my country, voted for them, and my people have not grumbled. Along the line of the public service, a branch soldiers' home ought now to be constructed, and it is along the line of a wise public service, and the location is as good as any other—aye, in my opinion, better than any other—I did ask that that location be written in the bill. It was approved by two great committees of the House, and if there be sin, I am ready to answer for it. [Loud applause.] That is all I desire to say.

Mr. LACEY. I desire to ask the gentleman a question for information. It is claimed that in the river and harbor part of this bill there are a number of appropriations that are not embraced in the continuing contracts. Can the gentleman state approximately how much is added to this bill over and above the items providing for existing contracts?

Mr. CANNON. Not a cent.

Mr. LACEY. Then every item here is under contract?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, no. There are five works under contract, and nearly all the others are advertised and ready to let. There could be no money expended until the 1st of July, but there is authority to contract whether money is appropriated or not, and these appropriations are available on the 1st of July next for the coming fiscal year.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. And the Secretary of War testified that he would need all this money during the fiscal year.

Mr. CANNON. Yes; the engineer officer testified that he would need during the coming fiscal year every dollar that is recommended for those purposes in this bill.

Mr. LACEY. My point is this: We passed last year a river and harbor act in which a large amount of money was included, covering a period of years, and also providing for contracts. Now, this bill includes those contracts——

Mr. CANNON. The bill is in precise accord with the river and harbor act.

Mr. LACEY. But, in addition to what was provided for in the express terms of the river and harbor act, what has been added?

Mr. CANNON. Not a cent.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. On the contrary, three important projects are left out.

Mr. CANNON. There are four important projects left out.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Four dams in my own district were cut out that are provided for in the river and harbor bill. [Laughter.]

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] has a few minutes remaining, and in that time I want to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] if he has not omitted to speak of what is considered by many wise and discerning persons the best feature of the bill, the provision for the republication of an edition of Messages and Papers of the Presidents. [Laughter.] I think that if the gentleman will call attention to that feature of the bill, it will assist him in passing this measure. [Laughter.] Being the author of that compilation, I feel too modest to speak of its merits myself.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, on examination, we approved of the Messages and Documents and put the item in the bill. It is a work of great merit. In addition to that, it is fair that I should say—for I do not quite agree with my good friend from Pennsylvania—that there is no material legislation in this bill. There is some legislation touching the occupation of the post-office building down on the Avenue, and some other matters, but it is all for the benefit of the public service and it is necessary in connection with the proper expenditure of the money appropriated.

And there is also an item of legislation here that gives (from substantially the volumes now in the War Department) the War Records to Representatives who have not received the same a copy. It can be done without very much cost, certainly not exceeding $1,000.

Mr. TERRY. Is there anything in it about the republication of the Horse Book? [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. No, sir; we are letting the horse rest now.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I wish to insert the report by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. TRACEY] on the subject of the Branch Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers. It is as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10267) to provide for the location and erection of a Branch Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, having considered the same, report it back to the House of Representatives with the recommendation that it do pass.

The National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers has seven Branches, located, respectively, at Togus, Me.; Hampton, Va.; Dayton, Ohio; Marion, Ind.; Milwaukee, Wis.; Leavenworth, Kans., and Santa Monica, Cal. The soldiers entitled to admission to the Home have increased steadily in number year by year. The average number cared for in the Home in the fiscal year 1892 was 14,196; in 1893, 14,561; in 1894, 15,601; in 1895, 16,480, and in 1896, 17,454.

The Branch Homes most recently erected are those at Santa Monica, Cal., authorized in 1887, and at Marion, Ind., authorized in 1888. The Homes have not at any time been of sufficient capacity to accommodate the disabled soldiers who are entitled under the law to admission. Many such soldiers have been turned away because lack of accommodation forbade their admission, and all the Homes have been overcrowded in the endeavor to admit those whom it seemed impossible to turn away, with due regard to ordinary humanity and the object for which the Home was established.

Congress has from time to time increased the capacity of the several Branch Homes, until now it is impossible further to increase their capacity unless complete additions are made to one or more of them, which would cost as much as the construction of an additional Branch Home. It is absolutely necessary that additional accommodation be provided for those ex-soldiers who are entitled to relief if the Board of Managers are to meet the obligations resting upon them under the policy which the law seems to dictate. And it seems clear that it is not good policy further to increase the capacity of the present Branch Homes.

Another Branch Home can be constructed for, say, $300,000 that will accommodate 2,500 inmates, and if this is authorized and the money made immediately available $200,000 can be economically expended against the 1st of December next, and accommodations provided for 1,600 inmates; and during the succeeding season, by the expenditure of $100,000 additional, accommodations can be furnished for 900 more inmates, making 2,500 inmates in all.

The public sentiment of the country, in the opinion of the committee, demands that proper and adequate provision be made for the care and comfort of the volunteer soldiers and sailors of the Union who are now no longer able to care for themselves; and such care should be given when it is needed, and it is needed now.

It further appears to the committee that while the per cent of death rate of soldiers of the late war increases from year to year, the per cent of disability of the survivors increases in greater proportion.

The Branch Home at Marion, Ind., was located under an act which provided for its establishment in the county of Grant, Ind., in which Marion is situated. The committee, after inquiry, are of opinion that the provision in the bill locating the proposed new branch in the county of Vermilion, Ill., is apt and proper.

This location is near the center of the ex-soldier population of the Mississippi Valley. It is situated 124 miles south of Chicago, 224 miles east of Quincy, Ill., where is located the Illinois State Soldiers' Home, and 155 miles southwest of Toledo, Ohio. It is in substantially the same latitude as Dayton, where is located the Central Branch of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, and is southwest from the Marion Home. The distance from Vermilion County to Marion is greater than the distance between Marion and Dayton.

Vermilion County is in the center of the best coal field in the West, which is now being largely developed, and cheap fuel is a certainty for a branch home located in that county. The Vermilion River and its tributaries water the county, the former at a depth of 75 to 80 feet below the average level of the country surrounding, thus assuring good drainage. The city of Danville, the county seat of Vermilion County, has a first-class water supply and sanitary sewerage, with all the modern improvements of a well-regulated city, and in addition it is a railway center, whence are thoroughly reached the States of Indiana, Illinois, Missouri, and Iowa. Danville is also in the center of a great agricultural region, and the subsistence and maintenance of a branch soldiers' home in that vicinity doubtless can and would be had at a minimum of expense.

The SPEAKER. The time for debate having expired, the question is, Will the House suspend the rules and pass the bill?

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. PEARSON. Mr. Speaker, I demand a division.

The SPEAKER. Those in favor of the motion will rise and be counted.

Before the result of the affirmative was announced,

Mr. PEARSON. Mr. Speaker, I call for the yeas and nays. It will expedite the matter.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, no; take your division first, and then have the yeas and nays.

Mr. PEARSON. No; it is simply a waste of time. The yeas and nays are what we are after.

The yeas and nays were refused, there being only 33 members voting in favor of the demand and 153 against—not one-fifth joining in the demand.

So the motion to suspend the rules was agreed to (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) and the bill was passed. [Applause.]

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I desire to report back from the Committee on Agriculture the Senate amendments to the Agricultural appropriation bill, and move to nonconcur in all of the amendments and ask a committee of conference on the disagreeing votes.

The SPEAKER. The amendments will be read at length.

The Senate amendments to the bill (H. R. 9961) making appropriations for the Agricultural Department, etc., were read at length.

The SPEAKER. What is the gentleman's motion?

Mr. WADSWORTH. That the House nonconcur in the Senate amendments and ask for a committee of conference.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER announced as conferees on the part of the House Mr. WADSWORTH, Mr. HENRY of Connecticut, and Mr. CLARDY.

RIGHT OF WAY THROUGH CHIPPEWA AND WHITE EARTH INDIAN RESERVATIONS, MINN.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Indian Affairs, I desire to move to suspend the rules and pass the joint resolution (S. R. 121) to amend an act granting to the Duluth and Winnipeg Railroad Company a right of way through the Chippewa and White Earth Indian reservations, in the State of Minnesota.

The SPEAKER. The joint resolution will be read.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That section 5 of an act entitled "An act granting to the Duluth and Winnipeg Railroad Company a right of way through the Chippewa and White Earth Indian reservations, in the State of Minnesota," approved August 27, 1894, be, and the same is hereby, amended by striking out the word "three" and inserting the word "five," and inserting the words "or its legal successor, the Duluth, Superior and Western Railroad Company;" so that the bill will read:

"SEC. 5. That the right herein granted shall be forfeited by said company or its legal successor, the Duluth, Superior and Western Railroad Company, unless the road shall be constructed through the said reservations within five years after the passage of this act."

Mr. DOCKERY. I ask a second on that motion.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. DOCKERY. Will the gentleman please explain the provisions of this resolution?

Mr. SHERMAN. This is simply a resolution extending for two years the right heretofore granted by Congress to this railroad company to construct its road through the Indian reservations therein named. The bill has already passed the Senate, and has been approved by the Department.

Mr. DOCKERY. Is it approved by the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir; by the Department.

Mr. PAYNE. Is this in the usual form of such bills?

Mr. SHERMAN. It is, and contains the reservation that is ordinarily provided in legislation of this character.

Mr. BLUE. Will the gentleman permit me a question?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLUE. Is any provision inserted with reference to compensation or the right of way across this reservation?

Mr. SHERMAN. This does not change in the least the original act, but simply extends the time for the construction of the road two years.

Mr. BLUE. Did the original act make any such provisions?

Mr. SHERMAN. I am not able to state its exact provisions in that particular, but they are either identical or substantially so with all bills of this character. They all carry provision for compensation.

Mr. BLUE. If it is not in the original act, I do not think that this provision of law should be passed without such a requirement on the part of this company.

Mr. SHERMAN. This is identical in character, if not in words, with similar bills heretofore passed.

I ask a vote, unless some other gentleman wishes to discuss the matter.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. SHERMAN; and (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill passed.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEY FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 3666) to remove doubts as to the power of the supreme court of the District of Columbia to provide for a vacancy in the office of attorney of the United States for the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON], by direction of the Committee on the Judiciary, moves to suspend the rules and pass a bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in case of a vacancy in the office of attorney of the United States for the District of Columbia, the supreme court of said District may fill the same, and the person appointed by said court shall serve until an appointment is made by the President and the appointee is duly qualified, and no longer.

Mr. DOCKERY. I ask for a second, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. HENDERSON. I ask that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is now open for debate for twenty minutes on a side. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] is recognized to control the time on one side and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] on the other.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I should like first to have the Clerk read the report of the committee, containing a letter from the chief justice of the supreme court of the District of Columbia.

The report (by Mr. HENDERSON) was read, as follows:

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred Senate bill 3666, having had the same under consideration, report the same back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Section 792 of the Revised Statutes makes provision for the appointment of district attorneys in case of vacancy, in all the States, but there is no provision made by law for the filling of a vacancy in the District of Columbia. Such vacancy has already occured in two several cases, and is liable to occur at any time, to the suspension of the public business and to the great injury of the District.

There is now a vacancy in that office in the District of Columbia concerning which the chief justice wrote the following letter:

Hon. DAVID B. HENDERSON,
Chairman Judiciary Committee, House of Representatives.

DEAR SIR: I am informed that the Senate passed an emergency bill yesterday, giving the supreme court, District of Columbia, the power to temporarily appoint a district attorney to fill a vacancy. It is very important that this bill should become a law at the earliest possible date. Could you not take charge of the bill and cause it to be passed by the House to-day, so that it may go to the President this evening for his approval, in order that the trial of criminal cases and the preparation thereof may proceed in this and the police court to-morrow?

Very respectfully,

E. F. BINGHAM, Chief Justice.

FEBRUARY 9, 1897.

This illustrates the necessity for action, and we believe that the bill is needed and ought to become a law.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire simply to add that a gentleman was sent by the chief justice to-day to say to me that there are some fifty prisoners awaiting trial. No one is there to look after their trial. The attorneys for the defendants are preparing writs of habeas corpus for the purpose of moving in the matter. I desire further to say that on Saturday last I had a talk with Mr. Harry Davis, whom I know well, and he said to me that the bill ought to pass promptly. I say this for the information of those who may think that there is a political bearing in it. There is not, I can assure gentlemen. It will have no effect whatever upon the situation of Mr. Davis's confirmation.

Mr. HULICK. Does this bill simply apply to this case, or does it apply to all cases that may possibly arise?

Mr. HENDERSON. It is a general law for the District of Columbia, not for this particular case at all.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. TURNER of Georgia. I did not quite hear the statement which the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] made. I desire to know to whom he referred when he said that some gentleman stated that this bill should pass by all means.

Mr. HENDERSON. I referred to Mr. Harry Davis, who has been appointed by the President to be United States district attorney, whose confirmation has been favorably recommended by the Senate committee, but which confirmation has not yet been made by the Senate. I met him at the President's reception, and talked freely with him about it, and he said that the bill ought to become a law, and would not interfere with his interests.

Mr. TURNER of Georgia. Can the gentleman state whether the supreme court has considered the question as to who should be appointed?

Mr. HENDERSON. I know nothing about that. I can not speak as to that.

Mr. TURNER of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I do not know the gentleman who has been nominated for this place, nor do I know the gentleman who was his predecessor. I have been informed, however, in a general way, that the district attorney whose term has just expired, was nominated and confirmed near the end of Mr. Harrison's Administration, and having proved himself to be a very acceptable officer has been allowed to serve out his term. I would therefore have supposed that it would not be an ungraceful thing for the present Senate to confirm his successor, although nominated by the present Executive. I know not the reason why that appointment has been delayed. It is perhaps improper to conjecture the motives or reason for the refusal of the Senate to take up that nomination and confirm it. But in view of the statement which the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] has just made, that the gentleman who has been nominated for the office of district attorney acquiesces in the propriety of this bill, I perhaps ought not to complain.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to yield to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. BLUE] such time as he desires.

Mr. BLUE. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to this measure because of the manner in which it comes to us for consideration at this time. It seems that from the creation of this court until now no provision has been made to meet an emergency of this character. A bill is now hastily passed through the other branch of the lawmaking power of this nation and sent to us, when a nomination has been made by the Executive and is pending there, which nomination, I understand, has received the approval of a majority of the committee to which it has been referred, and when there would seem to be no very good reason for delay.

This is a public question and not a private matter. It is a question that ought to be considered above and beyond any party advantage or party motives. The question is not whether Mr. Davis approves of this measure or disapproves of it. It is whether it is best for the lawmaking power to set the example and make a precedent in this matter now. I do not believe in shirking responsibility here or elsewhere. It seems to me that if responsibility was met as it should be met in the dispatch of the public business this measure would not be here at this time. The Executive has performed his part. He has done his whole duty; and this measure would not be here if the matter was treated as the public service demands. I trust that this body, in view of the surrounding circumstances, will put the mark of its disapproval on this measure and refuse to suspend the rules and pass it now.

The question was taken on suspending the rules and passing the bill; and in the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds voting in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

RESERVOIR SITES IN ARID LANDS.

Mr. CATCHINGS. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 1984) providing for the use and occupation of reservoir sites reserved by the Geological Survey.

Be it enacted, etc., That all reservoir sites reserved or to be reserved by the Geological Survey be open to entry and use and occupation under the right-of-way act of March 3, 1891.

Mr. CATCHINGS. Read the report with it, please.

Mr. TERRY. I would like to have a second.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. CATCHINGS. I ask that a second be considered as ordered.

Mr. TERRY. I would like to have a statement from the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman demands a second.

Mr. CATCHINGS. But, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman says he will be content if I make a statement, which I will do.

The SPEAKER. The question can not come before the House for consideration without a second.

Mr. TERRY. I do not withdraw the demand for a second, but I agree that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to have gentlemen understand that it is necessary that a second should be ordered in order that there should be any debate. If the gentleman from Arkansas desires to have debate, and does not desire to have any action on the part of the tellers, he may get unanimous consent from the House that a second be considered as ordered.

Mr. TERRY. I so understood. The only trouble was the gentleman from Mississippi was in error in stating that I withdrew the demand for a second. I was willing to permit the second to be considered as ordered. That was all.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. A second is therefore ordered; and the gentleman from Mississippi is entitled to twenty minutes for and the gentleman from Arkansas twenty minutes against the bill.

Mr. CATCHINGS. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the Clerk to read the report of the Committee on Public Lands first.

The report (by Mr. BOWERS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on the Public Lands has had under consideration the bill (H. R. 1984) to provide for the use and occupation of reservoir sites reserved by the Geological Survey, and recommends its passage with amendments herewith submitted.

The necessity for the passage of the bill is fully set forth in the letters of the Secretary of the Interior and of the Assistant Commissioner of the General Land Office, which are herewith printed and made a part of this report.

Amend the bill by striking out in line 3 the words "by the," and in line 4 the words "Geological Survey," and insert in lieu thereof the word "shall;" so that the bill shall read as follows:

"That all reservoir sites reserved or to be reserved shall be open to entry and use and occupation under the right-of-way act of March 3, 1891."

Also strike out of title the words "by the Geological Survey."

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, January 27, 1896.

SIR: I have the honor to hand you a report from the Assistant Commissioner of the General Land Office, dated the 18th instant, on H. R. 1984, entitled, "A bill to provide for the use and occupation of reservoir sites reserved by the Geological Survey."

There is now before this Department for determination the question whether or not the act of March 3, 1891 (26 Stat. L., 1095-1101), granting the right of way through the public lands and reservations to any canal or ditch company formed for the purpose of irrigation, authorizes the entry and occupation of reservoir sites recommended for segregation or segregated by the Director of the Geological Survey under the act of August 3, 1890 (26 Stat. L., 371-391).

The question is not free from difficulty, and the passage of the bill in question would remove all doubt on the subject.

I see no objection to the passage of the bill.

Very respectfully,

HOKE SMITH,
Secretary.

Hon. JOHN F. LACEY,
Chairman Committee on the Public Lands,
House of Representatives.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., January 18, 1896.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt by reference from the Department of a letter from Hon. JOHN F. LACEY, chairman of the House Committee on the Public Lands, inclosing copies of two bills (H. R. 1984 and 1988) for report in duplicate and return of papers.

The bill H. R. 1984 is entitled "A bill to provide for the use and occupation of reservoir sites reserved by the Geological Survey," and reads as follows; "That all reservoir sites reserved or to be reserved by the Geological Survey be open to entry and use and occupation under the right of way act of March 3, 1891."

On November 23, 1895, I addressed a communication to the Department in the matter of the Blue Water Land and Irrigation Company, a copy of which is herewith inclosed, in which I expressed the opinion that these sites are now subject to the operation of this act, and set forth my reasons for so ruling, although my predecessor had heretofore held differently. This question is now before you for consideration, and the report on this bill will depend upon the decision thereon. If the Department holds that the act is applicable to these reservoir sites, there will be no need of the bill; but if the Department holds otherwise, or is in doubt on the subject, I would recommend that a favorable report be made upon the bill for the reasons stated in my letter of November 23, 1895, as follows:

"Two objects controlled in the selection of these sites by the Geological Survey: (1) The availability of the site itself and (2) the desirability of the particular lands to be irrigated from the body of lands made susceptible of irrigation by the storage of water in such reservoirs. But these are not the only locations that can be successfully used to store water for the irrigation of these same lands, and if these sites can not be appropriated under the act of March 3, 1891, other sites will be selected for the storage and distribution of the water for the irrigation of the same lands under less economical conditions, which will result in rendering the selection by the Geological Survey absolutely valueless, for the reason that all the available supply of water in that particular region is stored and utilized by the constructed reservoir. In fact, locations for reservoirs have been selected and approved under the act of March 3, 1891, either because the site was supposed to be more advantageous than the site selected by the Government or because the appropriation of such sites was denied under the right-of-way act, which has resulted in rendering the site selected by the Geological Survey of no practical use for the purposes contemplated by its segregation."

The report on the bill (H. R. 1988) will be made in a separate letter.

Very respectfully,

E. F. BEST, Assistant Commissioner.

The SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

Mr. CATCHINGS. Mr. Speaker, this bill has been favorably reported by the Committee on Public Lands. It was referred by that committee to the Secretary of the Interior, a letter from whom to the committee has been read, from which it appears that he has no objection to the passage of the bill. In October, 1888, Congress undertook to deal to some extent with the arid lands of the Western States by passing a law requiring that—

For the purpose of investigating the extent to which the arid region of the United States can be redeemed by irrigation, and the segregation of the irrigable lands in such arid region, and for the selection of sites for reservoirs and other hydraulic works necessary for the storage and utilization of water for irrigation and the prevention of floods and overflows.

And it was provided that—

All the lands which may hereafter be designated or selected by such United States surveys for sites for reservoirs, ditches, or canals for irrigation purposes, and all the lands made susceptible of irrigation by such reservoirs, ditches, or canals are from this time henceforth hereby reserved from sale as the property of the United States, and shall not be subject after the passage of this act to entry, settlement, or occupation until further provided by law.

Under this legislation great bodies of land were reserved.

Congress at that time evidently had an intent to enter upon a great system of irrigation through these reservations in the arid regions. In 1890, however, nothing further having been done—in fact, the original purpose having been abandoned by Congress—a law was passed permitting the lands capable of being irrigated from these reservations to be entered as other public lands are, but still withholding from actual settlement the sites which had been segregated by the Geological Survey. In 1891 another law was passed, by which it was provided that all public reservations might be made use of by corporations, individuals, or associations for the purpose of constructing reservoirs and irrigating ditches. It was known, and is now known, that that act itself is insufficient; that by the terms of the act all these reservoir sites which have been separated and segregated are in a condition that they can not be made use of for the purpose of the construction of reservoirs by private individuals. That matter being in doubt, this bill was introduced. The Secretary of the Interior being in doubt, he declined to approve locations upon these reservoir sites.

This bill simply permits the real intention of Congress, as evidenced by the act of 1891, to be carried into effect. My information is that the people in the Western States are very much concerned in the passage of this bill. Some 138 sites have been selected for reservoirs there. They are sites that the Government proposes not to make use of, and under the construction of the Interior Department no one can make use of them. In addition to that, Mr. Speaker, in many cases——

Mr. TERRY. Let me ask the gentleman right there what particular corporations are seeking to have this concession made—what reservoir company or companies?

Mr. CATCHINGS. This bill was not introduced at the instance of any corporation. It was introduced by the gentleman from California [Mr. JOHNSON] who is the representative of a very large part of this arid country. The Land Office is extremely anxious for the passage of this bill. Judge Best, the Assistant Commissioner, came to see me on Saturday and asked if something could not be done to get this bill passed so as to provide for the irrigation of these lands.

Mr. TERRY. Are there any privileges granted by the bill tending to create a monopoly?

Mr. CATCHINGS. Not at all. The bill simply provides that anybody can make use of these sites for the purpose of constructing reservoirs under suitable regulations to be prescribed by the Interior Department. There is nothing whatever of an improper character in the bill. It simply permits persons who choose to invest their capital in that way to go upon these sites and construct irrigating ditches for the irrigation of these thousands of acres of arid lands.

Mr. TERRY. I have understood that in some instances out West water companies have abused the powers granted to them, and have set up monopolies and shut off people who ought to have access to the water.

Mr. CATCHINGS. That may be; but if so, it must have been done under some State law, because we have never had any Congressional legislation which would permit it to be done. The law as it stands is largely ineffectual. In many instances persons desiring to construct reservoirs, not being able to make use of the identical sites segregated for that purpose, have gone above them on the water courses and constructed reservoirs, thereby rendering useless the sites set apart by the Government, though, of course, that has been done at a great sacrifice of economy. There can be no reasonable objection to the passage of this bill. I have talked with the Assistant Commissioner of the Land Office and he desires its passage. I have no earthly personal interest in it, but I regard it as a great public measure which should be enacted by Congress. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, I yield now to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, for the first time my attention is called to this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will suspend for a moment. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CATCHINGS] has sent a bill to the desk which has been read. The report upon the bill indicates that certain amendments are proposed by the committee.

Mr. CATCHINGS. My motion was intended to cover those amendments, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Then the gentleman's motion is that the bill be amended and then passed?

Mr. CATCHINGS. Yes.

Mr. DOCKERY. Let us hear the amendments.

Mr. CANNON. I would ask in what respect the bill is proposed to be amended?

Mr. CATCHINGS. They are in accordance with the suggestions of the Committee on Public Lands.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the bill by striking out in line 3 the words "by the" and in line 4 the words "Geological Survey" and insert in lieu thereof the word "shall;" so that the bill will read as follows:

"That all reservoir sites reserved or to be reserved shall be opened to entry, use, and occupation under the right-of-way act of March 3, 1891."

Also strike out of the title the words "by the Geological Survey."

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Speaker, there is the size of this bill [holding it up], and the House has just heard the proposed amendments. They strike out the words "Geological Survey" and make the bill general, throwing open every reservoir site that was selected by that Survey to entry by anybody, without restriction. One would think that so important a bill would deserve a larger report. Now, let me call the attention of the gentleman from Mississippi and of the House to a little bit of history touching this matter, as I recollect it. About the years 1886–87, or possibly 1888, legislation was placed by Senate amendment on an appropriation bill reserving and taking out of the market every acre of land in the arid region.

Mr. CATCHINGS. No; the gentleman puts it a little too strongly. It was "all lands capable of being irrigated from the reservoirs so selected."

Mr. CANNON. Precisely. It took those lands from the market and reserved all reservoir sites. It threw upon the Geological Survey the duty of making surveys and locating the reservoir sites, and, if I recollect aright, many, many hundreds of thousands of dollars were appropriated and expended in those surveys and in ascertaining the reservoir sites. Later on that law was repealed, so as to stop the survey of sites, and all the arid lands except the reservoir sites were thrown open to the operation of the land laws. The contest over that repeal, which had been placed upon an appropriation bill, took a week's time in this House, as members who were here then will remember.

Now, what are the facts? The arid lands are worthless in themselves. Without water they are absolutely worthless. But water is to make them blossom. Where you can put water on the lands, they become valuable. Without the water, I repeat, they are of no value.

Gentlemen understand the trouble that has arisen between the States, and the States and the Territories, with reference to this very question of the use of water on these lands. There are many grave questions that are to be worked out in this matter. But, after all, this enormous expenditure for the reservoir sites, after they had been ascertained and marked out and reserved, here is legislation that will enable anybody, notwithstanding this expense, to locate a homestead.

Mr. CATCHINGS. Oh, no; if the gentleman will permit me. He is entirely mistaken.

Mr. CANNON. Very well, then; to buy the land.

Mr. CATCHINGS. No, sir; not to buy the lands. It simply permits him to enter and use them as reservoirs.

Mr. CANNON. What rights do they get under the bill?

Mr. CATCHINGS. Simply to use the sites for reservoir purposes. They do not acquire any title whatever to the lands.

Mr. CANNON. But they control it practically.

Mr. CATCHINGS. Not for homestead purposes.

Mr. CANNON. Here is the way it reads in your own bill:

Shall be opened to entry and use and occupation under the right-of-way act of March 3, 1891.

Mr. DOCKERY. What does that act do?

Mr. CANNON. What does it do? That is the question. I suppose God knows. I do not. Is it referred to in the report? No. Has any information been given as to it? None whatever. I undertake to say, however, on my belief and on my information, that when you run it down you will find that the man who has been alert can avail himself of this provision, which disposes of this vast amount of Government expenditure, and can practically take the reservoir sites that may be worth a half million or a million of dollars for a nominal price, and levy, in perpetuity, a tax on the people who take the water from that site. I am quite willing, under apt legislation, to give the sites to the States, but I beg of the House to inquire closely and hesitate long before they throw away this work of the Government, done already at such a great expense, and allow this exceedingly valuable property to be had for a song and enjoyed in perpetuity by individuals.

This whole question in the arid regions ought to be intelligently and fairly taken up and exhausted. We ought to be careful how we mortgage the rights of the people who are to come after us, and place them, bound hand and foot, in the power of people who are swift under this generous legislation in obtaining these reservoir sites. Yet here it is gravely proposed, notwithstanding this past history, notwithstanding the condition which we all recognize to exist, by a motion to suspend the rules under twenty minutes' debate, when not twenty men in this House understand what is involved in the proposition—it is proposed to throw open every one of these sites to anyone who chooses to take possession of them at a nominal price.

I repeat, I beg the House to halt. I would ask the gentleman from Mississippi, because I know his great ability and purity of purpose upon the suggestion of the importance of the measure, to withdraw the motion for a suspension of the rules or change his motion to one giving a day for the consideration, when the whole matter can be discussed intelligently and understood.

Mr. CATCHINGS. I would suggest to the gentleman that I have offered the bill at the instance of the Land Office, and with the consent and approval of the Secretary of the Interior. These officers are supposed at least to be governed by the interests of the people and the Treasury.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, Mr. Speaker, all of us have been long enough in the service to understand that the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior and other bureau officers is often perfunctory, and I never carry out the recommendations of a bureau officer, and, least of all, the head of the Land Office, whoever may occupy that position, touching these great matters of interest, without the most searching investigation, because you will find that while proper in most instances, yet sometimes they are improperly recommended in the history of the legislation of this country, and the most mischievous measures may come to Congress blest with the recommendation of the head of a bureau.

I challenge the attention of the House that we dare not follow blindly in this important matter the recommendation of the head of any bureau.

Mr. DOCKERY. We ought to have time enough at least to read the act sought to be repealed.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, yes; I will beg—no, I will not beg, but I will suggest to the gentleman from Mississippi, and to the able gentleman at the head of the Committee on Public Lands as well [Mr. LACEY], although both of them may be satisfied with this as good policy—I appeal to them to change the motion to a motion to suspend the rules and assign a day for the consideration of this matter. If it is a good measure, it will stand safely upon its merits and endure full discussion and information. If it is a bad one, it ought not to be passed, and I believe, from what little light and knowledge I have gained from the committees to which I have referred, that it ought not to be enacted into law.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, how much time is left on this side?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has ten minutes.

Mr. TERRY. I reserve the time.

Mr. CATCHINGS. I will yield five minutes of my time to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] has informed the House that this is an exceedingly important matter, and so it is. He says, among other things, that a vast amount of money has been expended in the survey of these reservoir sites, and that now we propose to turn them over to private individuals without money and without price.

Mr. Speaker, these reservoir sites were surveyed a number of years ago, under legislation looking to the irrigation of the arid West by the National Government.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, no; my friend is mistaken about that.

Mr. MONDELL. When the Geological Survey was under the control of Mr. Powell, about 1890, there was a strong agitation throughout the West for the National Government to take up the great question of irrigation.

Mr. CANNON. My friend will allow me just to correct a misapprehension. I had charge of the bill that carried the appropriation for this survey, and I had charge of the bill upon which it was partially repealed, and I want to say to my friend he is in error. It never was the sentiment of Congress that the Government should undertake irrigation.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, it is possible that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] was never of the opinion that it was the sentiment of Congress that the Government should undertake irrigation; but this very legislation was passed on the recommendation of the Director of the Geological Survey, who favored the carrying out of vast irrigation projects by the General Government.

Mr. CANNON. My friend is again in error. The Director of that Survey opposed that scheme, and I think I speak within the bounds of my knowledge when I say that his head finally fell into the basket on account of that opposition.

Mr. MONDELL. Well, Mr. Speaker, if it is true that the Director of the Geological Survey was not in favor of carrying out these schemes of irrigation for the General Government, then it is all the more important that this legislation should pass. For, under the provisions of the law that the gentleman referred to, there were a number of reservoir sites surveyed in the Western States and Territories. There are none so surveyed in my State, but there are many scattered throughout the Western States and Territories. Those surveys were not made at an enormous cost to the General Government. I do not know just the amount which was used, but I am of the opinion that no great amount was so expended in all the years during which these surveys were being made. The intent was to find those places where reservoir sites could be located on a large scale, so as to best utilize the flood waters of streams. The consequence is that to-day, scattered throughout the Western States and Territories, there are a large number of reservoir sites, and under the present law there is no way in which those reservoir sites can be utilized.

Now, the question simply is whether the Congress intends in the future to spend millions and hundreds of millions of dollars in irrigation enterprises in the West, or whether it intends that the people of the arid West shall themselves furnish the capital for the carrying out of these great schemes. To-day, in a number of places where these reservoir sites have been surveyed by the Geological Survey, private capital has gone in and is seeking to utilize these sites, and if the General Government is not going to utilize the sites, then they should be turned over to the people, so that development may not be retarded. The entire Western country is interested in having these sites utilized.

Mr. CATCHINGS. How much time have I left, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has nine minutes remaining.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, when I first heard the reading of this bill, although it was a very short one, it occurred to me that it was making a very radical change in the policy of this Government in regard to the arid lands, a policy which it deliberately entered upon, a policy which it had spent a great deal of money in organizing and arranging for.

Now, there are no arid lands in my State, but I have been away out West at times, and I have heard the complaints of the ranchmen concerning the tyranny, extortion, and monopolistic oppression exercised by corporations controlling the water supply. And when I saw that, in addition to the rights already granted them under the act of 1891, they would be permitted under this law to lay their hands upon what the Government had set apart under and in the line of its established policy toward the arid lands of the great West, it occurred to me that it was not a proper measure to be passed under suspension of the rules.

Mr. CATCHINGS. May I ask my friend one question?

Mr. TERRY. In a moment. I trust that this House will not pass this bill under a suspension of the rules.

Mr. CATCHINGS. I will ask my friend if he is not aware that canal companies and individuals desiring to construct reservoirs can now go upon and use the public lands without exception, save only those reservoir sites which have been reserved under this survey?

Mr. TERRY. That is virtually what I have said, that these reservoir sites which have been reserved under the Geological Survey are all that the Government can now control in this matter. The Government has given away to canal and ditch companies all other rights, and I say, while the Government has got this much left that it can use for the protection of the ranchmen out in the great West, do not let us give that away under suspension of the rules. Let us have more time to consider it.

I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY].

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I only desire a moment in which to call the attention of the House to the fact that the bill which is sought to be amended or repealed by the proposition now pending is a bill of twenty-four sections, approved March 3, 1891. I do not know how many sections in that bill are affected by the pending proposition; but it does seem to me that a proposition which seems to be of such magnitude ought to be entitled to debate of more than forty minutes.

But what I wanted to say more especially was this: The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] stated, as I recall his language, that only about $20,000 had been appropriated heretofore by the Government for the segregation of these reservoir sites. I went at once to the room of the Committee on Appropriations, and was not able, of course, in the few moments I was absent from the Hall, to make any exhaustive examination; but I find the gentleman is wholly in error. In that cursory examination I find the Government appropriated for the purpose of segregating these reservoirs in the fiscal year 1889, $100,000. I find also, Mr. Speaker, that the Government appropriated for this purpose in the fiscal year 1890, $250,000. In other words, from this brief examination, which I do not think is complete, it appears that $350,000 has already been expended by the Government for the survey of these reservoir sites.

Mr. MONDELL. I would like to ask the gentleman was that in 1889?

Mr. DOCKERY. In the fiscal year 1889 the appropriation was $100,000; in the fiscal year 1890 the appropriation was $250,000. From this statement I submit that $350,000 has been appropriated. I do not assume that it covers all the appropriations that have heretofore been made; but I find these two appropriations on the sundry civil bill for those respective years.

Mr. MONDELL. I will say to the gentleman from Missouri that is all the greater reason why these reservoir sites should be utilized if it is not the purpose of Congress to appropriate hundreds of millions for these reservoirs.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, the Government having expended at least $350,000 for the purpose of segregating these reservoir sites, on a proposition of such a character as this it seems to be but just to this body that there should be more than forty minutes of debate. It may be, Mr. Speaker, on a full examination, possible that this bill will be found to be all right and that we should dispose of the reservations that have been segregated at the expense of the people, but it does seem to me if it is desired to press this bill to passage the motion ought to be changed so as to give the House a reasonable opportunity to examine the law which it is sought to repeal.

Mr. CATCHINGS. Will you take an hour on a side?

Mr. DOCKERY. I do not know anything about the question.

Mr. CATCHINGS. Others do, probably.

Mr. DOCKERY. I suggest to the gentlemen who have knowledge——

Mr. CATCHINGS. Mr. Speaker, if my friend will allow me, I will, with the consent of the House, amend my motion so that it shall provide that on Wednesday, after the Journal is read, this bill be debated for two hours, and then a vote be taken upon it. I have no objection to debate. I believe this to be a perfectly good bill, and will put my motion in that form.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that his motion may be changed so that the bill may be brought up on Wednesday morning after the reading of the Journal, discussed for two hours, and a vote then taken.

Mr. TERRY. It ought to be open also to amendment.

Mr. CATCHINGS. Of course I have no objection to the previous question being ordered on the bill and pending amendments. I want what is fair, and I want such disposition made of the bill as the House thinks best.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the proposition had better be put in this way, in view of a slight change in the rules in that regard: That this question be taken up on Wednesday after the reading of the Journal, and after two hours of debate, a vote then be had. Does the gentleman contemplate a two-thirds vote or a majority?

Mr. CANNON. Let it be a two-thirds.

Mr. CATCHINGS. I am perfectly willing for it to be considered in that way.

The SPEAKER. By a two-thirds vote, as suggested by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. TERRY. Subject to amendment.

The SPEAKER. Open to debate and amendments. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and accordingly it will be disposed of in the way mentioned.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE—BENOIT AGAINST BOATNER.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I call up for consideration the contested-election case of Alexis Benoit against Charles J. Boatner, from the Fifth Congressional district of Louisiana.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolutions.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Alexis Benoit was not elected a Representative to the Fifty-fourth Congress from the Fifth Congressional district of Louisiana on the 10th day of June, 1896, and is not entitled to the seat.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, the Clerk had better read the other resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Charles J. Boatner was elected a Representative to the Fifty-fourth Congress from the Fifth Congressional district of Louisiana on the 10th day of June, 1896, and is entitled to his seat.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask the adoption by the House of the resolutions reported by the committee.

The question was taken; and the resolutions were agreed to.

DISTRIBUTION OF RIFLES TO NATIONAL GUARDS.

Mr. MARSH. Mr. Speaker, I am instructed by the Committee on the Militia to move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 1169) authorizing the Secretary of War to issue Springfield rifles to each State and Territory for the National Guards thereof, in exchange for other rifles now held.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to issue to the governors of the several States and Territories such number of Springfield breech-loading rifles, caliber forty-five one-hundredths of an inch, as are now required for arming all of the regularly organized armed and equipped militia (generally known as the National Guard) of each State and Territory that are not already supplied with this arm: Provided, That each State or Territory be required on receipt of the new arms to turn into the Ordnance Department, United States Army (without receiving any money credit therefor), an equal number of the arms now in its possession, except its Springfield rifles, caliber forty-five one-hundredths of an inch.

SEC. 2. That each State and Territory shall hereafter make an annual return to the Secretary of War of all the arms issued to them under this or any former act of Congress as provided for in the act of February, 1887, making a permanent annual appropriation for arming and equipping the militia.

SEC. 3. That any State or Territory may, in addition to the stores and supplies issued under the provisions of this act and the act of February, 1887, purchase for the use of its National Guard or reserve militia, at regulation prices for cash at place of sale, such stores and supplies from any department of the Army as, in the opinion of the Secretary of War, can be spared.

Mr. McMILLIN. I demand a second.

Mr. MARSH. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. MARSH. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask that the report be read in my time.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1169) authorizing the Secretary of War to issue Springfield rifles to each State and Territory for the National Guards thereof in exchange for other rifles now held, have had the same under consideration and submit the following report thereon:

According to the statistics obtained by the military information bureau of the Adjutant-General's Office in the War Department, and the reports of the United States inspecting officers, the strength of the organized militia of the States and Territories and the District of Columbia, mostly known as the National Guard, is 112,879 men and officers. Of these there are in the infantry, 93,261; in the artillery, 5,045; in the cavalry, 4,952; special corps, 1,003; generals and generals' staffs, 1,422.

These are armed with Springfield rifles of various models from 1873 to 1884, calibers .50 and .45. They have also Peabody rifles of .45 caliber, Marlin rifles, Remingtons, caliber .50, Spencers, and Winchesters. The larger proportion are Springfields, many of which are reported as in bad condition, especially those of old models. So are such other arms as are no longer manufactured and which it is therefore difficult to repair.

There has been a continuous entreaty from many of the States for permission to turn in old rifles and receive in exchange therefor or receive as original issue modern Springfields, caliber .45.

While the question of a new magazine arm for the Regular Army was in suspense, the War Department was unwilling to issue these weapons except so far as they were called for under each State's share of the annual appropriation of $400,000. Now the new Krag-Jörgensen magazine rifle is being furnished to the Regular Army, which will be entirely supplied with it within about two months. This will involve the return to the arsenal of more than 20,000 Springfields, probably nearly all in serviceable condition.

For the purposes of this act there is an ample supply in store.

The total number of enlisted men of the infantry of the National Guard carrying rifles is about 100,000. A very considerable proportion of them have entirely serviceable Springfields, in good order. It is impossible now to state accurately the number of rifles that will be taken from the Springfield Arsenal under this act. The best available estimate says about 50,000.

The Springfield rifle of caliber .45, a single-shot breechloader, has a heavy bullet, which can not take so flat a trajectory nor so long a range as the new rifle of caliber .30, but it is still a very serviceable weapon, easily and quickly loaded, and can be fired very rapidly. It is of great importance that the militia or National Guard should have rifles of uniform model and caliber.

Much the larger proportion of the force is in very good condition, and in many States under excellent drill and discipline. In case of an emergency its ranks could be quickly recruited from men who have been honorably discharged from it within a few years past, and a total of 150,000 men could be put in the field who would rapidly approach a uniform standard of excellence and power.

It is thought best not to permit a return of the Springfields now in the hands of the organized militia. Such as need repairs can be easily put in order and returned to the militia, practically equivalent to new arms. No credit is to be given in money for the old rifles of other styles that may be turned in. Many of them will have no market value and will scarcely be worth transportation, but upon assuming title to them the Bureau of Ordnance might feel at liberty to sell them to anyone who would take them where they are.

The manufacture of the new Krag-Jörgensen magazine rifle will proceed with such rapidity as the appropriations will permit. In the meantime, it seems to be common sense that the superseded Springfield, a very good weapon, as we have said, should be issued to the Guard in accordance with their wishes and their repeated requests.

The military information division reports 9,945,043 as the total of citizens in the whole country liable to military duty in 1895.

The committee recommend the early passage of the bill.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman presenting this bill whether it is contemplated to manufacture any of these guns for distribution to the militia?

Mr. MARSH. My understanding is that there is a sufficient number of these guns now belonging to the Government to meet all the requirements of this bill.

Mr. PARKER. I can speak from knowledge; there are several hundred thousand of them.

Mr. McMILLIN. The report says that only about 20,000 have been turned in.

Mr. MARSH. The report says that upon the arming of the regular soldiers with the new Krag-Jorgensen guns, as the Department is now ready to do, there will be about 20,000 of these old guns turned in. It does not undertake to say how many of these Springfield rifles are now in the hands of the Ordnance Department, nor am I prepared at this moment to state the number.

Mr. McMILLIN. The reason I make the inquiry is this: I think that if this bill is to pass, inasmuch as the Springfield rifle is now obsolete and is being superseded in the Army by this new gun, there ought to be a provision in this bill that no expense shall be incurred for the manufacture of new guns of the Springfield pattern, but that the supply shall come entirely out of the stock now on hand; because if new guns are to be made, they ought to be of the most recent pattern.

Mr. MARSH. There is no authority whatever given in this bill for manufacturing more arms. It simply provides for the distribution of those that the Government now owns and that are not needed for the Regular Army.

Mr. McMILLIN. I listened to the reading and was unable to hear any provision in the bill which would prevent the manufacture of this old type of arms for distribution, and of course there ought not to be any further manufacture of them, as they are obsolete.

Mr. MARSH. I take it that the gentleman will agree with me that the Department would not have any right to manufacture unless there was legislation authorizing it.

Mr. McMILLIN. If the act is mandatory upon the Secretary of War to furnish these arms to the militia, and there is no inhibition against their manufacture, then manufacture would result inevitably from compliance with the law. I suppose the gentleman will have no objection to incorporating a proviso that the distribution contemplated by this bill shall be made wholly out of the arms on hand, or out of those on hand and those to be turned in as the new arms are supplied to the Regular Army.

Mr. MARSH. I certainly would have no objection to an amendment of that kind if it was at all necessary; but if the gentleman will read the bill he will see that there is nothing in it which obligates the Secretary of War to issue these arms. The Secretary is simply authorized to make the issue, and that certainly would not authorize him to expend public money in the manufacture of such arms. The object of the bill is to distribute the Springfield rifles to the militia, inasmuch as the regular soldiers have no longer any use for them. I yield the balance of my time, Mr. Speaker; and if no other gentleman desires to be heard, I ask that the bill be put upon its passage.

The rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

RELIEF OF CERTAIN OFFICERS AND ENLISTED MEN.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Committee on Military Affairs, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 2101) to provide for the relief of certain officers and enlisted men of the volunteer forces.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any person who was duly appointed or commissioned to be an officer of the volunteer service during the war of the rebellion, and who was subject to the mustering regulations at the time applied to members of the volunteer service, shall be held and considered to have been mustered into the service of the United States in the grade named in his appointment or commission from the date from which he was to take rank under and by the terms of his said appointment or commission, whether the same was actually received by him or not, and shall be entitled to pay, emoluments, and pension as if actually mustered at that date: Provided, That at the date from which he was to take rank by the terms of his said appointment or commission there was a vacancy to which he could be so appointed or commissioned, and his command had either been recruited to the minimum number required by law and the regulations of the War Department, or had been assigned to duty in the field, and that he was actually performing the duties of the grade to which he was so appointed or commissioned; or if not so performing such duties, then he shall be held and considered to have been mustered into service and to be entitled to the benefits of such muster from such time after the date of rank given in his commission as he may have actually entered upon such duties: Provided further, That any person held as a prisoner of war, or who may have been absent by reason of wounds, or in hospital by reason of disability received in the service in the line of duty, at the date of issue of his appointment or commission, if a vacancy existed for him in the grade to which so appointed or commissioned, shall be entitled to all the benefits to which he would have been entitled under this act if he had been actually performing the duties of the grade to which he was appointed or commissioned at said date: Provided further, That this act shall be construed to apply only in those cases where the commission bears date prior to June 20, 1863, or after that date when the commands of the persons appointed or commissioned were not below the minimum number required by then existing laws and regulations: And provided further, That the pay and allowances actually received for the period covered by the recognition extended under this act shall be deducted from the sums otherwise to be paid thereunder.

SEC. 2. That the heirs or legal representatives of any person whose muster into service shall be recognized and established under the terms of this act shall be entitled to receive the arrears of pay and emoluments due, and the pension, if any, authorized by law, for the grade to which recognition shall be so extended.

SEC. 3. That the pay and allowances of any rank or grade paid to and received by any military or naval officer in good faith for services actually performed by such officer in such rank or grade during the war of the rebellion, other than as directed in the fourth proviso of the first section of this act, shall not be charged to or recovered back from such officer because of any defect in the title of such officer to the office, rank, or grade in which such services were so actually performed.

SEC. 4. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. PAYNE and Mr. McMILLIN demanded a second.

Mr. HULL. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, this bill is simply reenacting a law which has been passed four times since the close of the war with a limitation of time. It was enacted for a period of three years, and each time at the expiration of that period it was reenacted by Congress for an additional three years. The War Department now recommends that it be reenacted without any limitation as to time. That is the only object of this bill, and the only change in the old law is the striking out of the limitation. Otherwise it is a reenactment of a law which has been on the statute books from 1884 to 1895. Almost all the men who could take advantage of it have been already remustered under the law. The provisions of the bill are intended to apply to men who were commissioned under the law where a vacancy existed and who performed the duty of the grade, but were not mustered at the proper time on account of being ill in hospital or being in prison. It is not intended to affect, and it does not affect, the very large class who were commissioned by governors of the different States to offices where no vacancies existed, where the companies were reduced below a minimum. The bill, I repeat, with the exception I have mentioned, is in the exact language of the statute which has been heretofore passed four times.

Mr. McMILLIN. Do I understand the gentleman to say that the officers to whom this bill applies have already had four different periods of three years each, aggregating twelve years, within which to avail themselves of the provisions of this law, and have not done it?

Mr. HULL. Yes, sir.

Mr. McMILLIN. Then this statute of limitation has been already annulled four times for their benefit?

Mr. HULL. If the gentleman chooses to call it a statute of limitation.

Mr. McMILLIN. It is a limitation.

Mr. HULL. Yes; and I will say to the gentleman from Tennessee——

Mr. McMILLIN. What reason is there why the Government should go on indefinitely extending this time, when four opportunities of three years each have already been offered to these men?

Mr. HULL. I will say to the gentleman that this provision of relief has been accorded already to nearly all of the officers who are entitled to the benefits of the law. There are some officers, however, who have not been able to avail themselves of it—men who are living on farms or homesteads in the West—a very few of them, who have never availed themselves of the law, and in fact did not know perhaps of its existence until after its expiration. Perhaps there are not over three. I think that is the number on file now. But the Department thinks that no matter when an officer finds that he has slept on his rights, it is only fair and equitable, in view of the way others have been treated, to give him an opportunity to be placed exactly upon the same footing, and that all of them shall have that relief to which they are entitled.

Mr. STEELE. I would like to ask the gentleman a question, with his consent, for information.

Mr. HULL. Certainly.

Mr. STEELE. By the act of March 3, 1863, which provided that under such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe, a regiment falling below the maximum should be deprived of its colonel, and companies falling below a maximum limit then fixed should be deprived of a second lieutenant. Now, notwithstanding that law, some of the States continued to commission these officers where vacancies occurred. For instance, if there was a vacancy in the office of colonel when the regiment had fallen below the maximum, a commission was issued; and in certain cases there were vacancies filled in companies by the commissioning of second lieutenants, where the law had expressly provided that in such cases the companies should be deprived of the services of second lieutenants. Some of the States continued to commission officers without regard to that law, while some of the States did not. I would ask the gentleman whether the law now sought to be enacted will be applicable to officers commissioned subsequent to that act of March 3, 1863, under these circumstances?

Mr. HULL. It provides expressly that it shall not be so applied. There is another bill before the committee providing relief in such cases; but this provides that it shall not be applicable where there was no legal vacancy.

On that I ask a vote.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill passed.

LIGHT-HOUSES AND OTHER AIDS TO NAVIGATION.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 9703) to provide for light-houses and other aids to navigation as amended by the committee.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read as proposed to be amended.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That light-houses and other aids to navigation be established and erected as hereinafter set forth, to wit:

Completing the removal of Cape San Blas light station, Florida, to Blacks Island.

Establishing a light station at or near St. Joseph Point, in St. Joseph Bay, west coast of Florida.

Establishing range lights to mark the channel over the bar, entrance to Choctawhatchee Bay.

Repairing wharf and buildings of the depot at Key West, Fla.

Mr. DOCKERY. I demand a second. This seems to be an omnibus measure.

Mr. HEPBURN. It carries no appropriation as now amended by the committee. The committee recommend the striking out of all items in the nature of appropriation.

I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. HEPBURN. I yield to the gentleman from Florida, who will explain the measure.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I hope that there will be no objection to the passage of this bill. In my judgment it is a very important measure. It provides for the construction of one or more light-houses, and other aids to navigation, on the west coast of Florida. These projects have been recommended by the Light-House Board as matters that are urgent, and as buildings that should be constructed without delay.

The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce have reported unanimously in favor of the passage of the bill. As was stated by the chairman of the committee a moment ago, the bill carries no appropriation, but provides for the structures to be erected; and I take it no appropriation whatever can now be made for the erection of these light-houses and these other aids to navigation for a year or more from this date. So that there can be no objection on the ground or on account of the apprehension on the part of any individual member of the House that an immediate appropriation is thereby incurred or made necessary. All we desire is to provide for the erection of these aids to navigation, so when the proper bill is presented to the House, in the next Congress, the money necessary to construct either all or a portion, as it may seem proper, may be made.

I repeat, I hope there will be no objection, but that the House will see the importance of the measure and allow its passage at this time.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say a word in reference to this matter. I know nothing whatever of the merits of the several propositions contained in the bill. I assume that the propositions are just and reasonable, inasmuch as the bill comes to the House with a favorable report from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. I would ask, however, if it has the approval and indorsement of the Secretary of the Treasury?

Mr. HEPBURN. All these items are estimated for by the Light-House Board. All have been recommended and are found in the report of the Board.

Mr. DOCKERY. I wish only to add a word, Mr. Speaker. I shall not vote against the bill, but will defer to the judgment of the gentleman from Florida and the chairman of the committee who reports it.

Gentlemen will observe that the bill involves an expenditure of some $42,000. Of course, as the gentleman from Florida says, it makes no direct appropriation. But it is in perfect harmony with the policy which seems to have been adopted by the House, not only in reference to light-houses, but with reference to rivers and harbors, improvement of sewers, and other public works that I call to mind. That is to say, the House, contrary to the rules and practices prevailing in all private business enterprises, is turning back the wheels of progress, and reviving the old discarded "credit system." But few bills receive favor if they involve a direct appropriation. But if the mortgage upon the Treasury is projected into the future, whether near or remote, the measure is more likely to secure favorable recognition.

Now, this is a very small mortgage of $42,000 on the revenues of the future, and I do not propose to stand in the way of the measure, but I hope the time will come—and I believe it will very soon—when the credit policy which is being adopted by the Congress of the United States will be abandoned, and we shall return to the business methods which prevail everywhere in private affairs. In railroad circles, in mercantile business, in manufacturing industries, business is transacted upon a cash basis. Credit is not given for a longer period than thirty days. But it seems that the Government, contrary to the business principles that prevail everywhere else, is returning to business methods rejected by the business world.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I have no objection to taking the money now, but the committee think otherwise.

Mr. DOCKERY. I know that; but I want the House to understand that this contemplates an appropriation at a very early day of $42,000. Of course we are simply giving our obligation to be paid at some time when the Dingley bill, I suppose, will have furnished a larger income for the support of the Government than it now receives.

Mr. HEPBURN. I think the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] is in error about that. There is no appropriation here. This is simply an authorization.

Mr. DOCKERY. That is what I have said.

Mr. HEPBURN. I thought that you were complaining about the money that was appropriated. There will be no expenditure until the matter is brought before the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. DOCKERY. I was simply emphasizing the fact that this bill is in harmony with the views the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] so ably expressed last Saturday in respect to the credit system as applied to the river and harbor bill.

Mr. HEPBURN. Oh, no; not at all. There is no similarity between the two propositions.

Mr. PAYNE. I will ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] whether he will consent to amend the bill so that when we get these light-houses and means of saftey down there along the Florida coast they will cut the pilotage fees in two, or make a great reduction in them?

Mr. HEPBURN. I shall be perfectly willing to refer the subject to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. PAYNE. All right. The amendment will go in, then.

And then (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill passed.

LOAN OF TENTS FOR GRAND ARMY ENCAMPMENT, BUFFALO.

Mr. POOLE. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass House joint resolution 252, authorizing the Secretary of War to deliver to the mayor of Buffalo tents, in loan, for the convenience of the Grand Army of the Republic at its annual encampment, to be held this year at that city.

The bill was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized, at his discretion, to deliver out of the quartermaster stores to the order of Mayor Edgar B. Jewett, of the city of Buffalo, for the use of said city of Buffalo and its committees on the thirty-first national encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic, to be held at Buffalo August 23, 1897, the following, namely: Sibley tents, common "A" tents, and flood sufferers' tents, with poles, ridges, and pins for each, under such restrictions as is usual in such cases, and with the proviso that no expense shall be caused to the United States by the delivery and return of such property; the same to be delivered to the mayor of Buffalo at such time anterior to the event as may be agreed upon between the War Department and the mayor of the city of Buffalo.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a second.

Mr. POOLE. I ask that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. POOLE] is entitled to twenty minutes and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] to twenty minutes.

Mr. POOLE. Mr. Speaker, this bill simply provides for the loaning to the mayor of the city of Buffalo, for the use of the Grand Army of the Republic at their twenty-fourth annual encampment, to be held in that city next August, of "A" tents, Sibley tents, and other tent paraphernalia, to be used by the members of the Grand Army at that encampment.

Such a resolution as this has been adopted by Congress every year for the last fifteen years. The bill provides that the tents shall be delivered to the mayor of Buffalo and returned to the Government without any expense to the Government.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I understand the bill provides that there shall be no expense to the Government in the loaning of these tents.

Mr. POOLE. The bill does so provide. There is no expense of any kind to the Government, and the tents are to be delivered in such number as in the discretion of the Secretary of War can be spared.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I have no objection to the passage of the bill.

And then (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

HOMESTEAD LANDS IN FLORIDA.

Mr. COOPER of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 9494) concerning certain homestead lands in Florida, as amended by the Committee on the Public Lands.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida moves to suspend the rules and pass a bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the amended bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all persons actually occupying homesteads in good faith in any of the following-named counties, in said State of Florida, to wit, Alachua, Lafayette, Levy, Suwanee, Bradford, Baker, and Columbia, at the time of the storm on or about September 29, 1896, are hereby granted the right to sell or otherwise dispose of the fallen timber on their homestead entries felled by said storm, and to devote the proceeds of such sale or barter to the improvement of their homesteads or support of themselves or their families.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. COOPER of Florida. I ask that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida asks that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. COOPER] is entitled to twenty minutes, and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] to twenty minutes.

Mr. COOPER of Florida. I will ask for the reading of the report.

Mr. LACEY. I suggest that the gentleman from Florida can explain this matter more briefly than the report.

Mr. COOPER of Florida. Mr. Speaker, last fall a great storm prevailed over the country, the same that struck Washington. It passed over several counties of Florida, and felled a great deal of the standing timber upon the lands occupied by homesteaders from the United States as well as other citizens. That country is a mass of fallen timber that can hardly be conceived by persons who have not seen it. These people have suffered great losses and they are now in a very destitute condition. There is imminent danger that forest fires, especially in the spring, will sweep over that whole country and not only destroy the timber, but endanger the homes and the lives of the people occupying those portions of those counties. The bill simply gives them permission to dispose of the fallen timber blown down by the storm, the proceeds to be expended for improvements upon their farms and in support of their families. It is recommended by the Department, and if this leave be not extended the timber would eventually be destroyed by fire, rot, or be eaten by the worms.

The question was taken on suspending the rules and passing the bill; and in the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

ST. PAUL, MINNEAPOLIS AND MANITOBA RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. EDDY. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 3693) to extend the time for the completion of the St. Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba Railway Company through the White Earth, Leech Lake, Chippewa, and Fond du Lac Indian reservations, in the State of Minnesota.

Be it enacted, etc., That the time for the construction of the St. Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba Railway through the White Earth, Leech Lake, Chippewa, and Fond du Lac Indian reservations, in the State of Minnesota, as limited by section 3 of an act of Congress entitled "An act granting to the St. Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba Railway Company the right of way through the White Earth, Leech Lake, Chippewa, and Fond du Lac Indian reservations, in the State of Minnesota," approved July 18, 1894, together with the rights and privileges granted by said act, be, and the same are hereby, revived and extended for the period of two years from the 18th day of July, 1897.

Mr. DOCKERY. I ask a second, in order to secure a brief explanation.

Mr. EDDY. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

There was no objection, and a second was considered as ordered.

Mr. EDDY. Mr. Speaker, this is simply a bill reviving an act passed in 1894. The time expires on July 18, 1897. The original act provides compensation for the Indians for this right of way. It has the usual provisions. This recommendation for the extension of time has the approval of the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

The question was taken on suspending the rules and passing the bill; and in the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

REORGANIZATION OF THE JUDICIAL DISTRICTS OF ARKANSAS.

Mr. NEILL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the rules be suspended and the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk be passed.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10278) to reorganize the judicial districts of Arkansas, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That the State of Arkansas is hereby divided into two districts, which shall be called the eastern and western districts of Arkansas. The western district shall hereafter include the counties of Benton, Washington, Carroll, Boone, Madison, Newton, Crawford, Franklin, Johnson, Logan, Sebastian, Scott, Yell, Polk, Sevier Howard, Pike, Little River, Hempstead, Miller, Lafayette, Nevada, Columbia, Union, Ouachita, and Calhoun. The eastern district shall hereafter include the residue of said State.

SEC. 2. That the eastern district is hereby divided into three divisions, to be known as the western division, the eastern division, and the northern division. All process, civil and criminal, hereafter issued against persons residing in the counties of Mississippi, Crittenden, Lee, Phillips, Clay, Craighead, Poinsett, Greene, Cross, St. Francis, and Monroe, which shall constitute the eastern division, shall hereafter be made returnable to the courts, respectively, to be held at the city of Helena; and all process, civil and criminal, against persons residing in the counties of Independence, Cleburne, Stone, Izard, Baxter, Searcy, Marion, Sharp, Fulton, Randolph, Lawrence, and Jackson, which shall constitute the northern division, shall be made returnable to the courts, respectively, to be held at the city of Batesville; and all process, civil and criminal, against persons residing in any of the remaining counties of the eastern district of the State, which shall constitute the western division, shall be made returnable to the courts, respectively, to be held at the city of Little Rock.

SEC. 3. That the terms of the United States circuit and district courts for the eastern district of Arkansas shall be held in each year at the times and places as follows: At the city of Batesville, in the county of Independence, commencing on the second Mondays in June and December; at the city of Helena, in the county of Phillips, on the second Mondays in March and October; at the city of Little Rock, in the county of Pulaski, the district court on the first Mondays in April and October, and the circuit court on the second Monday in April and the fourth Monday in October.

SEC. 4. That all causes, civil and criminal, now pending in the courts, respectively, at Little Rock against persons residing in any of the counties made returnable to the courts to be held at Batesville, as herein provided, shall be determined and disposed of by said courts, and all causes, civil and criminal, now pending against persons residing in the county of Marion, in the courts, respectively, at Fort Smith, shall be determined and disposed of by said courts.

SEC. 5. That the western district is hereby divided into two divisions, to be known as the Texarkana and Fort Smith divisions, respectively. All process, civil and criminal, hereafter issued against persons residing in the counties of Sevier, Howard, Pike, Little River, Hempstead, Miller, Lafayette, Columbia, Nevada, Ouachita, Calhoun, and Union, which shall constitute the Texarkana division, shall hereafter be made returnable to the courts, respectively, to be held at the city of Texarkana; and all process, civil and criminal, hereafter issued against persons residing in any of the remaining counties of the western district of the State, which shall constitute the Fort Smith division, shall be made returnable to the courts, respectively, to be held at the city of Fort Smith.

SEC. 6. That the terms of the United States circuit and district courts for the western district of Arkansas shall be held in each year at the times and places as follows: At the city of Texarkana, in the county of Miller, on the second Mondays in May and November; at the city of Fort Smith, in the county of Sebastian, on the second Mondays in January and June. And the causes, both civil and criminal, now pending at Little Rock against persons residing in the counties of Calhoun and Union shall be disposed of in said courts. All causes, process, bonds, recognizances, and other things pending in, returnable, or having relation to the terms of said courts at Texarkana and Fort Smith now provided by law shall be proceeded with in the terms provided by this act with the same force and effect that would have been lawful had the times of holding said courts at said places not been changed.

SEC. 7. That all crimes or offenses hereafter committed in any of the divisions of the said districts shall be cognizable within such division, and all prosecutions for crimes or offenses heretofore committed in the districts as heretofore constituted shall be commenced and proceeded with as if this act had not been passed.

SEC. 8. That there shall be appointed in the northern division of the eastern district of the State of Arkansas one additional clerk of the district court and one of the circuit court, who shall reside and keep their respective offices in the city of Batesville.

SEC. 9. That all acts and parts of acts in conflict with this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed; and this act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage.

Mr. NEILL. I ask to suspend the rules and pass the bill with the amendment that is desired. The amendment has been read.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. NEILL. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. NEILL. Mr. Speaker, this bill is unanimously reported by the Committee on the Judiciary, and it has been agreed upon by the entire Arkansas delegation in the House and Senate. It is to reorganize the judicial districts of Arkansas, which was made necessary by the unequal division of business as the two districts are now constituted. With the taking away of the jurisdiction of the Indian country by the act of February or March, 1895, the work of the Fort Smith district was very largely reduced, and the counties now comprising that district are only about one-fourth of the area of the State, and give to the Federal courts perhaps less than one-fourth of the business of the entire State. This bill seeks to equalize, so far as may be done at this time with convenience, the work of the two judicial districts, and creates a new division in the eastern district, which will carry no expense and no burden whatever. I ask the Clerk to read the report made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAY].

Mr. PAYNE. I want to ask the gentleman a question. I understand that this bill involves no new judges or new officers, but simply makes a new division.

Mr. NEILL. It makes no new offices, except a clerk for the northern division of the eastern district, which will involve no extra expense. It is a unanimous report from the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. LACEY. I would ask the gentleman what provision is made for the clerk at Batesville? How is he to be taken care of?

Mr. NEILL. Simply by the fees which the office may yield or earn.

Mr. LACEY. I have been informed that last year the fees were only $228.

Mr. NEILL. However that may be, I have no doubt of our being able to obtain a perfectly competent clerk for the courts provided by this bill to be held at Batesville.

The question was taken on suspending the rules and passing the bill; and in the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds having voted in the affirmative, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

RELIEF FOR THE POOR OF INDIA.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, there is upon the Speaker's table a Senate joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to furnish a vessel to transport to India the corn and wheat and other food supplies that have been donated by the States of Iowa, Kansas, Nebraska, Washington, Oregon, California, and other portions of the West, and which the railroad companies have agreed to transport to San Francisco free. I ask unanimous consent that that joint resolution be taken up.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized to employ and place at the disposal of the Chamber of Commerce of San Francisco any ship or vessel belonging to the Navy of the United States best adapted for such service, for the purpose of transporting to the famishing poor of India such contributions as may be made for their relief, or to charter and employ, under the authority of the United States, a suitable American steamship or vessel, with a cargo capacity of 1,500 to 3,000 tons, for the same purpose. Any sum of money which may be necessary to carry out the object of this resolution is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury heretofore appropriated for the support of the Navy.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. LOUD, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

CLAIMS OF TENNESSEE AGAINST THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the joint resolution H. Res. 91, with the amendments recommended by the committee.

The joint resolution, with the amendments, was read, as follows:

Joint resolution providing for the adjustment of certain claims of the United States against the State of Tennessee, and certain claims of the State of Tennessee against the United States.

Whereas it is claimed that the State of Tennessee is indebted to the United States for railroad equipments and materials purchased for the Memphis, Clarksville and Louisville Railroad Company and the Edgefield and Kentucky Railroad Company by the receivers of said railroad companies; and also for certain coupon bonds issued by said State and originally purchased and held by the United States in trust for certain Indian tribes; and

Whereas the State of Tennessee claims against the United States certain abatements and reductions of said indebtedness by reason of excessive valuations of said equipments and materials; and also certain set-offs and counterclaims, growing out of the use by the United States Government for military and other purposes, and the deterioration of the property by the use of certain of the Tennessee railroads upon which the said State had an express and prior statutory lien; and for the removal and appropriation of the property, rails, bridges, etc., of the following roads, namely: The Memphis, Clarksville and Louisville Railroad Company, the McMinnville and Manchester Railroad Company, the Winchester and Alabama Railroad Company, the Knoxville and Kentucky Railroad Company, and the Edgefield and Kentucky Railroad Company; and

Whereas said matters are of long standing and it is desirable that the same should be adjusted and settled: Therefore

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Attorney-General, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Secretary of War be, and they are hereby, authorized and required to proceed, by conference with such agents, counsel, or commissioners as may be appointed by said State for that purpose, to compromise, adjust, and settle with the State of Tennessee, through such duly appointed agents, all said matters upon such terms as to amount, allowance of interest, etc., as shall do equal and impartial justice to both parties; and if the result of such settlement shall disclose a balance due to the United States from the State of Tennessee, they shall report such agreement, compromise, or settlement to the governor of Tennessee, to be submitted by him to the legislature of said State at its next regular session, and if the payment of such balance shall not be provided for at the next regular session of the legislature of Tennessee, then the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and required to proceed to collect the same by appropriate proceedings in accordance with the terms of the bonds held by the United States; and in the event the result of said settlement shall disclose a balance due to the State of Tennessee, they are hereby authorized and directed to report the same to Congress with such recommendation as to an appropriation therefor as may be deemed to be proper and just: Provided, however, That nothing herein shall be deemed to be a declaration of priority of right in favor of the State of Tennessee as between it and the Nashville, Chattanooga and St. Louis Railway Company with respect to the claim on account of the McMinnville and Manchester Railroad; but the question of the rights of the State and of said company as to said claim shall be determined as is hereinafter provided: Provided further, That the sum for the value of the iron rails, spikes, chairs, etc., taken by the United States military railroad authorities from the McMinnville and Manchester Railroad during the years 1863 and 1864 shall not be used in arriving at a settlement of the accounts between the State of Tennessee and the United States unless the Attorney-General of the United States, the Secretary of War, and the Secretary of the Treasury shall find that the proceeds for amount of said claim belong to the State of Tennessee and are due from the United States: Provided further, That the McMinnville and Manchester Railroad Company or the Nashville, Chattanooga and St. Louis Railway Company as its successor shall, by agents, counsel, or otherwise, have the right to appear and have an equal voice with the State in determining all questions relating to the said claim of the McMinnville and Manchester Railroad Company or the Nashville, Chattanooga and St. Louis Railway Company as its successor. And the Attorney-General, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Secretary of War are hereby authorized and directed to determine the legal and equitable rights, respectively, between the United States, the State of Tennessee, and the McMinnville and Manchester Railroad Company or the Nashville, Chattanooga and St. Louis Railway Company as its successor with respect to said claim; and if they shall find that the proceeds or amount of said claim belong to the State the same shall be allowed as a credit in the settlement of the accounts between the United States and the State of Tennessee; and if they shall find that the proceeds or amount of said claim belong to the McMinnville and Manchester Railroad Company or the Nashville, Chattanooga and St. Louis Railway Company as its successor they shall report the same to Congress for appropriate legislation by Congress; but if they find that the same is not due from the United States to either party they shall so report.

They are authorized to settle all claims and demands of whatever kind or nature, and any compromise or settlement they may make with said State of Tennessee, as aforesaid, shall be fully reported back to Congress, giving the basis thereof, for its further action. The said compromise or settlement is not to be effective or final until approved by Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I demand a second.

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, this bill merely provides that the Government shall authorize the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Attorney-General to confer with the agents of the State of Tennessee for the purpose of making an adjustment of the claims which the Government holds against the State of Tennessee and the claims that the State of Tennessee holds against the Government of the United States, growing out of certain railroad transactions during the war, which I will briefly explain. The State of Tennessee, prior to the war, issued its bonds in favor of certain railroads mentioned in the bill, reserving a prior lien upon the property. The war came on and the Government of the United States took charge of the railroad property and operated it. At the close of the war the Government sold its equipment and rolling stock to the State. The Government holds $335,666.66⅔ of bonds of the State of Tennessee that were deposited in the Indian trust fund. The State of Tennessee owes the Government those bonds. It owes the Government also for the rolling stock which the State, through its receivers, bought at the close of the war. The State of Tennessee insists that the Government of the United States owes the State for the use of these railroads during the war, and also for a certain lot of rails, sufficient for about 70 miles of road, which they took and carried to other railroads and used. There are two sets of claims, by the Government of the United States and by the State of Tennessee, respectively, the one against the other.

This bill provides that the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Attorney-General shall be authorized to confer with the agents of the State of Tennessee and adjust these claims and make report. If they find that the Government owes the State, or that the State owes the Government, then the report comes to Congress for ratification. If it is found that the State of Tennessee owes the Government, then the report is to be made to the governor of Tennessee and is to be by him transmitted to the legislature, and the bill provides that the legislature must make appropriation to pay the sum so found due, or, if it fails to do so, that the Government shall take such steps as may be necessary, and as are authorized under the terms of the Indian bonds which the Government holds, to compel payment by the State of Tennessee. That is all there is in the bill. There is no appropriation. It does not carry one cent. It is not binding or final. The report comes back to this or a succeeding Congress for ratification or rejection, as shall be deemed proper. The matter is an old one and it ought to have been settled long ago. If the State of Tennessee owes the Government, it ought to pay its debt. If the Government owes the State of Tennessee, it ought to pay what it owes. I may add that this bill has the indorsement of the late Attorney-General of the United States, Mr. Olney, and of the Secretary of War.

I now yield eight minutes to my colleague from Tennessee [Mr. Cox].

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, as briefly as I can I will state what is involved in this Senate resolution. There is an interest in behalf of the State of Tennessee, an interest in behalf of the railroads, and an interest in behalf of the Government of the United States. This resolution brings the matter up for settlement. It was drawn by Mr. Olney, who was then Attorney-General of the United States, and the attorney-general of the State of Tennessee. The object was not to reach an appropriaton of money. That was expressly reserved. The object of the resolution is to have this board, composed of the Secretary of War, the Attorney-General, and the Secretary of the Treasury, meet the commissioners appointed by the State of Tennessee, and, as far as they can, adjust the accounts between these different interests and report to Congress. The resolution does not carry any appropriation whatever.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. As I understand it, the State of Tennessee claims that on a settlement the Government will be found to owe the State?

Mr. COX. Yes, sir; and the Government claims that the State of Tennessee will owe it.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Where are these claims now pending?

Mr. COX. I think I can explain that before I sit down.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in view of this state of facts, the Attorney-General of the United States earnestly recommends that this attempt at settlement be made. These claims grew up in this way: Under the laws of Tennessee in relation to construction of railroads the State indorsed the bonds of the roads and took a prior lien upon the property.

Now, during the war certain of these roads got into the hands of the military authorities and were taken control of, so far as they could control them, and they took up the iron in some instances, as shown by the report of General Thomas and other high officers on that side, and transferred it to other roads for military uses. The State of Tennessee—and I am trying now to give you the claim from a legal standpoint—the State of Tennessee meets the Government and claims that, inasmuch as the Government destroyed to a certain extent the value of the first lien on the property, the State is entitled to compensation to the extent that the property was so taken. That is the principle claimed by the State of Tennessee——

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Of course I think it best that we shall clearly understand these matters as we proceed——

Mr. COX. I want it understood. There is no trouble, I am sure, if the matter is understood.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. As I understand the proposition, it is that inasmuch as during the late war the Government took up the rails upon a part of this road upon which the State had a lien——

Mr. COX. Had a first lien.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE (continuing). That therefore the Government should take the place of the railroad and be subject to the lien of the State on the road, and pay the debt which belonged to the State.

Mr. COX. I do not think the gentleman states the proposition exactly or clearly. Inasmuch as the Government took possession of the property that belonged to the State, and by taking up the tracks and other property belonging to the State destroyed the lien upon the property to that extent, the State comes back and says, "Inasmuch as you did that, I make this counter claim against the Government of the United States."

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Now, what is the claim the Government has against the State?

Mr. COX. Now, I have given the claim of the State. I will give now the claim of the Government, if the gentleman prefers it in that order. The Government has, of the State of Tennessee—my memory does not serve me as to the exact amount—a lot of Indian bonds that go behind this transaction. The State, on these bonds, borrowed a certain amount of money from the Government.

Mr. McMILLIN. If my colleague will permit me, I will give the exact amount, as I have the report before me. The amount of the bonds is $335,666.66⅔.

Mr. COX (continuing). Now the Government holds these bonds of the State. The legality of the bonds themselves is a question to be decided in this settlement. They hold not only that; but when the State, under the proceedings in our courts, filed her bill to enforce the first lien on the railroads I have mentioned, the railroads were put up and sold. Different companies became the purchasers, and then they put their bonds into court; and there is a large amount of bonds that are held still in court, for the reason that they must await the decision as to whether they belong to the State or to the Government.

Now, they are owned by one or the other. If under that decision the State holds the bonds, that places the matter in one light, and if, on the other hand, it is held that the United States is entitled to the bonds, although they are held there, that presents another condition. The reason the bonds are held there is for the purpose of getting them to the parties who may be entitled to them under the decision.

Now, another idea as to the claim of the Government. The Government, when the war closed, sold to the State of Tennessee, who was trying to preserve her lien on the road, a large amount of rolling stock. Thereupon the State executed her bonds in payment of the rolling stock. These bonds amounted probably to $75,000 or $100,000—I do not pretend to be correct as to the exact amount. In these bonds it is provided that unless the State of Tennessee shall pay them off and discharge them, then, by a proper proceeding under the authority of the United States, the Government is made to take charge of the railroads and enforce the collection of the bonds executed in payment for the rolling stock to which I have referred.

You see now plainly, as a lawyer, where the point comes in. If the hundred or two hundred thousand dollars' worth of bonds held there, to be decided to whom they belong, whether to the State or the General Government—suppose it is decided that they belong to the State? Well, the United States, holding the bonds for the rolling stock, the State of Tennessee would have to pay them——

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. But the point that I am in doubt about, and on which the gentleman can throw light, is this: The claim of the State against the Government for taking the railroad iron is in doubt as to its legality?

Mr. COX. Yes, sir.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. And the railroads were taken as a war necessity, or supposed to have been so taken, as I understand the gentleman to claim?

Mr. COX. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. This bill that you now offer, however, takes away any doubts of the claim of the State and legalizes that proposition.

Mr. COX. Oh, no; the gentleman is entirely wrong.

Mr. WASHINGTON. It does not accomplish anything of that kind. It leaves the matter to a settlement by arbitration.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. It recognizes it as a regular claim.

Mr. COX. Oh, no.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. You refer to it as "a claim" against the Government in the bill.

Mr. COX. But whether that be recognized or not is a question to be settled by this arbitration.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Who is to decide that?

Mr. COX. The Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Attorney-General on the part of the United States and the commissioners of the State of Tennessee that have been appointed on the part of the legislature of the State will determine that question; but Congress must eventually settle it. I hope you will understand one point. We have had some trouble with this. The State of Georgia had a settlement. There is not a single dollar in the Treasury of the United States that will be touched by this until another Congress approves it.

Mr. McMILLIN. Will my friend permit me right here, in reply to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE], to say that at the suggestion of the members of the House who took the view taken by the gentleman from Pennsylvania concerning this same railroad claim the following was added to the Senate resolution:

But if they—

That is, the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Attorney-General—find that the same is not due from the United States to either party, they shall so report.

They are to report on that very question.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Is their report conclusive?

Mr. COX. Oh, no.

Mr. McMILLIN. They report back to Congress.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. For our action?

Mr. COX. For our action.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Does it in any way, shape, or form bind the Government to the recognition of any claims that it does not now recognize?

Mr. COX. No; not in any way, shape, or form.

Mr. McMILLIN. It does not.

Mr. COX. Now pardon me for another suggestion, and you will see the force and importance of these resolutions. Under those bonds, executed by the State in the purchase of the rolling stock, there was a bond executed to the United States with the power to foreclose it. Now, when you come to consider that matter in that light, the resolutions fully protect the United States, just as do these bonds.

It must be borne in mind that the State bought the rolling stock so as to operate the roads, while the State was trying to protect herself from the liability incurred in indorsing the bonds when issued.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. Speaker, as I understand this proposition, this resolution ought not to pass. It is an attempt to accomplish indirectly what can not be accomplished directly. It is an attempt to evade the payment of an honest debt to the United States by getting in some shadowy, patent, back-action, double-extension, utterly worthless claims that this State has against the United States.

Mr. COX. I want to say to the gentleman, just in that connection——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from California [Mr. JOHNSON] yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COX]?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. If it is not taken out of my time, I will yield; yes.

The SPEAKER. Unfortunately, it will have to be taken out of the gentleman's time.

Mr. COX. There is no back action about this.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield. The gentleman from California [Mr. JOHNSON] has the floor.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. As I understand this matter, the State of Tennessee borrowed some money from the United States——

Mr. WASHINGTON. Not a dollar.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Or got the money from some Indian war bonds.

Mr. WASHINGTON. It did not borrow a dollar and did not get any Indian war bonds.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. The State owes those bonds, but owing to some unpleasantness that existed between 1861 and 1865 they did not pay those bonds, and they have not paid them yet.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Just for a question; yes.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Have you read this resolution yourself?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I have heard the resolution read; yes.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Have you read it yourself?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Yes, I have read it.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Did you find anything in there showing that the State of Tennessee borrowed a dollar from the Government?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Well, I know something about this besides what is in the resolution.

Mr. WASHINGTON. I know my friend wants to be absolutely accurate. There was not a dollar borrowed by the State of Tennessee.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I think I know something about it besides what is in the resolution. The State of Tennessee owes this money. There is not any doubt about it. It owes the money, and when it is called upon by the United States to pay it, it says that during the civil war the United States had some armies in the State of Tennessee, and that when putting down the rebellion they took up some rails of a railroad there which the State of Tennessee did not own, but which it simply had a mortgage on, and that because the United States did take up those rails for the purpose of helping to put down the rebellion the State of Tennessee ought to be paid something for it. Well, now, that claim, of course, could not be made in any court, for there is no court in Christendom that would allow any such claim as that. But this is to be submitted to arbitration. In other words, they want to compromise. My idea of a compromise, when one man has a just debt and the other man has a mere shadowy claim, is that it is like the two men who were trying to settle how much two and two made. One man said two and two made four, and all the arithmetics said so. The other man said, "Two and two make six;" and he said he was willing to fight for that; but finally he said, "Now, I am willing to compromise with you on the proposition that two and two make five. We will settle our differences on that basis."

The United States has a legal and valid claim against the State of Tennessee, amounting, as I understand now, in principal and interest, to over a million dollars, and the State of Tennessee has some vague, shadowy, iridescent dreams of claims which are based upon nothing and exist only in imagination, which are adduced from some metaphysical reason that because they had some sort of a mortgage upon some sort of a railroad, which railroad was used by the United States in putting down the rebellion, therefore they ought not to pay this honest debt. Now, it does seem to me that this sort of claim ought not to be admissible of being referred to anybody for arbitration. If the State of Tennessee or if these railroads have any just claims against the United States, why, there is a Court of Claims, as I understand it, in which they can be presented, and from the limited experience I have had in Congress I never yet have found a man who lived in the South or a State in the South who was at all timid about presenting any claim to the Court of Claims.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Are they worse than California and other States in the West?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I do not know. California tries to keep up with the procession, but is not able always to keep up with Tennessee.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. We have never been successful in pressing our claims from the South since the war before any Congress or in any of the courts.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. As to that I do not know. I have a distinct recollection of reading a bill that passed appropriating money to pay some claims. I have some recollection of claims which have been urged which our honored presiding officer opposed. I do not know whether they were Southern claims or not. I have a distinct recollection of voting, at the suggestion of my friend from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON], in favor of paying what he called some Bowman Act claims that he said were right and just; and I so voted because he said they were right and just.

Mr. RICHARDSON. And they were.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. And you say you can not get any claims passed here?

Mr. RICHARDSON. They have not passed.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. There are a great many that have passed, if you will search the records.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Oh, no.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Now, I am informed that they were passed and that your President vetoed them and you could not get enough votes to pass it over his veto.

Mr. RICHARDSON and Mr. WASHINGTON. He did not veto them.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. He vetoed a bill.

Now, Mr. Speaker, as I was saying, if these claims of Tennessee are just and legal they ought not to be afraid of going into the Court of Claims and allowing that court to pass upon them. If the claim of the United States is just and legal, as every member from Tennessee knows that the claim of the United States is just and legal, why does not the State of Tennessee pay that claim, and then go into the court with clean hands—pardon the expression—after which Congress would do what is right to the State of Tennessee? And if these railroads in the State of Tennessee are of such enormous value, have 70 miles, as I understand the figures given by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McCALL], of rails which were taken up, and they were worth a million dollars, we could pay it.

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. I have not made that statement. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. You said there were 70 miles of rails torn up.

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. But not that they were worth a million dollars.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. The claim of the United States is about a million, and your resolution carries with it the idea that you will bring the United States in debt.

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. I beg the gentleman's pardon. If he will allow me, I say that, on the contrary, it will bring the State of Tennessee in debt to the United States.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. But your resolution contemplates bringing the Government in debt. There is no doubt, Mr. Chairman, but what if the resolution passes and this matter is submitted to arbitration, the United States will be brought in debt to the State of Tennessee. We have just had a settlement with the State of Arkansas in which the United States had a clear, straightforward claim, and, as I am informed by the Committee on Public Lands, that settlement resulted in bringing the United States in debt; and I am afraid this will do so. I submit it is not a proper way to pass upon a claim of this large amount. Now, it may seem singular that I should object to taking any money from the Treasury, because I have voted for these bills; but it seems to me it is time to stop. It is a little too bitter, even for my taste; and I think we ought not to pass this resolution. I think it is a dangerous precedent. I have been listening attentively, and exerting all my powers of hearing to listen for the voice of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, to know why it should not be raised against this resolution. It does carry an appropriation. I prophesy to you that if this resolution passes the United States will be brought in debt and be compelled to pay a large sum.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I would like to ask the gentleman whether this matter can be adjusted without the passage of this resolution?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Undoubtedly.

Mr. WASHINGTON and Mr. RICHARDSON. How?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Do the gentlemen who present the claim admit that it has no legal standing?

Mr. RICHARDSON. The gentlemen do not.

Mr. WASHINGTON. The gentlemen do not; but we have no tribunal in which to be heard, I will inform my friend.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. If this is coming out of my time——

Mr. WASHINGTON. Of course.

The SPEAKER. It is coming out of the time of the gentleman from California, who declines to be interrupted.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I will proceed for a minute——

Mr. WASHINGTON. You are eliciting information in your time.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I do not need any information of that kind, because I know enough about this bill; and I am trying to speak very guardedly about it, and am really trying to say nothing except to call attention to it.

If it were desired to go into this matter extensively and trace it from the beginning and see what it is, I would be perfectly ready to go into it if I had the time, and I have no doubt in that case the gentleman would be sorry that he commenced it, because this is not a matter that will bear investigation. The very fact that they are seeking to have this kind of arbitration shows that it is not.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time and yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY].

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, if not in error, I have an indistinct recollection of having voted against this bill away back in the Forty-eighth or the Forty-ninth Congress.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Not at all.

Mr. STEELE. Well, if it was not for this bill, it was a brother to it.

Mr. DOCKERY. As I remember, it was a bill for the relief of the McMinnville Railroad.

Mr. RICHARDSON. That was dealt with in the last Congress.

Mr. DOCKERY. And it is not affected by this bill?

Mr. RICHARDSON. No; it is excepted from it.

Mr. DOCKERY. Well, Mr. Speaker, it strikes me as a peculiarity of this bill that it proposes a board of arbitration composed of the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Attorney-General, a tribunal which, so far as my experience goes, is entirely without precedent. We have a Court of Claims to which claims under the Bowman Act are sent and also claims under the Tucker Act. We also have committees of the Senate and of the House who examine claims, and upon their reports Congress determines upon their merits or demerits; but, so far as I have knowledge or recollection, the extraordinary board proposed by this bill is without precedent during the fourteen years of my Congressional experience.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Can the gentleman tell us whether, under the general law, the State of Tennessee could go into the Court of Claims under the Bowman Act, or under the Tucker Act, and have these claims adjusted?

Mr. DOCKERY. I rather think that she could not. [Laughter.]

Mr. WASHINGTON. Then let the gentleman point out to us the way in which we can have these claims adjusted.

Mr. DOCKERY. I would make this suggestion to my good friend from Tennessee: If the State of Tennessee owes the Government, and, on the other hand, the Government owes the State of Tennessee, it seems that it would be proper to send this controversy to some court to have their conflicting claims adjudicated.

But, Mr. Speaker, back of the question of the tribunal is a claim of the State of Tennessee for railroad iron taken by the Army of the United States in its military operations during the late war. Now, I am one of those who believe that the settlement of very many of the claims growing out of that struggle should have been closed some time ago.

Mr. McMILLIN. I am sure my friend does not want to do any injustice——

Mr. DOCKERY. Certainly not.

Mr. McMILLIN. Then let me call his attention to a provision in the bill bearing directly upon the point which he makes. I read it:

Provided further, That the sum for the value of the iron rails, spikes, chairs, etc., taken by the United States military railroad authorities from the McMinnville and Manchester Railroad during the years 1863 and 1864 shall not be used in arriving at a settlement of the accounts between the State of Tennessee and the United States unless the Attorney-General of the United States, the Secretary of War, and the Secretary of the Treasury shall find that the proceeds for amount of said claim belong to the State of Tennessee and are due from the United States.

Mr. DOCKERY. That is what I understood. That was the statement of the gentleman's colleague [Mr. COX], that this claim for railroad iron was to be taken into account. Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not desire the Government to pay for any railroad iron that may have been owned by the State of Tennessee, or even by any individual. If we are to open up the settlements of transactions growing out of the military operations during the late war, I would prefer that our contributions should go to individuals.

Mr. COX. Let me put this question to the gentleman: Here is a State with a lien upon the iron and the rolling stock of a railroad. The Government takes that rolling stock with the State's lien upon it and sells it back to the State, and the State executes its bonds for it. Now, is it just that the Government of the United States shall seize the rolling stock of the State and sell it back to the State——

Mr. DOCKERY (interposing). I think I catch the gentleman's point. I want to say, in answer to my friend, that a great many damages were incident to the movements of the armies of the Confederacy and of the Union, respectively, during the period from 1861 to 1865, and can not properly find a settlement in the courts at this time or by any board of arbitration. The damages in this case resulted from a condition of war. Of course, if this claim had its origin in time of peace, it would stand upon an entirely different footing. This rolling stock upon which the State of Tennessee had a lien was seized in time of war.

Mr. COX. The rolling stock was sold by the Government of the United States and the State executed her bonds in payment for it. Now, the question is, if the Government seized the property of the State in time of war and sold it back to the State in winding up the war, is it not right that a settlement should be made?

Mr. DOCKERY. I think we ought to close up the accounts growing out of the civil war.

Mr. COX. I think so, too.

Mr. McMILLIN. That is the purpose of this bill.

Mr. DOCKERY. During my entire term of Congressional service I have voted against claims of this character incident to military movements, and shall continue so to vote until the end.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. How much time have I left, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has two minutes left.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Has the other side any time?

The SPEAKER. There are five minutes remaining on the other side.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I think the gentlemen on the other side ought to proceed now.

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I believe I am entitled to close the debate.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. All right. I do not care. Now, Mr. Speaker, the report of this committee is enough, it seems to me, to justify every member here in voting against this bill. Here is an enumeration of the bonds in question:

Bonds of the State of Tennessee owned by the United States	$335,666.66⅔

RECAPITULATION.

5 per cent bonds, registered, $1,000 each; issued under act October 18, 1832; matured January 1, 1863; interest due from January 1, 1861, to January 1, 1866, and from January 1, 1869	125,000.00
5½ per cent bonds, registered, $1,000 each, except last bond, which is for $1,666.66⅔; matured July 25, 1861; interest due from January 25, 1861. Act February 19, 1836	66,666.66⅔
6 per cent bonds, coupon, $1,000 each; issued under act January 30, 1850; matured July 1, 1880; interest due from various dates from January 1, 1861	104,000.00
5 per cent bonds, coupon, $1,000 each; act February 20, 1852; matured January 1, 1870; interest paid to date of maturity	40,000.00

Against this indebtedness they have a claim, according to this report, for something that the United States did during the war to some railroad that they had a mortgage on, and they are endeavoring to make the Government of the United States pay for waste committed upon property on which they had a mortgage. They have no legal claim. They have no equitable claim. They say themselves that, with all the wonderful liberality the United States has shown to its claimants in opening wide the doors of the Court of Claims to every sort and condition of claims, whether by a superannuated grandfather or by a sickly baby, whether for a college or for anything else—they say themselves that, in spite of all this liberality on the part of the Government, they could not go into court with this claim.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, it strikes me that the fears expressed by the gentleman from California [Mr. JOHNSON] who has just taken his seat are wholly without foundation. It is admitted on all hands that the Government of the United States holds certain bonds of the State of Tennessee for a sum specified in the report. It is claimed by the State of Tennessee that the Government is justly indebted to the State in a sum which is also set out in the report of the committee. These claims have been pending for many years, with no possibility, apparently, of their final adjustment. The Government has clamored for a settlement, and the State has clamored for a settlement, but in vain.

Both parties have expressed their willingness to leave the matter to the three officers of the Governmet named—the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Attorney-General—for an adjustment of the disputed points. The Attorney-General has examined the bill that is now before the House, and in a communication addressed to Senator HARRIS, which I will print as a part of my remarks, if there be no objection, stated that the bill is a proper one to be passed, and that the rights of the Government are fully guarded. He says:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, D. C., February 10, 1894.

MY DEAR SIR: I have examined the proposed joint resolution—a copy of which is annexed to this letter—and trust the same will meet the approval of Congress. Its terms seem to me to adequately protect the interests of the United States and its passage will facilitate the settlement of a controversy that ought to be settled without delay.

Very truly, yours,
RICHARD OLNEY,
Attorney-General.

Hon. ISHAM G. HARRIS,
United States Senate.

It is not proposed by this resolution to take a single dollar from the Treasury. It simply proposes to allow these three officers, in connection with the proper representatives of the State, to determine how much, if anything, is due from the Government to the State, or from the State to the Government; and in arriving at a determination we provide here that unless the railroad's claim is a legal one against the Government, and in favor of the State of Tennessee, it shall not be taken into account in reaching the adjustment of the claim.

But, Mr. Speaker, in addition to that, we have changed the Senate bill to force these officers to come to Congress with their report for confirmation. Not a dollar is to be paid out unless a future Congress, passing upon the acts of this commission, shall see fit to confirm their findings, and shall have determined that they not only administered justice, but have decided the law as it should be decided. So that there can be no possible danger from the passage of the resolution, the sole purpose of which is to permit an adjustment of these long-standing and complicated accounts, which it seems impossible to adjust in any other manner.

Mr. MCCALL of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I regret that some gentlemen seem to have a very incorrect opinion of the effect of this measure. There is not a single word or syllable in the bill that permits the Government to do anything in connection with the report until it shall have been approved by Congress. The Government is bound in no possible manner. It is further provided that if they shall find against the State of Tennessee, as in all probability they will, and the finding is approved by Congress, the legislature of the State must immediately make an appropriation to pay the amount so ascertained, and I am satisfied that the State will do it promptly.

But, sir, this matter has been pending for very many years and a settlement is desirable, and the Executive Departments of the Government have recommended the plan proposed as the proper one by which to arrive at a solution of the problem. It is no effort on the part of the State of Tennessee to gouge the Government, or to make a claim for payment to which it is not entitled. It does not make a dollar of appropriation, but simply allows a statement of the account to be reported to Congress, and if Congress shall be satisfied with the findings, it may take such steps as it sees proper to provide for the settlement, or it can set it all aside. It is bound in no possible way by this action.

Now, is the Government afraid to trust its case to arbitration? Is it unwilling that these Government officers, its own officers, shall examine and report whether or not they believe that there is one dollar due to the State of Tennessee, legally or equitably, and then let Congress take their report and say whether it is proper or not, and whether the debt, if any is found, shall be paid?

Mr. HENRY of Indiana. Is there any question as to the bonds?

Mr. MCCALL of Tennessee. None whatever.

Mr. HENRY of Indiana. Then why bring them in at all?

Mr. MCCALL of Tennessee. Because they form one of the features which must enter into the settlement.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. But suppose the commission finds that the Government owes the State of Tennessee $10, then the State can pay that amount and wipe out the whole thing.

Mr. MCCALL of Tennessee. Not at all; not unless it was ratified by Congress. The gentleman has misunderstood the reading of the bill. The report of this commission is of no force or effect until Congress acts upon and adopts it. It does not permit a settlement in that manner. The gentleman has not read correctly the bill, or he is mistaken in its provisions.

I appeal to the House, Mr. Speaker, to pass this bill, which is only a matter of justice and right. Let the two parties to the controversy have this opportunity of settling their claims. All the commission could do under the resolution would be to gather all the information relating to the controversy, make such recommendations as in its judgment is right, and submit the whole question to Congress in an intelligent way for its information and consideration.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The SPEAKER. The time for debate has expired, and the question is on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee to suspend the rules and pass the joint resolution as amended.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MCCALL of Tennessee) there were—ayes 59, noes 41.

So (two-thirds not voting in favor thereof) the motion was rejected.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the bill (S. 3500) for the relief of Stewart & Co., A. P. H. Stewart, agent, was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Claims.

IMPORTATION OF CERTAIN NEEDLEWORK.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the joint resolution (H. Res. 239) admitting free of duty needlework and similar articles imported by the New York Association of Sewing Schools for exhibition purposes.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Whereas the New York Association of Sewing Schools is collecting, through diplomatic and consular representatives of the United States in Europe, specimens of needlework and similar work done in the public schools of Europe, some of which specimens have already reached this country and are now in customs custody at New York: Therefore,

Resolved, etc., That all articles of needlework and similar articles which have been made by pupils in the schools of Europe, which have or shall be imported from Europe for the sole purpose of exhibition by said New York Association of Sewing Schools, shall be admitted free of payment of duty, customs fees, or charges, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe for the due exportation thereof at the close of such exhibition.

Mr. LOUD. Is not that pretty broad in its terms?

Mr. DOCKERY. I ask a second.

Mr. PAYNE. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, this joint resolution has received the indorsement of the Treasury Department, and is drawn in accordance with a letter written by the Secretary of the Treasury. In fact, the form of the joint resolution was suggested by the Secretary of the Treasury. The resolution has received the unanimous approval of the Committee on Ways and Means. It is in the usual form, and this is a concession that Congress has always made in the case of articles imported for exhibition.

Mr. MCCALL of Tennessee. Why should the Government of the United States remit the duty on articles imported to be exhibited in some New York enterprise?

Mr. PAYNE. This is hardly a New York enterprise. It is an exhibition that is open to the people of the Union, and which the people of Tennessee are invited to attend. I think it is the concession that was granted to the exposition now going on, or about to go on, in celebration of the centennial of the State of Tennessee.

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. How much will the Government be likely to lose in duties on account of this?

Mr. DALZELL. Nothing at all.

Mr. PAYNE. Nothing at all. It would simply stop the exhibition.

Mr. DALZELL. These articles are not for sale. They are to be exported.

Mr. PAYNE. They go back again. They are to be reexported.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I am not a member of the Committee on Ways and Means, but it seems to me that this resolution is drawn in a very loose manner. It seems to me there should be some date stated when this exhibition is to take place. I think if this resolution passes it may continue indefinitely, forever and evermore, amen. It seems to me that you might designate what this exhibition is, when it is to take place, and put some limitation upon it in some way or other.

Mr. PAYNE. The resolution was drawn in accordance with the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury. In fact, he transmitted to Congress the form of the resolution. The regulations are to be prescribed by him, and I think we can trust that to the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. LOUD. I do not refer to the regulations. It says:

Whereas the New York Association of Sewing Schools is collecting, etc.

Now, that association may continue forever and ever. I have no fear of trusting the Treasury Department to supervise it, but under this act, I assume that this might continue forever, or just so long as this association might continue to want to import these articles. I call the attention of the House to the fact that in my opinion the resolution is very loosely drawn, very broadly drawn, and I hope the Committee on Ways and Means will give attention to this matter.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Do I understand the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD] to say that we might get free trade by a construction of this bill?

Mr. LOUD. I think so. I know the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] does not want to pass a law that will remain in force and effect forever. There should be some limitation upon this. Make it one year, or five years, or ten years, or a hundred years, or something. I ask the gentleman's earnest attention to the loose manner in which this resolution is drawn. I have no interest in it, but it seems to me there should be some limitation. I appeal to the gentleman to give attention to the matter.

Mr. PAYNE. I certainly have not the slightest personal interest in this resolution. It came before the Committee on Ways and Means, and we thought that it was in the usual form. These goods are simply admitted free for the purpose of exhibition by this society, and then they are to be exported under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury. It seems to me there is no doubt about the propriety of the resolution.

Mr. LOUD. I understand. I am only appealing to the gentleman to put some limitations upon this, or else it will go on forever. The gentleman has just as much interest in it as I have. He wants to see the legislation which is passed here passed in proper form.

Mr. DALZELL. Nobody contemplates having an exhibition which will continue forever. It is an exhibition to be given by a sewing girls' society.

Mr. LOUD. I want to say that it is drawn in such a form that it might continue indefinitely, and the word "pupils" is also a very indefinite word.

And then (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

NATIONAL SOCIETY OF DAUGHTERS OF THE AMERICAN REVOLUTION.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 10023) setting apart a plot of public ground in the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia, for memorial purposes, under the auspices of the National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Speaker, would a motion to adjourn be in order?

The SPEAKER. A motion to adjourn is almost always in order.

Mr. STEELE. I move the House do now adjourn.

Mr. MORSE. I hope the gentleman will not press that motion until this bill is passed. It is a patriotic bill.

Mr. THOMAS. We have an order for a recess until 8 o'clock.

Mr. STEELE. I move we take a recess until 8 o'clock.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MORSE) there were—ayes 83, noes 11.

LEAVE TO WITHDRAW PAPERS.

Pending the announcement of the vote,

By unanimous consent, on motion of Mr. KENDALL, leave was granted to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Thierman & Frost, there being no adverse report thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. BLACK, for Tuesday, February 16.

To Mr. NEILL, for this evening, on account of ill health.

To Mr. BUCK, for one week, on account of important business.

To Mr. PARKER, for this evening's session, on account of important business.

To Mr. PITNEY, for this evening's session, on account of important business.

To Mr. MILES, for three days, on account of important business.

And then, the motion of Mr. STEELE having been agreed to, the House (at 4 o'clock and 58 minutes p. m.) took a recess until 8 o'clock p. m., the Speaker announcing that Mr. PAYNE would act as Speaker pro tempore at the evening session.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House was called to order at 8 o'clock p. m. by Mr. PAYNE as Speaker pro tempore.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the special order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the House shall on Monday and Tuesday, February 15 and 16, at 5 o'clock p. m., take a recess until 8 o'clock, at which evening session such business as is provided for by clause 2 of Rule XXVI shall be considered, and said evening sessions shall not extend beyond 11 o'clock and 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read clause 2 of Rule XXVI.

The Clerk read as follows:

The House shall on each Friday at 5 o'clock p. m. take a recess until 8 o'clock, at which evening session private pension bills, bills for the removal of political disabilities, and bills removing charges of desertion only shall be considered; said evening session not to extend beyond 10 o'clock and 30 minutes.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of bills on the Calendar under Rule XXVI and the special order.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. ERDMAN. Division!

The House divided; and there were—ayes 64, noes 3.

Mr. ERDMAN. No quorum, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. THOMAS. I move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read clause 4 of Rule XV.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whenever a quorum fails to vote on any question, and a quorum is not present and objection is made for that cause, unless the House shall adjourn, there shall be a call of the House, and the Sergeant-at-Arms shall forthwith proceed to bring in absent members, and the yeas and nays on the pending question shall at the same time be considered as ordered. The Clerk shall call the roll, and each member as he answers to his name may vote on the pending question, and, after the roll call is completed, each member arrested shall be brought by the Sergeant-at-Arms before the House, whereupon he shall be noted as present, discharged from arrest, and given an opportunity to vote and his vote shall be recorded. If those voting on the question and those who are present and decline to vote shall together make a majority of the House, the Speaker shall declare that a quorum is constituted, and the pending question shall be decided as the majority of those voting shall appear. And thereupon further proceedings under the call shall be considered as dispensed with. At any time after the roll call has been completed, the Speaker may entertain a motion to adjourn, if seconded by a majority of those present, to be ascertained by actual count by the Speaker; and if the House adjourns, all proceedings under this section shall be vacated. But this section of the rule shall not apply to the sessions of Friday night, until further order of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rule just read, the Sergeant-at-Arms will close the doors. The Clerk will proceed to call the roll, the Sergeant-at-Arms will bring in absent members, and those present whose names are called who are in favor of the motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole will say "yea," and those opposed will say "nay." The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 160, nays 5, not voting 190; as follows:

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask leave of absence for my colleague, Mr. JOY, who is detained from the House on account of sickness.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I ask that my colleague, Mr. LESTER, be excused on account of sickness.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Speaker, I move that my colleague, Mr. COCKRELL, be excused on account of sickness.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Speaker, I ask that my colleague, Mr. POWERS, be excused on account of sickness.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask that my colleague, Mr. BROWN, be excused on account of the illness of his wife.

Mr. THOMAS. I object.

Mr. TALBERT. I ask that my colleague, Mr. STRAIT, be excused on account of sickness.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. One moment. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McCALL] asks that his colleague [Mr. BROWN] be excused, and the gentleman from Michigan objects.

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. I ask that he be excused, on account of the illness of his wife.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say this to members, that after a quorum has been secured I will not object to this procedure of excuses for members, but for the present time I am obliged to do so.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, the ground on which my colleague has asked that Mr. BROWN be excused is not on account of his own sickness, but on account of the sickness of his wife. I now move that he be excused on account of the sickness of his wife.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I raise the question of order that under the rule excuses are not in order at this time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks that it is in order at this time. This rule provides that after the completion of the roll, the call shall still be in operation, that absent members may be brought to the bar of the House and given an opportunity to vote until after further proceedings are dispensed with.

Mr. THOMAS. As the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BROWN] is at home with a sick family, I withdraw my objection in this case.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. TALBERT. I ask that my colleague, Mr. STRAIT, be excused. He left the Hall this afternoon, and asked me to have him excused on account of sickness.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. MEREDITH. I ask that my colleague, Mr. TUCKER, be excused. The sad circumstances which cause him to be away are so well known that it is not necessary to state them.

There was no objection.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask that my colleague, Mr. JOY, be excused.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri has been excused.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask that my colleague, Mr. BERRY, be excused on account of important business.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. BURRELL. Mr Speaker, I ask that the gentleman from California [Mr. BARHAM] who sits by me be excused on account of sickness.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. KIEFER. Mr. Speaker, I ask that my colleague, Mr. McCLEARY, be excused. He was called out of town suddenly, and has not returned.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. TATE. Mr. Speaker, I ask that my colleague, Mr. RUSSELL, be excused on account of sickness.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. HOWE. Mr. Speaker, I ask that my colleague, Mr. FISCHER, be excused.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. ATWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask that my colleague, Mr. KNOX, be excused on account of sickness.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is informed that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. KNOX] is already excused.

Mr. STROWD of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask that my colleague, Mr. SHUFORD, be excused.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. MERCER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Is it in order for this body to excuse so many members that it will be impossible for us to get a quorum under the call of the House?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hardly thinks that is a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. GILLET of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask that my colleague, Mr. CHICKERING, be excused.

Mr. THOMAS. I object, unless it is a case of sickness.

Mr. THOMAS later withdrew the objection, and Mr. CHICKERING was excused.

Mr. STRONG. Mr. Speaker, I ask that my colleague, Mr. WILSON of Ohio, be excused on account of sickness in his family.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. HARTMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask that Mr. ALLEN of Utah be excused on account of illness in his family.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask that my colleague, Mr. PARKER, be excused.

Mr. HOWARD. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is informed that the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER] has already been excused.

Mr. DINSMORE. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the gentleman from Mississippi, Mr. ALLEN, be excused on account of important business.

Mr. EVANS. I object. [Laughter.]

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina moves that the House do now adjourn. Under the rule it requires a majority of those present to second the motion. As many as are in favor of seconding the motion that the House do now adjourn will stand until counted. [A pause.] No one rising to second the motion to adjourn, the motion is out of order. [Laughter.]

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WHEELER. It is evident that there is a quorum present, and I wish to ask the Chair if we can not now proceed to do business.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. According to the report of the Clerk, no quorum is yet present.

Mr. WHEELER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WHEELER. Is it not in order for the Speaker to now count the House, and, if there is a quorum present, to declare that fact?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks not, the House being now determining by a roll call whether or not there is a quorum present.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COX. Is not the trouble with the House just now that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] is not present, and that consequently we can not proceed with business? [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not regard that as a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I would inquire how many members are present?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. One hundred and seventy-five members are present.

Mr. DINSMORE. Mr. Speaker, I now move that the gentleman from Mississippi, Mr. ALLEN, be excused on account of important business.

A MEMBER. What is the business? [Laughter.]

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. DINSMORE, the Speaker pro tempore declared that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. DINSMORE. I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 45, noes 91; so the motion was rejected.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. MERCER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MERCER. The vote on the last proposition has not been announced by the Chair, as I understand it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is mistaken; it has been announced.

Mr. MERCER. Then I would like to know what the result was.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Ten members rose to second the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina, not a sufficient number, and consequently the motion was not seconded.

Mr. TALBERT. I ask that the other side be counted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The rule requires that a majority of those present shall second the motion.

Mr. TALBERT. Well, I want to know by a count of the other side whether you have a majority. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The record shows that the gentleman did not have a majority.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I rise to submit a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. I wish to submit a motion, if in order, that the Speaker direct the Sergeant-at-Arms to arrest absent members and bring before the bar of the House all who are absent without excuse.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not think that motion would be in order.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LEWIS. I understood the Speaker to rule a moment ago that the motion suggested by the gentleman from New Jersey, to require the Sergeant-at-Arms to arrest absentees and bring them to the bar of the House, would not be in order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That was not the motion.

Mr. WATSON of Ohio. If it had been, would it have been in order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will rule on that question when it is presented.

Mr. BLUE. Would it be in order to ask the recapitulation of the roll call?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will have the vote recapitulated.

The Clerk read the names of those voting.

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Speaker, if in order, I move that we send for the Committee on Rules, the gentlemen who brought about this session to-night. I have an impression that they are not here.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks the motion is not in order.

Mr. WHEELER. I ask unanimous consent to consider this bill. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is informed that the House still lacks one of a quorum, there being a mistake made on the first announcement.

Mr. TALBERT. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was not seconded, fifteen members only rising in favor thereof.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. At this stage, there being only one less than a quorum present, would it not be in order that the Speaker be counted as present?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The present occupant of the chair has been marked as present and voting for some time.

Mr. OTEY. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. OTEY. I understand that I was excused on account of sickness. I would like to know if it is a fact? [Laughter.]

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair can not entertain a request for unanimous consent. The only question now is the announcement of the vote, a quorum being present.

On this question 160 members have voted in the affirmative, 5 in the negative, and 14 members are recorded as present and not voting, the names of whom the Clerk will now read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Present and not voting: Mr. BARNEY, Mr. BARHAM, Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia, Mr. CLARK of Missouri, Mr. CURTIS of Iowa, Mr. DINSMORE, Mr. DOCKERY, Mr. HART, Mr. LOW, Mr. MINOR of Wisconsin, Mr. OTEY, Mr. SNOVER, Mr. SHERMAN, and Mr. STALLINGS.

The following members reported "present" after the call: Mr. TERRY and Mr. WILSON of Ohio.

So the motion of Mr. THOMAS was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. LACEY in the chair.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That House bills, as they are reached on the Calendar, be passed over without prejudice, and that Senate bills only be considered.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no!

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard on the resolution for a moment. We are within two weeks of the close of the session. Whatever legislation is to be considered by the House should be such as will most likely be enacted into law. If we take up House bills this evening, they will have to go to the Senate, and then to the President. The time is not sufficient for all this, and to give the necessary ten days before the close of the session. Now, in the interest of those who may be benefited by these bills, I think we ought to do that which will accomplish the greatest practical result. I understand that it is desirable for each of us to get our individual bills considered and to secure their passage by the House. While that may be praiseworthy and beneficial to us as individuals, yet we must look upon this matter from the standpoint of the beneficiaries, and for that reason we ought to pass the bills which have passed the Senate, so that they may go immediately to the President.

Mr. HULICK. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. THOMAS. Certainly.

Mr. HULICK. Do I understand the gentleman to say that House bills which we may take up to-night can not possibly become laws?

Mr. THOMAS. It is not entirely impossible for them to become laws, but it is improbable that they will, and we should take up the work which will accomplish the most.

Mr. WATSON of Ohio. I hope this resolution will be voted down. We ought not to pass Senate bills to the exclusion of bills relating to our particular friends and constituents. I am opposed to the resolution and hope it will be defeated.

Mr. MCCREARY of Kentucky. I am not in favor of the resolution offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. THOMAS]. I understood him to say that he desired to take up Senate bills in order to pass them, and that that would be the best way to expedite business. There are yet some eighteen days of this session remaining. I have seen bills passed in this House on Friday night when Congress adjourned on Monday, and yet those bills passed the Senate and were approved by the President.

Mr. HARDY. Was Grover Cleveland President at that time?

Mr. MCCREARY of Kentucky. Yes, he was. Therefore I am in favor of proceeding regularly and taking up the bills that are on the Calendar, so that there will be an equal chance for House bills and Senate bills in the order in which they appear on the Calendar. There is no reason why we should, at this time, give preference to Senate bills, because there is ample time for us to pass 50 or 100 more bills in the House, have them acted on in the Senate, and approved by the President. Therefore I hope the resolution will be voted down.

Mr. MCRAE. Mr. Chairman, I want to say one word on that motion.

The CHAIRMAN. This debate is by unanimous consent. No debate is in order except by unanimous consent.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Chairman, I want to say that I am perfectly willing to assist in facilitating the consideration of all just and reasonable bills. I have tried to attend these meetings when able to do so. I have a House bill that will be reached if you proceed with the Calendar regularly. A similar bill has been passed by the Senate, and I hope that I will be able to get consideration to-night. This is about the third time that the method of procedure here has been changed and the consideration of this little bill defeated. If it is delayed again, if this programme is carried out, the bill will be lost and a great injustice done an honest, worthy old man. On one evening the rule has been to call the roll, and then that was abandoned at the next meeting and the Calendar has been proceeded with. Then you adjourn over another night session. Now you tell us that we can not pass the House bills. I think the Senate can and will take care of all the just bills that you can pass. Now, if there are Senate bills similar to House bills which are upon the Calendar, it has been the custom to substitute them for the House bills when reached. Now, Mr. Chairman, I submit that it is not fair, when we have come here night after night for bills long ago reported, and which ought to be passed, to lay them aside and go to those which are at the foot of the Calendar simply because they have passed the Senate. I ask the committee to adhere to the rule adopted at the last session.

Mr. THOMAS. I understand that there are about four bills—possibly not more than three—which have passed the Senate and are on the Calendar awaiting the action of the House. I should be perfectly willing that, when the House bills are reached in the regular order, the Senate bills should be substituted for them. I have not the least objection to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the resolution offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. HARDY) there were—ayes 60, noes 79.

Accordingly the motion of Mr. THOMAS was rejected.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. I offer the following resolution.

Mr. THOMAS. Regular order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. This is the regular order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That House bills be considered in the following order: The Clerk to call the first bill on the Calendar, announce the number of it, the Calendar number, and the name of the member who introduced it, and upon his failure to respond "Present," the bill to be passed without prejudice and the next bill to be called in the same way; Senate bills to be called in regular order as they appear on the Calendar.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. This is the same order that we had at the last evening session. That gives those present the preference.

Mr. ELLIS. I would like to ask where this call begins, at the head of the Calendar, or where we left off?

Mr. THOMAS. At the head of the Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

CAROLINE A. GROSHON.

The CHAIRMAN. At the last session the committee was dividing at the time when the hour arrived for the committee to rise and the House adjourn; and the first thing in order will be to take a vote on the motion then pending. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7489) granting a pension to Caroline A. Groshon.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed that notwithstanding the Calendar says that this bill was disposed of in the House after the committee rose, it appears on the Calendar as unfinished business.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. The bill was under discussion when the committee rose.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. The bill just called was introduced by me, was under discussion when the committee rose, and is unfinished business.

The CHAIRMAN. The statement of the gentleman from New York is undoubtedly correct. The question is on reporting the bill back to the House with the recommendation that it do lie on the table.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. Division!

The committee proceeded to divide.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Mr. Chairman, I think the committee does not understand the question.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 10, noes 56.

So the motion was rejected.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. I move that the bill be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Chairman, what bill is this?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7489) granting a pension to Caroline A. Groshon.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Caroline A. Groshon, daughter of William Groshon, late a private in Captain Messeroe's company of New York Militia in the United States service, and pay her a pension of $8 per month from the 14th day of October, 1885, in lieu of the pension which her late mother, Catharine Groshon, was entitled to and received under the act of Congress approved February 14, 1871.

The Committee on Pensions recommended the following amendments:

Strike out the word "Messeroe's," in line 7, and substitute therefor the word "Missine's;" insert after the word "service," in line 8, the words "in the war of 1812;" strike out all after the word "month" in line 9.

Mr. BLUE. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order.

Mr. BLUE. I move that when the committee rise this bill be reported back with the recommendation that it be recommitted to the Committee on Pensions. Upon that I just simply wish to say that if I understand it correctly, this is an attempt to pension either the granddaughter or some remote relative of a soldier of the war of 1812.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. Will you allow me to interrupt you? You do not understand it correctly.

Mr. BLUE. Then let us have the report read, as a part of my remarks, and we will find how it is.

The report (by Mr. HOWE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7489) entitled "A bill granting a pension to Caroline A. Groshon," beg leave to submit the following report, and recommend that said bill do pass, with amendments.

The claimant is the unmarried daughter of William Groshon, who served from September 2, 1814, to December 3, 1814, in Captain Missine's company of New York Volunteers in the war of 1812.

Miss Groshon swears that she was born January 19, 1827, and that she is the only surviving child of the soldier. She further swears that she is dependent entirely upon her daily labor for support, and that her mother, the soldier's widow, who was a pensioner, died October 14, 1885.

The claimant's allegations are fully corroborated by the affidavits of J. W. Hatsey and A. B. Russell, citizens of New York City, who have known her for more than thirty years.

There are several precedents for the proposed legislation, and the House has at this session passed a bill granting a pension to an old and needy daughter of a soldier of the war of 1812.

The following amendments are recommended: Strike out the word "Messeroe's," in line 7, and substitute therefor the word "Missine's;" insert after the word "service," in line 8, the words "in the war of 1812;" strike out all after the word "month," in line 9.

Mr. BLUE. Now, Mr. Chairman, I was not mistaken about that after all. Did I catch the statement correctly that this party was born in 1827?

Mr. MILNES. That is correct.

Mr. BLUE. That is the kind of a minor we propose to pension. A case of this kind becomes exceedingly pathetic when it is spoken of as a dependent daughter. How old would the father have been if he had lived to earn the maintenance of this dependent daughter?

Mr. Chairman, this House has recently either laid upon the table several bills of this character or left them on the Calendar without prejudice, and upon one occasion has recommitted the bill. If this matter is to be pursued in the line in which the House in former Congresses has progressed, and we are to pathetically pension a minor born in 1827, what will become of the Treasury of the United States when we come to pensioning orphans of the soldiers of the late war? It is about time that this should stop; and I stand here to antagonize it, because I believe it is wrong and without any principle upon which a pension should be based. I desire to be consistent. I made the motion to recommit a bill the other day, and it was carried. I trust that the House will stand by the action already taken; and that at no very remote period it will repeal all legislation of this kind. Let us pension some of the minor children of the soldiers of the late war; let us pension some of the dependent widows of the late war who are seeking a pension, and not minors who were born in 1827.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. Mr. Chairman, it is an interesting spectacle to see the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. BLUE] come here in the early part of the session and secure the passage of a bill to pension a photographer who had never enlisted in the war of the rebellion or any other war, and then come here at this time and talk about it being time for this thing to stop. We have here a bill, not to pension a photographer; and I say again the gentleman was mistaken in his remarks. This lady was not a granddaughter, and not a distant relative, but the daughter of a soldier, an officer, of the war of 1812.

Mr. BLUE. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. FAIRCHILD. I will.

Mr. BLUE. I wish to say, with the gentleman's permission, that at the time I favored the bill of which he speaks I believed that the man had been wounded in the discharge of his duty, and the evidence showed that fact. But even if I was mistaken in that particular, that bill failed to become a law, although it had been passed by a prior House of Representatives. If I had not believed that that soldier, although he was a photographer, had been injured in the line of duty, I never should have urged that bill here, and if I did wrong in that case, I beg pardon of the House, but I insist that this case shall be considered on its merits.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. The gentleman was not mistaken in another thing that he said. It was in 1827 that this old lady was born. She is now 70 years of age. Her father died when she was a minor. If she were the daughter of a soldier of the war of the rebellion instead of the daughter of a soldier of the war of 1812, she would be entitled to a pension under the general law, and I do not understand that kind of patriotism which confines itself entirely to consideration for the soldiers of the civil war. This is a maiden lady, quite old, in poverty, with no means of support unless this bill shall pass. The widow of the soldier received a pension because of her husband's death. The widow's death left this lady, the daughter of the soldier, with no means of support, and this bill proposes to give to the daughter the pension that was given to the widow of the soldier in her lifetime. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. If the committee will bear with me a moment, I desire to say, as chairman of the Committee on Pensions which reported this bill, that it is similar in character to several others that have been reported and have passed the Committee of the Whole at this session, and also similar to bills which have passed in preceding Congresses, but which, in my judgment, are all wrong in principle. As a member of the Committee on Pensions in the Fifty-third Congress I, with others, stood and fought against favorable reports upon bills of this kind, but we were defeated, and those bills being brought before the House in that Congress were passed. Simply in conformity to the precedent then established did the committee report these bills in this Congress; and I desire to say that it would take a very wise man, a man of very keen perceptions and of great industry, to keep up with the incongruities of the Committee of the Whole of the House of Representatives in their legislation on pension matters. [Laughter.] I honestly believe that these cases ought to be rejected, but in my judgment it ought to be done by general law. I can see no real reason why this bill should meet the disapproval of the Committee of the Whole, unless it be that such disapproval is a forerunner of what is to be the judgment of that committee in the future and of the House of Representatives, leading to the repeal of some very bad precedents.

Mr. THOMAS. Can the gentleman tell us how many such cases there are?

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Do you mean that have passed at this session?

Mr. THOMAS. Yes.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. I can not say exactly, but I should think about seven or eight—not many. I would like to say, further, that within the last week or two it has been the disposition of the Committee of the Whole and also of this House to either lay bills of this character upon the table without prejudice, or else to refer them back to the committee. I make this statement simply that members here present may do as they think fit and proper in regard to this bill, with a full understanding of the position of the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MEREDITH. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to antagonize the passage of my friend's bill, but I wish to call attention to a fact within my experience, which I am sure must also be within the experience of nearly every member of the House. I have had at least twenty or thirty letters in cases of this character, making applications for pensions for children of soldiers of the war of 1812, and in each case I have written that the Pensions Committee had never gone so far as to pension children of the soldiers of that war. I did not know until it was mentioned here just now that such a precedent had ever been set; but I do undertake to say that there are thousands, yea, tens of thousands, of cases just as meritorious as the one now under consideration——

Mr. FAIRCHILD. If the gentleman will permit me to interrupt him a moment, I think he confuses this case with cases of another character.

Mr. MEREDITH. No, I do not.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. He confused it the other night with the case just preceding, which was the case of a grandson of a soldier, not of a soldier's child; and I am informed, and I am quite sure correctly informed, that, so far as the daughters of soldiers of the Revolutionary war and daughters of soldiers of the war of 1812 are concerned, there are only seven of each class remaining.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. I want to say to the gentleman from New York that he is mistaken when he intimates that any bills have been reported to pension the granddaughters or the grandsons of soldiers of any war.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. I do not mean reported by the gentleman's committee.

Mr. MEREDITH. I repeat, Mr. Chairman, that I do not desire to antagonize my friend's bill, but I say again that I have had dozens of letters making applications in cases of this kind, and I suppose that every member who hears me has had such applications in cases quite as meritorious as the one that is now before us. Now, if we are to pension these people, we ought to pass a general law for the benefit of the soldiers of the war of 1812 and their children. We did undertake to pension the children of Revolutionary soldiers, but that was done upon the theory that by reason of the lapse of time there must necessarily be very few of them. As to the war of 1812, there are thousands and tens of thousands of the children of the soldiers of that war just as poor and needy and deserving as the beneficiary of my friend's bill, but I do maintain upon principle that if they are to be pensioned they all ought to stand on the same footing, and that a general law should be passed giving pensions to the children of the soldiers of the war of 1812, if they are to be given at all.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. There are only seven cases of the daughters of the war of 1812.

Mr. MEREDITH. Oh, my friend, you are entirely mistaken; there are over 7,000.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I do not propose to take up the time of the committee in discussing the bill. I only wanted to express my gratification at seeing a development here to-night in the Committee of the Whole of a spirit of justice and of a spirit that shows a tendency to return to sound principles. I do hope that the members of this committee will show themselves to-night to be worthy of the issue that they are to meet in voting on this bill.

Now, it has been said by some gentleman here in the debate that there are only a few days more remaining of this session, and that the object was to bring forward only meritorious bills for the benefit of the old soldiers, against whose claims nobody will raise a voice, and let them be passed and go to the Senate and then to the President as speedily as possible. I am glad to see gentlemen on the other side rise to-night and condemn this practice of a violation of our pension law and this practice of following precedents unworthy to be followed by honest, upright, and patriotic legislators.

I do hope, Mr. Chairman, that they are going to conform to the law hereafter, and bring forward only these bills that are for meritorious old soldiers. [Applause.] I hope they will not bring forward any bills of the character we have had heretofore which have created so much discussion on this floor. I hope they will put the old soldiers' claims in the vanguard, and put them forward on every occasion and let them go through. [Applause.] I hope to-night that no bills for the benefit of deserters, or bounty jumpers and coffee coolers [laughter], for camp followers, and all that class, will be brought up here for consideration. I hope also that there will be no bills brought in here for remarried widows, but that the bills that do come up for consideration will be bills that can be passed without anybody saying a word against them; bills for the benefit of those who are entitled to pensions at the hands of this Government, men who supported the flag, and sustained their injuries in the line of duty. [Applause.] Let these old pensioners have their pension before they die.

I hope, therefore, to start with in that direction, that this bill now pending will be covered out of sight, and that the motion that it lie on the table will be carried unanimously. And then let us start out on the broad path of justice and right and not violate our own laws as we have been doing. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kansas, that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it be recommitted to the committee.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. Is that an amendment to my motion?

The CHAIRMAN. It is a substitute.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. Because I made the motion that it be reported favorably.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. BLUE; and on a division (demanded by Mr. FAIRCHILD) there were—ayes 68, noes 55.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. I demand tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it is too late now, the vote having been announced.

WILLIAM SHEPPARD.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3402) granting a pension to William Sheppard, late of Company A, Sixteenth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William Sheppard, late of Company A, Sixteenth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and grant him a pension at the rate of $50 per month.

Mr. HULING. Mr. Chairman, I ask for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. KERR) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3402) granting a pension to William Sheppard, late of Company A, Sixteenth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, submit the following report:

The soldier was a private in Company A, Sixteenth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and was honorably discharged. He was wounded in November, 1862, and taken prisoner. He was shot through the left ankle, and is now drawing a pension of $12 per month for gunshot wound of left ankle.

The evidence shows that upon his return home he was sick for a long time with his wound, and blood poisoning resulting therefrom. An abscess appeared on his left hip, and he was generally very much debilitated.

In 1887 he made application for an increase, assigning as a cause therefor muscular paralysis of left side and increase of disability from gunshot wound.

A medical board in 1887 reported:

"Scar of the left lateral side of buttock, which is tender and probably the result of sympathetic abscess. There is loss of sensation on the left side; is compelled to go with cane and crutch."

In 1893 medical board reported:

"He is entitled, in our opinion, to $50 per month for gunshot wound of left ankle and paralysis."

In 1894 medical board reported:

"He can neither stand nor walk; his condition is one of almost helpless dependence."

The evidence of many witnesses shows the soldier's helpless and dependent condition. He requires the frequent aid and attendance of other persons, and under the law, if his disability is of service origin his rate would be $50 per month.

The evidence satisfies the committee that the paralysis is the result of blood poisoning, and that was beyond question the result of his wound.

The passage of the bill is therefore recommended, with the following amendment:

Insert in line 6, after the word "late," the word "private."

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Chairman, may I inquire of the gentleman having this bill in charge why an application has not been made to the Pension Bureau?

Mr. HULING. I will say that I think the application has been made.

Mr. ERDMAN. There is nothing in the report to show that it was rejected.

Mr. KERR. Mr. Chairman, I reported this bill from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and can answer the inquiry of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I have no doubt the gentleman, if present when the matter was considered by the committee, has full knowledge of the subject.

The pensioner made application and was examined by a board which reported that he was entitled to $50 a month. Notwithstanding that fact, his application was rejected by the Bureau, and then the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. HULING] introduced a bill in the House, which was referred to the committee and favorably reported by that committee, largely upon the examination of the medical board. If I recollect right, the evidence shows that three boards passed on the case, each reporting that the disability was from service origin; and the last report declared him entitled to a rating of $50 per month.

So it seems from the evidence that there is no question that the bill ought to pass.

Mr. ERDMAN. I simply desire to remark that this is a very large pension, $50 a month, for a disability which the medical board, in 1887, say amounts to a—

Scar of the left lateral side buttock, which is tender and probably the result of sympathetic abscess.

This is simply on a par with what we have seen the House do—run mad in the granting of enormous pensions; and it is the evidence of that liberal spirit I expected to see developed here when a full quorum appeared.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Chairman, the rest of the report to which the gentleman has referred ought to be read for the information of the House. The committee ought not to be put into the ridiculous position it is sought to be placed in by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and I desire to call your attention to the report that has been already read by the Clerk, and not to the words repeated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania—a mere extract from the report.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment recommended by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation, there being, on a division—ayes 81, noes 4.

LYDIA W. HOLLIDAY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7432) for the relief of Lydia W. Holliday, of Wheeling, Ohio County, W. Va.; which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place Lydia W. Holliday, of Wheeling, Ohio County, W. Va., late army nurse in the army hospitals of the United States Volunteers, in the late war, from 1861 to 1865, on the pension roll, at $12 per month from and after the passage of this act.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions recommended the following amendment:

In line 8 strike out the word "twelve" and insert the word "thirty."

Mr. TALBERT. A point of order, Mr. Chairman. As I understand it, the resolution which was adopted provided that the name of the gentleman introducing the bill should be called, and if he was not present it should be passed over.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. DOVENER] is present and responded.

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Chairman, let us have the report read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ERDMAN] calls for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. KERR) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7422) for the relief of Lydia W. Holliday, of Wheeling, Ohio County, W. Va., submit the following report:

The beneficiary of this bill is now 94 years of age and in destitute circumstances, and has no one upon whom she has any claims for support.

She had three sons in the Union Army, one of whom died a few years after the war from army disabilities; another was shot while in the Government service by a rebel spy and killed.

Mrs. Holliday made application to the Pension Office for pension as an army nurse, but her claim was rejected on the ground that she had not been employed as nurse by any person having authority to employ nurses.

She served as volunteer nurse for more than three years. Her services were most faithful, and were rendered without any pay or expectation of pay, but were purely the ministrations of humanity and patriotism.

The committee is of the opinion that the Government should make a reasonable provision for this old woman, and recommend the passage of the bill, with the following amendment: Strike out of line 8 "twelve" and insert "thirty."

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendments, to perfect the bill:

In line 4, after the word "place," insert the words, "the name of."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting a pension to Lydia W. Holliday."

Mr. STEELE. I have a little curiosity to learn how the committee came to raise the amount in this bill from $12 to $30. The member introducing the bill seemed to know his business, and after he introduced it, it was increased $18 by the committee.

Mr. KERR. I can answer the gentleman. I wrote the report on this bill. The matter was brought before the committee, and the facts certainly justified the amendment proposed by the committee. In the first place, this lady is now 95 years old, and it is absolutely certain that she can not draw this pension more than a year or two. It was shown by the evidence that she served faithfully for three years as a nurse without any compensation or any expectation of compensation.

In addition to that, two of her sons were sacrificed in the war upon the Union side.

We thought, taking all these circumstances into consideration, that we ought not to quibble about the amount, but that $30 a month for the few remaining days of this old woman's life was about right.

Mr. STEELE. I wish to apologize for the suggestion that the gentleman who introduced this bill knew his business. It seems that he did not.

Mr. DOVENER. I will not accept the gentleman's apology. I introduced that bill.

Mr. STEELE. Do you still think $12 is enough?

Mr. DOVENER. No; I do not.

Mr. STEELE. Then you owe the House an apology.

Mr. DOVENER. No; I do not, and this House will show you that I do not.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. THOMAS].

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I should like to have this matter considered a little while.

Mr. STEELE. Oh, let the old soldiers, whom you are so anxious about, get their pensions.

Mr. TALBERT. I know that this is an old lady, and there is no doubt about her being helpless. That seems to be the only special reason advanced why she should be pensioned. There are a great many old ladies in this country of ours who are helpless, and some older than she is.

Mr. STEELE. Not many 95 years old, who lost two sons in the Army.

Mr. TALBERT. There is no reason why they should come to the Congress of the United States and get a bonus. She had three gallant sons in the Union Army. That is undoubtedly true. She made application to the Pension Office for a pension as an army nurse, but her claim was rejected on the ground that she had not been employed as a nurse by any person having authority to employ nurses. Now, it seems to me that that fact ought to weigh with this House before we hurriedly pass such a claim as this.

The statement is made here that she served for three years as a nurse. Possibly she did; but where is the testimony? Where is the evidence, except simply the statement in the report of this committee? What information was furnished to this committee? What kind of testimony was brought before the committee? Was there any sworn testimony to show that she served for three years?

Mr. THOMAS. Oh, yes; there is conclusive testimony that she served three years as an army nurse.

Mr. TALBERT. I am asking for information.

Mr. THOMAS. Yes.

Mr. TALBERT. Why is it that the committee have not furnished some sworn statement in their report? If you will examine the form laid down by law, upon which applications are to be made for pensions, you will find blanks on which you are required to make sworn statements of these facts. I see nothing of that kind here. Then, again, this is away above the ratable pension for any army nurse by two and a half times. It seems to me that if you give her a pension at all you have carried it entirely too high. I make no particular fight against this claim; I just make this statement. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill H. R. 7800, Calendar No. 754, by Mr. PICKLER.

Mr. NORTHWAY. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. NORTHWAY. The first bill we dealt with to-night was Calendar No. 766. Why are we going back?

The CHAIRMAN. The bill Calender No. 766 was pending before the committee at its last session. It was unfinished business. The committee was dividing upon the bill when the committee rose.

Mr. NORTHWAY. How, then, did we pass down that far?

The CHAIRMAN. It was passed without prejudice and returned to.

JOSEPH S. BUNKER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 649) granting a pension to Joseph S. Bunker; which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll the name of Joseph S. Bunker, a soldier in the Southern or Sabine war of 1836, and allow him a pension rated at $15 per month.

Mr. ERDMAN. Let us have the report read.

The report (by Mr. LOUDENSLAGER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 649) entitled "A bill granting a pension to Joseph S. Bunker," beg leave to submit the following report, and recommend that said bill do pass with an amendment:

The claimant served from September 27, 1836, to March 27, 1837, in Capt. B. G. Clark's company of Arkansas Volunteers in the Sabine Indian disturbances. His service is a matter of record, and has been recognized by the allowance of a bounty-land warrant, but the survivors of the Sabine war being inadvertently omitted from the provisions of the act of July 27, 1892, his claim thereunder was disallowed at the Pension Office.

It is shown by a numerously signed petition on file with your committee that the beneficiary is about 80 years old, in badly crippled physical condition, and in very poor circumstances financially.

The following amendment is recommended: Strike out the word "fifteen," in line 7, and substitute therefor the word "eight."

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

DANIEL T. TOLLETT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7501) for the relief of Daniel T. Tollett.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Chairman, I ask to substitute the bill S. 2832, which is identical in terms with the House bill. It is on the Calendar.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 2832) for the relief of Daniel T. Tollett.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Daniel T. Tollett, of Centerpoint, Howard County, Ark., late a private in Captain Moore's company Arkansas Mounted Volunteers, Sabine Indian war, and pay him a pension at the rate of $8 per month.

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Chairman, let us have the report.

The report (by Mr. LOUDENSLAGER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2832) granting a pension to Daniel T. Tollett, have considered the same, and respectfully report as follows:

A House bill of similar import has been before your committee at this term, and the same, having been favorably reported, is on the Calendar awaiting the action of the House. The report accompanying that bill (House report 1304) fully sets forth the facts, and is as follows:

"This is a bill enacting that Daniel T. Tollett be placed upon the pension roll because of his service in the Sabine Indian war.

"The records of the Auditor for the War Department show that the claimant was enrolled September 4, 1836, as a private in Captain Moore's company of Arkansas Mounted Volunteers and served until January 21, 1837, when honorably discharged.

"His claim at the Pension Bureau under the Indian-war act of July 27, 1892, was rejected December 20, 1895, on the ground that the act makes no provision for pensions on account of service in the Sabine war. This action was undoubtedly correct as the laws now stand, but it is also true that the Sabine disturbances were left out of the act of July 27, 1892, only through oversight, as it was intended to cover all the recognized Indian wars occurring from 1832 to 1842 in that act, and Congress has acted favorably upon every private act brought forward for the relief of the survivors of that war.

"Mr. Tollett is now about 79 years old and in dependent circumstances. These facts are abundantly shown by the papers filed at the Pension Bureau."

The amount of pension carried by the Senate bill being the same as that recommended by your committee in the House bill, it is recommended that the Senate bill be substituted for the House bill, and that the same be passed.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill H. R. 7501 will be reported back to the House with the recommendation that it lie on the table.

LUCINDA ANDREWS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8954) granting a pension to Lucinda Andrews, of Essex, Vt.

The bill was read.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. I ask that that bill be laid aside without prejudice.

Mr. GROUT. Wait a moment. I ask that the bill S. 1105 be substituted for that.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Senate bill will be substituted.

The bill was read.

Mr. HENRY of Indiana. Is that the same bill?

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. That is another bill.

Mr. GROUT. It is not the same.

Mr. LEIGHTY. I make the point of order that the Senate bill has to be for the same party as the House bill.

Mr. GROUT. This is not the same as the House bill or for the same beneficiary. I ask to have consideration of it substituted for the other bill.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not in order, unless it is a bill for the same beneficiary coming from the Senate.

Mr. GROUT. But I ask unanimous consent of the committee that it be considered.

Mr. LEIGHTY. I object.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. I ask that the bill (Calendar No. 783) be laid aside without prejudice.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it will be so ordered. Does the gentleman from Vermont desire to have the bill H. R. 6954 acted upon?

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Chairman, I will say in reference to that bill, I do not wish to take the time of the House with it. It is one of those bills coming from the Committee on Pensions. The beneficiary is the daughter of a Revolutionary soldier, and also a soldier of the war of 1812; but I presume in the judgment of the House that would not entitle her to consideration, and I am not going to press consideration of that bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill will be passed over without prejudice.

CORYDON WINKLER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2974) to correct the military record of Corydon Winkler, late private Eighth Company, First Battalion, First Ohio Sharpshooters; which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to remove from the rolls and records in the office of the Adjutant-General of the United States Army the charge of desertion now standing on said rolls and records against Corydon Winkler, late a private of the Eighth Company, First Battalion, Ohio Sharpshooters, and issue to him an honorable discharge, to date the 1st of May, 1864.

Mr. TALBERT. Let us have the report read.

The CHAIRMAN. The report will be read in the time of the gentleman from South Carolina.

The report (by Mr. WOOMER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2974) to correct the military record of Corydon Winkler, late private Eighth Company, First Battalion, First Ohio Sharpshooters, beg leave to submit the following report, and recommend that said bill do pass with the following amendment:

Substitute the words "War Department" for the words "Adjutant-General of the United States Army."

It is shown by the records of the War Department that Corydon Winkler was mustered into the service on November 10, 1863, as a private in the Eighth Independent Company, Ohio Volunteer Sharpshooters, and that on the 31st day of December following he was detailed as chief sawyer in the steam sawmill in Bridgeport, Ala.

The muster-out roll of company, dated July 19, 1865, reports him as "deserted between January and May, 1864, from Bridgeport, Ala., where he had been detailed as a sawyer."

The above is all that is shown by the record, but the numerous affidavits filed with the committee and with the Department of War indicate clearly the circumstances under which the soldier left the service. Soon after Winkler was detailed on duty in the sawmill his company was ordered to Chattanooga, and he was left in Bridgeport in charge of said mill. He remained in charge of the mill at Bridgeport until some time in the month of April, 1864, when he was completely disabled by having one of his legs crushed between two saw logs. The injury which he thus received was such as to completely disable and disqualify him for military duty or for duty in the sawmill. He was not an educated man, and by said injury was rendered practically incapable of performing work of any kind.

As soon as the soldier was able to travel, at his own request he was sent to Nashville, Tenn., and thence to his home and his family in Ohio. The many affidavits referred to show that ever since his injury was first received his leg has been entirely stiff at the knee, and that he could not have rendered any service to the Government if he had remained at Bridgeport longer.

The evidence satisfies the committee beyond all reasonable doubt that it was not the intention of Corydon Winkler to desert the service of the United States, and that he went home with the full knowledge and assent of the officer in charge of said sawmill, himself and all others believing that his injuries were such that he could no longer remain in the service in any useful capacity whatever.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, the committee have heard the report read, and ought to be satisfied that there is no merit in the case; and I therefore move that the bill be reported back to the House with the recommendation that it lie on the table.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. TALBERT. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 17, noes 43.

Mr. TALBERT. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman makes the point that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and ten—a quorum is present; the noes have it, and the motion is rejected.

The question is upon the amendment offered by the committee.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. TALBERT. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided, and there were—ayes 52, noes 2.

Mr. TALBERT. No quorum has voted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point—the ayes have it, and the amendment is agreed to. The question is on laying aside the bill as amended with a favorable recommendation——

Mr. TALBERT. I would like to be heard one moment. I want to say——

The CHAIRMAN. The committee is dividing—the ayes appear to have it, the ayes have it, and the motion is agreed to.

Mr. TALBERT. A point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TALBERT. I think I rose before the Chair put the motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman rose to debate the question, and debate is not in order when the committee is dividing.

Mr. TALBERT. But nobody had asked for a division. I just want to say one thing. I am sorry to see the committee have backslidden. We started out very well, and you had better pension every one of the daughters of Revolutionary soldiers than these deserters and bounty jumpers. There is no justice in this claim.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

JAMES W. DUNN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 321) granting a pension to James W. Dunn; which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of James W. Dunn, late private, Company E, Ninety-third Pennsylvania Volunteers, at the rate of $30 per month.

Mr. TALBERT. Let us have the report, Mr. Chairman.

The report (by Mr. ANDERSON) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 321) granting a pension to James W. Dunn, beg leave to submit the following report:

It is shown by the records and evidence on file in the Pension Office that this man received gunshot wounds in the head and in the left groin in the battle at Fair Oaks, Va., May 31, 1862; that the bullet remained in the latter wound for fifteen years, causing constant suppuration; that while the ball remained and the wound was still discharging, he had two strokes of paralysis—one in 1869 and another in 1874—and a preponderance of the medical evidence is to the effect that these strokes of paralysis were caused by the wound and its results. The ball came out in 1877, but another stroke followed in 1882, which caused complete paralysis of left side, and claimant has since been totally disabled, and now requires the regular aid and attendance of another person, being unable to walk or even to stand alone.

Your committee consider this a meritorious case, and recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Chairman, I think we ought to know a little more than this one paragraph why we should grant this large pension. I would like to know whether this claimant ever made application to the Pension Bureau. No one here seems to be in charge of the bill.

Mr. NORTHWAY. It is a Senate bill.

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Chairman, it does not appear that this is a proper claim. There is not sufficient evidence set forth in this report for us to take intelligent action on this bill as it stands. I therefore move that the word "sixty" be stricken out and "twelve" be inserted instead.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Chairman, it appears from the report, which has been read to the committee, that this man received a gunshot wound in the head and one in the left groin at the battle of Fair Oaks, that the bullet remained in the latter wound, causing constant suppuration, and that while the bullet remained unextracted and the wound was still discharging he had two strokes of paralysis. That is the evidence in this case, and it is abundant to entitle him to $12 a month. It has been some time since the bill was considered by the committee, and I am not advised as to the case further than what the report shows, but this is a bill that has passed the Senate for this amount, and I think we ought to hesitate before changing it in the manner proposed by the amendment.

Mr. ERDMAN. The acting chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions will certainly agree with me that we ought to know whether this man made application to the Pension Bureau and whether his claim was rejected.

Mr. THOMAS. My recollection is that the man did apply and that the paralysis was not recognized as being due to the army service or as resulting from the wounds, and the nature of the wounds make it a doubtful question, as the report states, but there is reason to believe from the condition of one of the wounds that it was the cause of the paralysis.

Mr. ANDERSON. My recollection about this case is that the soldier was drawing $12 per month under the law of 1890, because his disabilities could not be traced back to service origin.

Mr. STEELE. How much pension is he receiving now?

Mr. ANDERSON. My recollection is that he is receiving $12.

Mr. STEELE. I move to amend the amendment by striking out "sixty" and inserting "thirty."

Mr. MILNES. I want to say that I had a very similar case to this before the Committee of the Whole a few days ago, a case in which the applicant was totally helpless, requiring the attendance of another person all the time, his paralysis resulting from a gunshot wound, and the Committee on Pensions cut the pension in that case from $50 to $30 a month, at which rate it passed the House.

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Chairman, I want to say to the committee that I think it is about time we stopped these large pensions. They are directly responsible for the great unrest and disquietude which exist amongst the soldiers. The majority of those who are drawing pensions to-day are becoming dissatisfied with the amount they are drawing under the general law, and applications are springing up by hundreds and thousands for increases, and they will come here to trouble you by the hundred thousand if you continue to grant these enormous pensions. I sincerely trust that if the amendment I have offered does not pass, the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE] will pass.

The amendment of Mr. ERDMAN as amended by the amendment of Mr. STEELE was then adopted.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

EUNICE P. BIGELOW.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7548) granting a pension to Eunice P. Bigelow; which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Eunice P. Bigelow, widow of John R. Bigelow, late surgeon of the Eighty-third Regiment New York State Volunteers (Ninth Militia), at the rate of $30 per month.

Mr. ERDMAN. Let us have the report read.

The report (by Mr. WOOD) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7548) granting a pension to Eunice P. Bigelow, submit the following report:

Claimant is past 78 years of age; is feeble, poor, and destitute. She is the widow of Dr. John R. Bigelow, who served as surgeon of Ninth New York State Militia in the field with the Army of the Shenandoah from June 25, 1861, to August 10, 1861. This regiment was afterwards Eighty-third New York Volunteers. Dr. Bigelow seems to have been commissioned as surgeon of this latter regiment by the governor of New York, but for some reason, unexplained, he was not mustered, nor did he serve as such officer.

From January 20, 1863, to December 9, 1865, he served as contract surgeon, excepting a period from February 15, 1864, to April 29, 1864. His service and discharge appear to be alike honorable.

There is no doubt from the evidence but that Dr. Bigelow incurred diseases in the service that followed him to his death. This was malarial poisoning with resultant chronic diarrhea and chills, which affected him in his last illness. He died November 13, 1887, the immediate cause being peritonitis. On October 3, 1887, he applied for the first time for a pension, which was allowed, after his death, at rate of $17 per month. The accrued pension was paid the claimant as his widow, and she has been pensioned at $8 from July 26, 1890, under act of June 27, 1890. Her application under general law has been rejected, and from the decision an appeal was taken to the Secretary of the Interior and the decision of the Pension Bureau affirmed. Three times the case has been reopened by the Secretary of the Interior, but the previous decision has been adhered to.

The Pension Bureau does not accept the cause of death as a result of the disease contracted in the service.

Dr. Bigelow was 79½ years old at the time of his death. His attending physician certified to the cause of his death as peritonitis, cause unknown; subsequently he files affidavit to the effect that, on mature reflection, he regards the cause of his death the diseases of service origin. Other evidence, medical and lay, indicates that the diseases admitted to be contracted in the service had something to do with his death; how much no one knows.

The committee are unable to say that the decision of the Pension Office is erroneous or unjust, or that claimant has not been considerately and fairly treated by the officers in charge of the Pension Office.

But this claimant is very old and poor. She was married to the soldier September 13, 1836. They appear never to have had children. There is no one now upon whom she can lean for a support except the municipality in which she lives or the Government which her late husband faithfully served for nearly three years. The above facts fully appear by the records of the Pension Office, and in view of all the circumstances the committee recommend that the bill do pass with an amendment striking out the word "thirty," in the last line of the bill, and inserting the word "seventeen," and also adding to end of bill "in lieu of pension she is now receiving."

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, in a service of six years on this floor I have never said a word about this pension business. I have felt that, having stood on the other side in the great civil contest, I ought not to say much about the pensioning of the soldiers who fought for the Union, and I have not spoken on the subject. I must say now, however, that you are carrying these pensions beyond the bounds of reason. No man in this House feels more kindly toward the soldiers who fought against him than I do. No man is more willing or more anxious to see just and reasonable pensions granted to the Federal soldiers who served honorably in the Union Army during the war.

But, I repeat, you are running this pension business to an extreme, so that before long no honorable soldier can feel respect for the pension roll. There are men on the floor of this House who fought on one side and on the other who are now warm friends, and no man appreciates more highly the friendship of gentlemen to whom I was opposed in that contest than I do; but I want to call attention to the fact that we are approaching a point where to have your name upon the pension roll will cease to be a matter of merit. I rejoice to see reasonable and just pensions granted to the men who faced me on the battlefield, but is it not time that pensions should be confined to those men? Is it not time for you to make a clear distinction in this pension legislation between the men who stood up and bared their breasts to the enemy's bullets and the army nurses, the teamsters, and the camp followers?

Mr. STEELE. Will the gentleman permit me to take the name of the soldier whose case he is discussing? [Laughter.]

Mr. COX. I am talking about them all. There are ten or fifteen members on this floor who were on opposite sides and tried their best to kill each other during the war, and I am sure I have no better friends than the gentlemen who fought against me, nor have they any warmer friends than men who were on my side in that struggle; so that what I say on this subject can not, I am sure, be misunderstood or attributed to any feeling of hostility to the Union soldiers. But I repeat again, gentlemen, you are losing sight of the valor and the honor of the real soldier in this indiscriminate pension legislation. What may be your motives I do not undertake to say, nor do I presume to criticise them. As I have already remarked, I have never said a word on this subject before, and I never will say a word about it again, and what I say now I say in the interest of the gallant soldiers of the Union who bore the brunt of the battle, and I warn you that you are not keeping sufficiently in mind the distinction between them and the teamsters, the army nurses, the camp followers—people who never heard the whistle of a bullet on the battlefield.

Now, I do not want to say a word about it, but do you not think, gentlemen, that it is time to stop? Do you not think we ought to call a halt? Do you not think there is some place where we had better put our mark down? If a teamster is permitted to receive a pension, when he had the option to resign his place and leave the Army whenever he chose to do so, if he is to be placed on the pension roll and on a footing with the gallant soldier who stood in the front line of battle, have you not somewhat lowered the character of the soldier? Where will you stop? Your army nurses, your teamsters, your surgeons, your camp followers, that never heard a bullet whistle—is it not time we should stop? I want to be understood frankly and candidly, for I was on the other side of the question, and I did my best to make pensioners of all of you. I see my friend across the way there, and I am sure he and I had many a good fight, but we are friends.

What I want to do is simply this, and I will, as far as my vote goes: With the gallant soldier that I met on the field of battle I will be liberal; I will be generous to him. I will go further than that—I will be exceedingly liberal to him. But I know where we ought to call a halt. Take your nurses, your physicians, your hospital stewards. I know more than that. I know there was a class in your Army, as there was in ours, that never smelt the scent of gunpowder. Give me the old, honest soldier that fought against me, and no man on that side of the House will go further than I in his behalf. But when you undertake to extend your bounty over to a class that used the Army for the purpose of making a profit, that is a class that I despise, that is a class that I would under no circumstances be willing to support and sustain by the bounty of the Government.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this is the first time, as you know, that I have ever spoken of this subject. I have sat here all these years and never uttered a word on this question. I wish to God the war was blotted from our memory forever; and I wish to conclude by saying that when you put these bills in here I understand very distinctly that personal obligations of members appeal to them to use their best endeavors to secure their passage. They feel that any man from their district is all right. But you are running up the pension roll at a rate that is absolutely astounding. Let us stop. Let us confine it to the straight old soldier, who offered his life. When he receives injuries, I will vote for him as cheerfully as you do; but I will not give to this man, who undertook to make a profit out of the misfortunes of the war, my support for anything. I will not do it.

Now, a single word in conclusion. I am glad to say one thing: I rejoice to see this spirit coming about here. I like it. There is no trouble with the old soldiers understanding each other. There is no trouble about the convictions we had, differing as we did. They were honest differences that ought to appeal to the appreciation and the conscience of everybody else. Now, my trouble lies in this: In my country our boys who went through the war are helpless, with their legs shot off, many others with their arms cut off; we have that population with us; we can not compensate them by appropriations here. But we must take care of them some way or other. When you vote these extraordinary pensions here, while we do not pay as much as you do, still we pay our proportion, and our part is as heavy on us as your larger part is on you. Why not, in the name of common sense, make the old soldiers' roll a roll of honor indeed on both sides? When you do that, I will vote for you and with you every time.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. Mr. Chairman, by way of suggestion to the gentleman from Tennessee and these other gentlemen who seem to consider that their chief mission in life, and who revel in the idea, is to oppose pension legislation when efforts are made here in behalf of worthy applicants, I wish to read an item in a correspondence here, which in itself tells the story of the result of the endeavors to "purge the pension roll," so called, or prevent pensioners going on the roll. The first is a personal letter to Mr. POOLE, requesting him to look after the case of Francis E. Demarest, United States Navy, which, coming from my district, I replied to, and received this answer on January 26:

Thanks for the interest taken in the case of Francis E. Demarest, No. 28874, Navy. I wrote to Major POOLE because he was an old comrade, a friend, and was upon the Committee on Pensions.

Over six years had passed since this applicant filed his application for a pension.

On the day following that letter, on January 27, this letter was received:

DEAR SIR: You need do nothing more in the case of Francis E. Demarest claim 28874, Navy, as he died last night.

Another instance of the generosity of the Hoke Smith & Co. administration.

This is all.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, in considering these pension questions, I think we ought to look at them from a business standpoint, and that we ought to lay sentiment and everything of that kind aside. When a bill is brought into this House, accompanied by the report of a committee, it is the duty of each and every one of us to examine the bill, to examine the report of the committee, and to vote upon it according to the merits that we find in the case, considering the matter as business men should consider a business proposition, as representatives of the business people of the country. I think that the time has come when we can put prejudice and feeling and partisanship behind us, when a proposition is made to this House to vote away the money of the people, and to consider it without so much of this hullabaloo about the soldier, and about what he has done, and all that sort of thing. That time has passed. The soldiers deserve all the credit that is given.

But now let us look at this bill a little while from a business standpoint. The committee come here and ask for a pension of $17 a month for this woman.

She is the widow of Dr. John R. Bigelow.

Now, the committee say that he—

Served as surgeon of the Ninth New York State Militia in the field, with the Army of the Shenandoah, from June 25, 1861, to October 10, 1861.

He served in the State militia for a term of almost two long months. Think of it! This man served as a surgeon for almost two long months. Nobody knows whether he was within reach of gunpowder during any portion of the time. The law says that unless a soldier served for a term of ninety days at least he shall not be entitled to a pension.

Mr. ALDRICH of Illinois. Have you read beyond the first paragraph of this report?

Mr. TALBERT. I will come to that, if the gentleman will possess himself in patience, and will discuss it as a business man from a business standpoint, and see if we, as business representatives of the people, should vote this pension. In the first place, he served not quite two months as a surgeon.

Mr. CROWTHER. Will my friend permit an interruption?

Mr. TALBERT. Certainly. I can not object to anything that my affable friend has to say.

Mr. CROWTHER. I am satisfied you do not desire to mislead the committee.

Mr. TALBERT. Not at all, sir.

Mr. CROWTHER. This widow is now receiving a pension of $8 a month under the law of 1890, and unless her husband had served ninety days or longer she could not receive anything under that law.

Mr. TALBERT. I will come to that in a little while. Here is what the committee say further:

This regiment was afterwards Eighty-third New York Volunteers. Dr. Bigelow seems to have been commissioned as surgeon of this regiment by the governor of New York—

Now, what sort of language is that? This committee, composed of intelligent gentlemen, come in here and say that this man "seems" to have been commissioned. That is very dubious and indefinite language for a committee to come in here and claim a pension upon for anybody—but for some unexplained reason he was not mustered, nor did he serve as such officer.

They even say in so many words that he did not serve as such officer. After all this seeming commission they say he did not serve. Well, where was he?

Mr. ALDRICH of Illinois. Read the latter part of the report, please.

Mr. TALBERT. What was he doing? Further, it says here:

From January 20, 1863, to December 9, 1865, he served as contract surgeon.

Well, now, what sort of a surgeon is that? What kind of a surgeon is a contract surgeon? Who made the contract with him? By what authority was he serving? Could he be called a soldier? Could it be stated that he was in the service of the Army of the United States or anything of that sort? The report says again:

His service and discharge appear to be alike honorable.

They do not state that his discharge was honorable, but they say it appears so. Now, it seems to me that the evidence they bring in here and the report that they make should not only "seem" and "appear" to be so and so, but should be backed up with sworn testimony, as the law requires. What do you think of such a report as that, in considering this case as business men, when they come in here and ask you to vote away the people's money upon such testimony? He seems to have been commissioned and his discharge appears to be honorable. That is very indefinite. I do not wish to do the applicant here any injustice, nor do I wish to do any injustice to anyone else, but it does seem to me that that is a very strange report for this committee to bring in and upon which to ask for a pension of $17 per month.

Then it says here:

The Pension Bureau does not accept the cause of death as a result of disease contracted in the service.

It is not proved by one scintilla of evidence, except the ipse dixit of some layman, that the disease can be traced to service origin. The report says:

Her application under general law has been rejected, and from the decision an appeal was taken to the Secretary of the Interior and the decision of the Pension Bureau affirmed.

It says further:

Three times the case has been reopened by the Secretary of the Interior, but the previous decision has been adhered to.

On three different occasions the Pension Bureau have refused to increase this pension.

Now, as the gentleman says, she had been receiving a pension of $8 a month, but it does not state what was the testimony and how the committee came to know she received it. It seems that her husband was pensioned at the rate of $17 per month, and she had the accrued pension paid her as widow and a pension of $8 a month from July 26, 1890, under the act of June 27, 1890.

Now, "Dr. Bigelow was 79½ years old at the time of his death." I have no doubt of that. [Laughter.] "His attending physician certified to the cause of his death as peritonitis, cause unknown;" but for some reason it appeared to him some time afterwards that he has made a mistake, and he goes back and says it seems to him that the disease could be traced to service origin. Somebody had been working on him, working upon his sympathies, and he goes back and says he was mistaken; he supposed it could be traced to service origin. He does not swear it. There is no testimony of that kind. This distinguished committee—

Are unable to say that the decision of the Pension Office is erroneous or unjust or that the claimant had not been considerately and fairly treated by the officers in charge of the Pension Office.

They admit, in conclusion, that the Pension Bureau have been just and dealt with her as they ought to have dealt with her, and yet they recommend granting her $17 per month. There are some things that I can understand and some things that I can not. As the traveler said, after traveling all over the world, he understood many things—why rivers flow downhill, why the moon shines by night and the sun by day—but on passing by a tanyard and seeing as the sign of the tanyard a cow's tail in an auger hole, he said he could not see how that cow could jump through that hole and leave her tail. I can not see how this committee, who have signed this report, can ask this House to give a pension of $17 to this lady. She is poor and needy. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"] Be quiet, please, and hear me. I am only making a business argument and stating a business proposition. Now, I submit, is it just, is it common sense, upon the report of a committee here who themselves acknowledge she ought not to have it—are you going to give her $17 a month?

Now, Mr. Chairman, if nobody else wishes to be heard—I do not want to cut off anyone; I think the case ought to be discussed—I will move that the committee report the bill to the House with the recommendation that it lie on the table.

Mr. WOOD. I suggest that the gentleman withdraw that motion until the gentleman who introduced the bill has an opportunity to be heard.

Mr. ALDRICH of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I do not know that I have any remarks to make. I believed when the gentleman commenced his speech he was going to make an argument against the bill, but I am told by some of my associates that it is the same old speech that he has made every night since this session began. I did not hear it all.

Mr. TALBERT. The gentleman is mistaken. This is the first time I have made a speech of any length this session, and the reason of it is because this is such an unjust, inexcusable, and improper measure. I will speak against all such measures, whether it be Monday night, or Friday night, or any other night, the gentleman from Illinois notwithstanding.

Mr. ALDRICH of Illinois. Precisely. I have no doubt these speeches will read very well down in the gentleman's district. The whole purpose of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COX] and the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TALBERT] who have spoken, has been to consume abundance of time in order that worthy bills that have been offered here may be crowded out of consideration. I have no disposition, therefore, to take time to reply to the charges made. The report that has been made by the committee is a very fair and candid one, and I must say has been to some extent misrepresented by the gentleman who has just spoken. I will leave it to the candid judgment of gentlemen on the floor of the House to determine the merits of this bill. The original bill provided for granting a pension of $30. That has been cut down to $17, the old pension allowed to this soldier under the law. This lady has but few more months to live. I do not know that she is living to-night, and I hope that she will be allowed this pension.

Mr. GROW. She is a war widow.

Mr. ALDRICH of Illinois. And she is a war widow, as suggested by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I trust that the committee will dispose of it without any delay.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. COX. Before that motion is put, I want the gentleman to understand me. This is a matter that I want him to understand clearly. On any vote to pension an old soldier you will never find my voice raised against it. I raise no captious opposition to any kind of bill that you present; but what I want to do, if I can do it by my vote, is that the old-soldier roll shall be a roll of honor on either side of the question.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment recommended by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TALBERT. Now I renew my motion that the bill be reported back with the recommendation that it lie on the table.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. TALBERT. Division, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from South Carolina will withdraw the motion, I would like to move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. TALBERT. All right.

Mr. THOMAS. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. PAYNE having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. LACEY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, reported that that committee had had under consideration sundry bills on the Private Calendar, and had directed him to report with amendments the bills H. R. 3402, H. R. 7422, H. R. 649, H. R. 2974, and S. 321; without amendment, the bill S. 2832; with the recommendation that it be recommitted to the Committee on Pensions, the bill H. R. 7489; with the recommendation that it do lie on the table, the bill H. R. 7501; and with no resolution thereon, the bill H. R. 7548.

REBECCA A. KIRKPATRICK.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the desk.

The bill (H. R. 9785) granting a pension to Rebecca A. Kirkpatrick was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the limitations and provisions of the pension laws, the name of Rebecca A. Kirkpatrick, widow of William A. Kirkpatrick, late a sergeant and second lieutenant in Company F, Sixty-third Regiment of Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $17 per month.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Speaker, I would like to hear the report in this case.

The report (by Mr. KIRKPATRICK) was read in part, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9785) granting a pension to Rebecca A. Kirkpatrick, having had the same under consideration, submit the following report:

The beneficiary in this bill, Rebecca A. Kirkpatrick, is the widow of William A. Kirkpatrick, who enlisted as a private in Company F, Sixty-third Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, on the 5th day of February, 1862, and was honorably discharged at Goldsboro, N. C., on the 9th day of April, 1865. When the company was organized, William A. Kirkpatrick was selected as second sergeant, and was soon thereafter promoted to the position of orderly sergeant, and served in that capacity until the 30th day of July, 1863, when he was commissioned second lieutenant of said company for gallant and meritorious services at the battle of Vicksburg. His commission was received on the field after the surrender and at a time when the regiment was under marching orders, and consequently he was not actually mustered as a commissioned officer. He continued in the service, and through oversight or inadvertence was never actually mustered as lieutenant, although the company possessed the requisite number of men to authorize his muster until a very few weeks before he was finally discharged.

From the time of receiving his commission Mr. Kirkpatrick acted in the capacity of a lieutenant, was recognized as such, and, in fact, commanded the company much of the time from the time of receiving his commission until he was finally discharged. The Sixty-third Regiment went with Sherman from Atlanta to the sea, and after the surrender of Columbia, S. C., the regiment was detailed to destroy a large quantity of powder found in a magazine near that place, and in doing so an explosion occurred, resulting in a loss of more than 25 members of Mr. Kirkpatrick's company, he himself receiving serious injuries from the explosion. He was placed in an ambulance and was carried with the moving army to Goldsboro, N. C., where the regiment was discharged, its term of enlistment having expired some months previous. While Mr. Kirkpatrick was stationed at Memphis, Tenn., he contracted measles, which settled upon his lungs, and being an intimate friend of General Logan, he was furloughed and sent home instead of to the hospital. After an absence of four months he returned to the regiment and remained with it until discharged.

Mr. Kirkpatrick never fully recovered from the results of the measles, which was followed by a distressing cough that continued to harass him until death occurred March 14, 1895. Death resulted from what is known as Hodgen's disease of the blood, the result, as his physicians declare, of a diseased condition of the lungs. Mr. Kirkpatrick, having no hospital record and not being treated for lung trouble in the service, nor for many years after returning therefrom, although afflicted with a severe cough all the while, leaves his widow wholly unable to make the proof required by the rules and regulations of the Pension Office, although his death was undoubtedly the result of the disabilities incurred while in the service of the United States.

The beneficiary in the bill is 56 years of age, in feeble health, and unable to perform manual labor with which to support herself. She possesses no home, with one daughter depending upon her for support. Mr. Kirkpatrick never applied for or received a pension from the Government, although justly entitled thereto during the past thirty years. Neither did he apply to have his muster corrected, as he might have done, declaring that he was able to make his own living, and that he would not burden the Government so long as he was able to take care of himself and family.

In view of all the circumstances of this case, your committee is clearly of the opinion that the widow of this soldier is as much entitled to a lieutenant's pension as though her husband was actually mustered. It therefore recommends that the bill be amended by striking out the word "seventeen" and inserting the word "fifteen;" so as to make it read "and pay her a pension at the rate of $15 per month," and that as amended the bill do pass.

The amendment recommended in the last paragraph of the report was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

MAJ. JOHN H. GEORKEE.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of a bill which will take but a few minutes, House bill No. 6845, granting an increase of pension to Maj. John H. Georkee, Iowa City, Iowa.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Maj. John H. Georkee, late of the Twenty-second Regiment of Iowa Volunteer Infantry, at the rate of $50 per month, said pension to be in lieu of the one he now receives.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. ERDMAN. I think the hour is too late, Mr. Speaker, and I must object.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. I am sure the gentleman will not object if I am permitted to make a brief explanation. I ask the gentleman to withhold his objection for a moment.

Mr. ERDMAN. I will do so.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. This bill has been read by several gentlemen on the other side. It has been unanimously reported from the Committee on Pensions. I have had the honor to introduce several pension bills in the present Congress, and I have attended every Friday night session except one; but, by reason of this bill being so low on the Calendar, I fear that it can not pass except by unanimous consent. This soldier has a splendid record. He is very thoroughly disabled and requires constant attendance. He was one of the most gallant soldiers from the State of Iowa. I sincerely trust that the House will pass the bill. The Grand Army men of that locality support it unanimously and the citizens as well, and I trust that no gentleman present will object to the bill under the circumstances. I would not ask to have it considered in this way if it were not for the urgent necessity for its passage and the hopelessness of reaching it in the regular way.

Mr. ERDMAN. Well, Mr. Speaker, let the report be printed in the RECORD, so that we may see what the bill is about after it is passed. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill and to the printing of the report in the RECORD?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The amendment recommended in the report was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CURTIS of Iowa, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan moves that the House do now adjourn, and the hour of 11 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m. having arrived, the House stands adjourned until to-morrow, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of State, transmitting information as to the cost of embassies owned by various nations at national capitals—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination and survey at Palm Beach, Florida—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Mr. BURROWS. I am in receipt of resolutions wired me last evening adopted by the house of representatives of the legislature of Michigan, remonstrating against the passage of House bill No. 10090, for the purpose of abolishing ticket brokerage. I ask that the resolutions be read.

The resolutions were read, and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, as follows:

STATE HOUSE, Lansing, Mich., February 15, 1897.

Hon. J. C. BURROWS, Washington, D. C.:

Resolutions offered by Representative Gillam, February 2:

Whereas a bill has been introduced into the National House of Representatives, known as H. R. 10690, for the purpose of abolishing ticket brokers, and entitled "A bill to amend the act entitled 'An act to regulate commerce;'" and

Whereas the provisions of this proposed act, if carried into effect, would not only wipe out ticket brokerage but deny to every citizen the right to dispose of his own property in the open market respecting railroad transportation, and in case of such disposal would be branded a felon punishable by fine and imprisonment; and

Whereas the passage of such a bill or act would in effect be a violation of the recognized rights of the people and is in effect a grab at the public purse for the benefit of railroad corporations and to the injury of the traveling public: Therefore

Be it resolved by the house of representatives of the State of Michigan, That we denounce the measure as unjust and one that tends rather to protect corporate interests than to benefit or in any manner favor the rights and privileges of the mass of American citizens; and

Be it further resolved, That we recommend to our representatives in Congress that they use all honorable means in their power to defeat the passage of any such measure; and

Be it further resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to our representatives in Washington, to the Speaker of the House, President of the Senate, to the President of the United States, and to the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Which was adopted.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6757) granting a pension to Andrew J. Molder, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7055) increasing the pension of Anna G. Valk, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4903) for the relief of Hattie A. Beach, child of Erastus D. Beach, late a private in Company H, One hundred and forty-third New York Volunteers, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PEFFER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2450) granting a pension to John C. Fitnam, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. VEST, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3680) to provide for the removal of the Interstate National Bank of Kansas City, Kans., to Kansas City, Mo., reported it with an amendment.

He also, from the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 200) for the prevention of the introduction and spread of contagious and infectious diseases into the United States, reported it with amendments.

Mr. CULLOM, from the Committee on Interstate Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3545) amendatory to an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, and the several acts amendatory thereof, reported it with amendments.

Mr. PLATT, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2164) for the relief of Ellen A. Dunn, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. PALMER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 583) to grant a pension to Eli D. Walker, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PRITCHARD, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5128) to increase the pension of Jere Smith, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. CHANDLER on the 14th ultimo, intended to be proposed to the general deficiency appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am directed by the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10108) regulating fraternal beneficiary societies, orders, and associations in the District of Columbia, to report it with amendments. I ask that the bill take the place on the Calendar of the bill (S. 3589) regulating fraternal beneficiary societies, orders, and associations in the District of Columbia, and that the Senate bill be postponed indefinitely.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PERKINS in the chair). In the absence of objection, it will be so ordered.

Mr. SHOUP, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9709) to better define and regulate the rights of aliens to hold and own real estate in the Territories, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. HANSBROUGH, from the Committee on the Library, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2571) to purchase the portraits of Chief Justices Marshall, Taney, Chase, and Waite, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

REPORT ON PRICES OF ARMOR.

Mr. HANSBROUGH, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by Mr. CHANDLER on the 13th instant, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the Committee on Naval Affairs 1,000 additional copies of the report on the prices of armor without the testimony, and 300 copies with the testimony.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. BLACKBURN introduced a bill (S. 3699) to pension the widow of Gen. William J. Landram; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PLATT introduced a bill (S. 3700) to provide for aids to navigation; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CAFFERY introduced a bill (S. 3701) providing for a survey and examination of the Passes at the mouth of the Mississippi River, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. LINDSAY introduced a bill (S. 3702) granting an increase of pension to Anna E. Pennebaker; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. WILSON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GALLINGER. I desire to offer a proposed amendment to the sundry civil appropriation bill. It relates to the officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service. I am undecided as to what committee it ought to be referred. I notice that in the other House they refer bills relating to the Revenue-Cutter Service to the Interstate Commerce Committee.

Mr. CULLOM. It ought to go to the Committee on Commerce, I think.

Mr. GALLINGER. I therefore submit the proposed amendment, and move that it be referred to the Committee on Commerce, and printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FRYE submitted three amendments intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the District of Columbia appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BAKER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. LODGE submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GEAR submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Pacific Railroads, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. QUAY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HILL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Printing, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. TILLMAN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. STEWART submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to the fortifications appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HAWLEY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. ELKINS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. VILAS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. TURPIE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. PRITCHARD submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PERKINS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the District of Columbia appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

THE REVENUE-CUTTER SERVICE.

Mr. FRYE submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to the Senate the following information:

First. All provisions of law touching the Revenue Cutter Service, including acts relating to the Revenue Marine.

Second. Copies of all recommendations made by the several Secretaries of the Treasury in their annual or special reports made to Congress from December 6, 1869, the commencement of the second session of the Forty-first Congress, down to the present time, relating to the Revenue Marine and Cutter Service.

Third. A statement showing the present condition of the Revenue Cutter Service, including vessels under construction and repair, and the force, including commissioned officers and enlisted men.

Resolved further, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, requested to make such further recommendation as he may deem proper in respect to the necessity of immediate legislation to promote the efficiency of the Revenue-Cutter Service.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER IMPROVEMENT.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3614) to aid in the improvement of the navigable channel of the South Pass by closing the existing crevasse in Pass a Loutre in the Mississippi River.

Mr. FRYE. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendment, and request a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. CAFFERY, Mr. NELSON, and Mr. VEST were appointed.

COURTS IN ARKANSAS.

Mr. BERRY. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate House bill 10278, just received from the House of Representatives.

The bill (H. R. 10278) to reorganize the judicial districts of Arkansas, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title.

Mr. BERRY. I wish to state that it is important that the bill should pass at once. I have seen all the members of the Judiciary Committee except, I think, the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. THURSTON]. It is a bill that is unanimously agreed to by the entire delegation. It was reported unanimously by the Judiciary Committee of the House, and under a suspension of the rules it passed the House yesterday. It is a measure of absolute necessity in regard to arranging our courts in Arkansas.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arkansas asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which will be read for information.

The Secretary read the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BLACKBURN in the chair). Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CHANDLER. It is so unusual to pass bills of such length upon coming from the House, without reference to a committee, that unless some member of the Judiciary Committee of this body will vouch for the bill, I shall be compelled to object to it.

Mr. HILL. In the absence of the chairman of the committee, I will state that the bill has been presented to various members of the Judiciary Committee and examined by them, and that there is no possible objection to it.

Mr. PLATT. The Senator from Massachusetts, the chairman of the committee, asked me yesterday, in conjunction with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS], to examine this bill and see if there was any reason why it should not pass, or if there were reasons why it should pass. Of course, in a matter of the revision geographically of the jurisdiction of the courts, where there are two districts, we have to depend quite a good deal upon the Senators from the State. Both the Senators from Arkansas assured us that the bill is right, and for the convenience of the people of the State of Arkansas, and the bill appears to be right in form.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 9494) concerning certain homestead lands in Florida was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The bill (H. R. 9703) to provide for light-houses and other aids to navigation was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The bill (H. R. 10292) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 239) admitting free of duty needlework and similar articles imported by the New York Association of Sewing Schools for exhibition purposes was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

PACIFIC RAILROADS.

Mr. THURSTON. Certain resolutions presented by my colleague, the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN], are pending, upon which I had nearly completed my remarks. I ask that the resolutions lie over informally until to-morrow morning. I desire to conclude my remarks at the first available opportunity.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope that no arrangement will be made that will prevent the consideration of the treaty to-morrow. I trust that we may then reach final action upon it.

Mr. THURSTON. I will not stand in the way of the treaty.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Chair understand that the Senator from Ohio objects to the request of the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not object, the Senator from Nebraska stating to me that he will not stand in the way of the treaty.

Mr. PLATT. I desire to state that notice was given yesterday by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] that he would ask to have the immigration conference report considered immediately after the routine business to-morrow.

Mr. THURSTON. I shall not insist to-morrow morning or any other morning on getting in the way of anything that is more important. I only desire that the resolutions may not lose their place, and that upon the first available opportunity I shall have the right of way to conclude my remarks.

Mr. ALLEN. The resolution to which my colleague refers was introduced by me something like two weeks or more ago. It was discussed during the morning hour on three different days, I think, by my colleague; and while I do not intend to press it with undue haste, it occurs to me that the resolution ought to be disposed of before a great while. I will ask my colleague to fix a time when he can conclude his remarks and when the resolution may be submitted to a vote.

Mr. THURSTON. I should be glad to conclude my remarks the first morning when there is an opportunity. I shall not desire to occupy more than an hour of additional time under any circumstances.

Mr. ALLEN. I do not desire to press the matter at this time more than to say that I want to have the resolutions disposed of before Congress expires. I will be amply satisfied with any hour.

LOAN OF TENTS.

Mr. HAWLEY. There is on the table a joint resolution from the House concerning tents. It is the usual measure which has been passed for fifteen years, loaning tents to annual encampments of the Grand Army. I ask unanimous consent that it be taken up and put on its passage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate a joint resolution passed by the House of Representatives, and the Senator from Connecticut asks for the present consideration of the House joint resolution. It will be read for information.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 252) authorizing the Secretary of War to deliver to the mayor of Buffalo tents, in loan, for the convenience of the Grand Army of the Republic at its annual encampment, to be held this year at that city was read the first time by its title and the second time at length.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TIMBER CULTURE.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I move that the Committee on the Judiciary be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 3328) to amend an act entitled "An act to repeal the timber-culture laws, and for other purposes," and that the same be immediately considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from South Dakota furnish to the desk a copy of the bill indicated?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I have it here, but I suppose the clerks have it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed at the desk that the bill is not to be had at this time.

Mr. PETTIGREW. It is the bill that was recalled from the President.

Mr. PLATT. I think the bill is in the hands of the Judiciary Committee. Is it not?

Mr. PETTIGREW. It is in the hands of the Judicary Committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that the bill is in the hands of the Judiciary Committee, and it is not at the desk of the clerks.

Mr. PLATT. I suppose a copy of the bill could be substituted for it.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I have a copy of the bill.

Mr. BATE. Let us hear the copy read, so as to know what it is.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I move that the Committee on the Judiciary be discharged from the further consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota moves that the Committee on the Judiciary be discharged from the further consideration of the bill that he has indicated, and he asks for the immediate consideration of the bill. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the bill will be read.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. PETTIGREW. This bill was recalled from the President by a concurrent resolution of the House and Senate. I move to reconsider the vote by which the House amendments were agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would say to the Senator from South Dakota that the bill itself is not before the Senate.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I will ask, then, to have the copy which is before the Senate substituted for the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would further state to the Senator from South Dakota that the bill has been sent for. It is in the possession of the Committee on the Judiciary. As the Senator moves to reconsider the vote had upon House amendments, which have not been printed, the Chair thinks that the bill itself should be before the Senate, so that the amendments may be read.

Mr. PETTIGREW. The amendments are printed in the bill which the clerks have.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that the amendments are printed in the copy of the bill. The Senator from South Dakota moves to reconsider the vote by which the House amendments were agreed to.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suppose the first thing in order would be to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed to a third reading.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I simply wish to disagree to the House amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would state that the original bill is now before the Senate. The Senator from South Dakota moves to reconsider the vote by which the Senate agreed to the House amendments to the bill indicated, which amendments the Secretary will now read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Page 2, line 19, after the word "apply" insert the word "only."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota moves to reconsider the vote by which the Senate agreed to the amendments of the House.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I now move that the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House and ask for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Presiding Officer was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. PETTIGREW, Mr. BERRY, and Mr. CARTER were appointed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 719) to restore the pension of Harriet M. Knowlton.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the concurrent resolution of the Senate to print 2,000 additional copies of an extract from the Seventeenth Annual Report of the United States Geological Survey, entitled "Preliminary report on artesian waters of a portion of the Dakotas."

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the following bills:

A bill (H. R. 1104) granting a pension to Isaac N. Williams;

A bill (H. R. 1311) granting an increase of pension to Charles W. Sentman;

A bill (H. R. 5764) granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth D. Marthon;

A bill (H. R. 5981) granting a pension to Elihu Jones;

A bill (H. R. 6789) granting a pension and for the relief of Dr. Harrison Wagoner;

A bill (H. R. 5880) granting an increase of pension to Greenville Puckett;

A bill (H. R. 8388) for the relief of William G. Buck; and

A bill (H. R. 8898) to increase the pension of Elizabeth Wellons.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (S. 1862) to amend the act creating the circuit court of appeals in regard to fees and costs, and for other purposes;

A bill (S. 3666) to remove doubts as to the power of the supreme court of the District of Columbia to provide for a vacancy in the office of attorney of the United States for the District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. 9123) to prevent forest fires on the public domain; and

A bill (H. R. 10134) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878.

SYSTEM OF BIMETALLISM.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the resolution submitted by me on the 2d instant, which is now on the table, and I ask that it may be read.

Mr. ALLEN. I hope the Senator from New Hampshire will yield to the regular order for a few moments at least.

Mr. CHANDLER. I have been yielding now for half an hour. If the Senator will state what he desires to do and that it will take no time to do it, I will yield again.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I am in order and the Senator from New Hampshire is out of order. There is unfinished morning business on the Secretary's desk which ought to be laid before the Senate.

Mr. CHANDLER. I understood the Chair had announced that morning business had closed. If so, I am strictly in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BLACKBURN in the chair). The Chair has not announced the close of morning business. The Senator from New Hampshire asks to have read for information, subject to objection, the resolution which he has indicated.

Mr. ALLEN. However, Mr. President, if not inconvenient——

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator from New Hampshire has given notice two or three times that he desired to submit some remarks this morning.

Mr. ALLEN. I had anticipated the Senator from Illinois. I was simply going to suggest that if it was inconvenient to the Senator from New Hampshire to have the resolution submitted by me considered now, I would gladly consent to have it go over without prejudice until to-morrow morning.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from Nebraska called the subject to my attention before asking that the resolution be taken up, and I was prepared to go on, if he had no objection.

Mr. ALLEN. Very well; let the resolution submitted by me go over without prejudice.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That order will be made, in the absence of objection.

The resolution indicated by the Senator from New Hampshire will be read for information, subject to objection.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. CHANDLER on the 2d instant, as follows:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that the United States should not permanently acquiesce in the single gold standard, and that the efforts of the Government in all its branches should be steadily directed to secure and maintain the use of silver as well as gold as standard money, with the free coinage of both, under a system of bimetallism to be established through international agreement or with such safeguards of legislation as will ensure the parity in value of the two metals at a fixed ratio, furnish a sufficient volume of metallic money, and give immunity to the world of trade from violent fluctuations in exchange.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? The Chair hears none, and the resolution is before the Senate.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, this resolution I earnestly favor because I am an advocate of bimetallism and an opponent of monometallism, either a single standard of silver or a single standard of gold. It is the common habit of gold monometallists to say that there is no such thing as bimetallism, that it is impossible to conceive of two money measures of value, any more than of two yardsticks of different lengths.

Honest doubters of this kind should realize that few important subjects in this world are absolutely simple and comprehensible without inquiry and study. The most valuable things of life are complex and to be understood only through careful research and persistent reflection. Persons unwilling thus to labor and to think are unfit to deal usefully or satisfactorily with the complicated subject of monetary science, which is of the highest possible importance to the material welfare of the human race. Prof. Francis Bowen says:

As a measure of value, then, money is an indispensable agent of commerce, and without it civilization itself would be impossible. (Am. Pol. Econ., 239.)

Chief Justice Chase says in the Legal-Tender Cases (12 Wallace, 583) that the necessity of a standard of value established by government "is indeed universally acknowledged. Without it the transactions of society would become impossible."

WHAT IS BIMETALLISM?

To avoid confusing tender minds, however, bimetallism should not be called the use of the double standard, but should be designated as the system of the bimetallic standard, the use as money of all the gold and silver which may be presented at the mints, to be coined at a fixed ratio and made a legal tender, with the privilege to every debtor to pay his debt in coin of either metal.

It is claimed by the bimetallists that under this system, if adopted by the principal commercial nations of the world, there will be few fluctuations in the value of money, and therefore that neither the prices of property nor the burden of debts will be materially affected by such fluctuations, while it is also asserted by the bimetallists that the contrary system—that of gold monometallism—will, if finally adhered to, furnish an insufficient supply of money, always liable to many and sudden fluctuations, injuriously affecting prices and debts, and will, during the process of its adoption, so lower prices and increase the burden of debts as to paralyze trade and unjustly ruin innumerable debtors. The progress and the final result will be alike harmful and oppressive to mankind.

That gold monometallism is subject to this condemnation seems reasonably clear. Both gold and silver from the beginning of commerce among men have been used as the means of making all exchanges of commodities where trade has advanced beyond the mere barter practiced by savages; and their use as money has given to them their principal value, not their use in the arts or in any other way; and the peculiar and indispensable quality which makes them available as money is their scarcity, the continuing certainty that they will only be found in limited quantities. Professor Bowen says (page 248):

Money is a mere convenience, and in performing its function as a medium of exchange need not, and generally does not, possess any intrinsic value whatever.

THE QUANTITY OF MONEY DETERMINES VALUES.

Upon the quantity of money existing in the world depend the prices of the world's property, real and personal. There are other forms of money besides gold and silver, namely, paper currency, including checks and bills of exchange; but all money not metallic must at all times be redeemable on demand in the metal money, or it is admitted to be unsound money. If the relation between money and property remains unchanged, that is to say, if the total quantity of money in the world increases only slowly and in exact proportion to the growth of business and population, the prices of the world's property will remain unchanged except by natural causes—changes in the quantities demanded or changes in the supplies which can be provided. But if the quantity of money be largely diminished, all prices will go down; if it be largely increased, they will go up.

These propositions are almost axioms in monetary science.

That an increase of the quantity of money raises prices and a diminution lowers them is the most elementary proposition in the theory of currency, and without it we should have no key to any of the others. (2 Mill's Pol. Econ., chapter 8, section 4.)

Other things being the same, an increase of the money in circulation raises prices and diminution lowers them. (2 Mill's Pol. Econ., chapter 12, paragraph 1; Ibid, chapter 8, section 2.)

If the whole money in circulation was doubled, prices would be doubled. If it was only increased one-fourth, prices would rise one-fourth.

I apprehend that bank notes, bills, or checks as such do not act on prices at all. What does act on prices is credit in whatever shape given, and whether it gives rise to any transferable instruments capable of passing into circulation or not. (2 Mill's Pol. Econ., chapter 12, paragraph 1.)

But as all credit is based upon obligations to pay money, the quantity of money in existence with which to make final payments still has the controlling influence upon the general range of prices.

The quantitative theory of the relation of money to prices is admitted by all writers and students whose opinions are worthy of respect. In the late political canvass even those editors and orators who vehemently denied that the general fall in prices throughout the world during the last twenty years was owing to the appreciation of gold, caused by the demonetization of silver, one and all stoutly asserted that an unnatural and injurious rise in all prices would follow from the remonetization of silver; from an influx into circulation of cheap or debased money, as they termed it. But if an increase in the quantity of money by opening the mints to the silver bullion of the world would raise the prices of property, necessarily the diminution of the quantity of available money by excluding all the silver bullion of the world would reduce the prices of property.

This argument is confirmed by historical facts. For seventy, even for two hundred and twenty, years before 1873 there had been such a conjoined use of both gold and silver as money by the nations as to amount to practical bimetallism. Estimates differ as to the amount of coined gold and silver in existence in 1873, and doubtless no estimates are wholly reliable, but approximate merely. United States Treasury Circular 123, July 1, 1896:

Silver	4,070,500,000

Let it be assumed that there was four thousand millions of dollars' worth of coined gold and four thousand millions of dollars' worth of coined silver. All sound paper money was redeemable in gold or silver coins, and gold and silver were the real money which finally paid debts and which there was no obligation to redeem in any other money. These amounts were subject to be increased by presentation at the mints of any gold and silver bullion in existence, whether from old stocks or newly mined from year to year.

HISTORY OF SILVER'S DEMONETIZATION.

In 1873 the demonetization of silver, which had been started by England in 1816, but with no perceptible effect upon the relative value of the two metals, was continued by Germany, enriched by the French war indemnity of one thousand millions of dollars; and in February of that year the United States omitted the silver dollars from coinage. France, in her enfeebled condition, and the Latin Union gradually gave way to the movement for demonetization. After its injurious effects had begun to be apparent, the United States endeavored to check it, and by our purchases and coinage of silver the movement was hindered; but at last, in 1893, our purchases were stopped, and, most fatal blow of all, England closed the India mints which had all this time remained open for silver coinage.

The effect of this progressive demonetization of silver, sometimes halted, sometimes accelerated, was soon seen in the downward tendency of the prices of property. But the effects were slow in developing themselves. It is the custom to say that we have virtually had gold monometallism since 1873, and therefore by this time have experienced all the evil effects thereof, if there have been any. There can be no greater mistake than to say this. Great economic changes are a long time in taking effect. Economic shocks distribute themselves slowly, and so has the shock of demonetization, especially by reason of the resistance made through the relief measures of the United States. Even when the worst seemed to be at hand, owing to the closing of the India mints, there was yet another blow to be struck. Although the mints of the world were closed to new silver bullion, the four thousand millions of the world's coined silver still remained money as surely as gold was money. It was reserved for Secretary Carlisle, on the 12th of September, 1896, to announce that our silver dollars were no longer real money, like gold money, but that they, like the paper dollars of the country, must be redeemed in gold money. By that act, so far as he could do so, Secretary Carlisle struck out of existence as real money not only our six hundred but also the world's four thousand millions of coined silver, transferred the whole burden of sustaining all the paper money of the world to the world's stock of coined gold, increased the appreciation of that gold, and gave his final blow at silver as a money metal, the effects of which are now making themselves felt throughout the business universe. From this low depth into which it has been thrown bimetallism will soon, at the demand of the grievously burdened masses of mankind, begin its toilsome movement to restoration.

THE FALL OF PRICES SINCE 1873.

The regularity and extent of the fall in the prices of property since 1873 have been demonstrated with reasonable certainty by those results of inquiries and painstaking research known as index numbers. The prices during the successive years have been ascertained of certain necessaries of life in appropriate quantities as they enter into ordinary consumption, and the aggregate prices for each year compared with the aggregate prices for each of the other years.

There have been constructed many tables of index numbers made by acute, careful, and painstaking students and writers on the subject of the changes in the prices of commodities whose calculations have varied in details, but have singularly corresponded in the general result.

The principal European series have been those of the London Economist, Dr. Soetbeer's, the Hamburg tables, and Mr. Sauerbeck's, prepared for the Royal Statistical Society. For the purposes of these remarks these last tables will be adopted.

The result of the Royal Statistical Society's numbers, prepared by Mr. Sauerbeck, is as follows:

Year.	Index number.	Year.	Index number.
1875	96	1886	69
1876	95	1887	68
1877	94	1888	70
1878	87	1889	72
1879	83	1890	72
1880	88	1891	72
1881	85	1892	68
1882	84	1893	68
1883	82	1894	63
1884	76	1895	62

If these figures are correct and prove a general fall in prices equal to that shown as to the special commodities included in the calculations, then the property of the world has diminished in money value one-third in the last twenty years, since demonetization began.

I have in my hand, taken from Mr. Wharton Barker's American, of Philadelphia, issued Saturday, January 23, 1897, a table of index numbers, which has been carefully prepared by Mr. Barker, and which I shall insert in my remarks. The tables include prices from January 1, 1891, to January 1, 1897. There are 100 articles—6 articles of breadstuffs, 4 of live stock, 24 of provisions, 4 of hides and leather, etc., and 7 miscellaneous articles. The summary is given of the whole 100 articles for the six years. The index number, which is an average, Senators will understand, of the whole 100 articles beginning with 100 on January 1, 1891, proceeds quarterly during the six years, sometimes rising and sometimes falling, until on January 1, 1897, it was 79.95; and therefore, according to these tables, as Mr. Barker states, within six years prices have in general fallen over 20 per cent.

The table referred to is as follows:

Summary of index numbers.

	Silver.	Breadstuffs, 6 articles.	Live stock, 4.	Provisions, 24 articles.	Hides and leather, 4 articles.	Raw and manufactured textiles, 11 articles.	Metals, 12 articles.	Coal and coke, 4 articles.	Mineral and vegetable oils, 7 articles.	Naval stores, 3 articles.	Building materials, 7 articles.	Chemicals, 11 articles.	Miscellaneous, 7 articles.	General index number, 100 articles.

*Six articles. †Ninety-nine articles.

It is to be borne in mind that the final estimate made January 1, 1897, includes a rise in three kinds of articles. There is a rise in breadstuffs owing to the rise in wheat; there is a rise in live stock over October 1, 1896, and there is a very heavy rise in the four articles included under the head of hides and leather, that rise having a special cause. There is a rise in building material and a rise also in chemicals, notwithstanding which these carefully prepared tables of Mr. Barker show, as he states, that prices in general have fallen off over 20 per cent during the last six years.

A still more striking table is that to be found in the circular of the Department of Agriculture issued December 4, 1896, which seems to have been issued by Secretary Morton, although his chief of the Division of Statistics, Mr. Henry A. Robinson, had not given him facts which complied with the last request of the Secretary contained in his letter of instructions of November 23, 1896.

And the reply—

The Secretary says to his subordinate—taken as a whole, ought to show whether the mint value of a money metal can be made by statute greater than the bullion value thereof.

The Statistician fails to show that, but he does show the great fall in farm products since 1866. He has taken, as found in the table on page 10, six articles—corn, hay, wheat, cotton, oats, and potatoes—and I insert that table in my remarks.

The total product and total value of the country's six leading staples for the average of eight years ending with 1895 are approximately as follows:

Article.	Product.	Value.
Corn.....bushels..	1,783,000,000	$650,000,000
Hay.....tons..	51,200,000	451,000,000
Wheat.....bushels..	470,000,000	322,000,000
Cotton.....pounds..	3,750,000,000	276,000,000
Oats.....bushels..	688,000,000	200,000,000
Potatoes.....do....	197,000,000	99,000,000

He thereupon ascertains the average proportionate production of these other articles for every 100 bushels of corn raised, and reaches the conclusion that the average is 3 tons of hay and 27 bushels of wheat, and then makes a table showing the gold value of farm products and silver, of 100 bushels of corn, 3 tons of hay, and 27 bushels of wheat, and the sum of the three and 37.125 grains of silver and 100 bushels of wheat. This is the result: The 100 bushels of corn, which in 1866 would have produced $49, produced in 1896 $21; the 3 tons of hay, which in 1866 produced $31, produced in 1896 $20; and the 27 bushels of wheat, which in 1866 realized $42, in 1896 realized $20; and the sum of the three, which produced in 1866 $122, in 1896 realized only $61. The quantity of silver which in 1866 was worth $104, in 1896 was worth $52; the price of the 100 bushels of wheat, which in 1866 was $156, in 1896 was $73; and it is to be noted that this last figure takes account of the rise of wheat in 1896, because the figures given for 1895 show that 100 bushels of wheat could then be bought for $51, and in 1896 it was worth $73.

Mr. President, this is a most valuable and important table, and it is of greater value because it comes from the enemy; it comes from the other side. It is a table prepared for a Secretary of Agriculture, all of whose desires and all of whose interests tended to make him wish for a different result, and yet here is the unmistakable evidence of the tremendous fall in farm products since 1866 and since 1873.

There is an equally striking table of the fall of American cereal crops to be found in Mr. Wharton Barker's American of February 6, 1897, to which I shall allude later; but the whole result of the European index numbers and of the American index numbers, made with fidelity and with care, is to show, what is now undisputed throughout the civilized world, that within the last twenty years there has been a steadily progressing fall in the prices of all kinds of property.

Mr. President, it is true that about no point in dispute connected with the complex subject of money has controversy raged more fiercely than about this question whether the admitted depreciation of prices since 1873 has been caused by the demonetization of silver. I accept the conclusion of Prof. L. L. Price, of Oriel College, Oxford, contained in his book on Money and Its Relation to Prices, published in 1896, as follows:

> The fall in prices during that period is attested by various index numbers. The general agreement of the results, in spite of differences of detail in the construction of the numbers and of the precise degree of fall, is remarkable, and is adequate to establish the fact of a noteworthy change. (Page 171.)
> In the light of these converging lines of evidence, it seems impossible to doubt the existence of a causal connection between the recent fall of prices and the monetary changes of the last twenty years. (Page 199.)

Even the gold monometallist, Mr. Giffen (in his Essays in Finance, second series, page 22, Trade Depression and Low Prices), says:

> Two causes only have been suggested. One is the great multiplication of commodities and diminution of the cost of production, due to the progress of invention, etc. The other is that the precious metal used for standard money, namely, gold, has become relatively scarcer than it was, its production being diminished, on the one hand, and the demand for it, on the other, increased. I am disposed to give greater weight to the latter. (From Bimetallism; a Tract for the Times, by Francis A. Walker, page 9.)

GEN. FRANCIS A. WALKER.

Confirmation of these opinions is given by that careful and instructive writer on political economy, Gen. Francis A. Walker. At the first mention of his name I must turn aside to speak a few words in his deserved praise. He was a Union soldier of zeal, bravery, and renown; a scholar learned and profound, as well as brilliant; a political economist of the highest rank, and a writer on economic questions known favorably to the world of letters; a patriotic citizen, and a courteous gentleman. He had given his whole soul to the new movement for bimetallism, and on the 5th day of January, 1897, he passed away suddenly, almost in the hour of newly engaging in its service. The bimetallists of Europe and America pay loving tribute to his memory.

General Walker, in his recent work on International Bimetallism, says (page 256) that—

> Ever since 1873 there has been an almost continuous fall of prices in terms of gold.

And he proceeds in this book and in the Yale Review for December, 1896, to refute the assertions of Mr. David A. Wells that the saving in the cost of production accounts for the fall of prices.

This claim of Mr. Wells is the principal explanation made by the gold monometallists of the fall in prices in recent years—namely, that it is due to increased facilities of production. That these account for some portion of the fall is not denied by bimetallists. The moot question is whether the total fall is thus accounted for. General Walker says that increased facilities raise the profits of the producers, but do not lower prices until they reach the method of production of that very last portion of the supply which can be profitably produced and which, "as every well-trained economist knows, determines the price of commodities." The point may be difficult to understand, but here it is, as carefully stated by General Walker in the December Yale Review:

> All the movements and inventions in the world, no matter how great, will not reduce the price of any line of commodities merely by being applied, no matter how extensively, to production by the more favored producers. If a steam thrashing machine would thrash, sack, and tie a thousand bushels a second, however much it might enhance the profits of the men who employ steam threshers on their farms, there would not be the slightest influence exerted upon the price of wheat until the machines began to reduce the cost of production on the poorest or most distant lands contributing to the supply of the market.

In addition to this argument of General Walker, other points are worthy of notice. There was a great saving in the cost of production due to railroads, steamers, harvesters, and the like causes before 1850, so that, according to Mr. Wells's argument, prices ought then to have fallen, yet it is well established that there was a general rise in prices.

Again, there have been no increased facilities in the production of real estate. Although it is the subject of cultivation, it is not a subject of production. Yet it is matter of the commonest observation that in the recent years during which the fall in the prices of commodities has been attributed to the demonetization of silver there has been a general fall in the prices of real estate corresponding to the fall in commodities. In special localities there has been a rise in prices, but the general rule is the other way.

THE LOWEST FALL IN PRICES NOT YET REACHED.

It would require a tedious citation of proofs and many arguments, as well as answers to objections, to demonstrate in detail that the fall in prices has been caused in great part by the rejection of silver as a money metal. Every person called upon to act on this question must satisfy himself and follow his own conclusions. My inquiries have been carefully and conscientiously made, and they lead me to opinions which are exceedingly disturbing to my hopes that business prosperity is near at hand. I do not believe that we have as yet realized the full fall in prices which demonetization is producing. Reverting to a statement previously made; that economic shocks are slow in making themselves felt, I am helped to reach this opinion that prices have not as yet touched bottom.

One of the most felicitous and characteristic parts of General Walker's argument in his book on bimetallism is where he answers those writers who speak of the readjustment of social forces to meet changed conditions as if it were always a speedy movement.

In one part of his work he says that the point against such writers was brought out admirably by Prof. Cliffe Leslie and Professor Cairnes, in their essays dealing with this theme, namely:

> The delay necessarily involved in the propagation of economic forces or economic shocks, from one object to another, from one class in the community to another, from one country to another, even from one city or town to another. It is thoroughly characteristic of the economists of the a priori school to assume that such propagation is instantaneous. If these writers ever admit the fact of "a period of readjustment," it is much as if it were a matter of changing tickets and baggage at a railway junction. Prices will readjust themselves to the new supply of money, be the same greater or smaller. Wages will readjust themselves to the new prices, be the same higher or lower. Industries will readjust themselves to the new prices and the new wages with ease and celerity and without loss. Taxes will diffuse themselves with infallible equity, whatever the original subject of imposition. Readjustment is the shibboleth of this school. (Walker on Bimetallism, pages 48, 49, and 50).

General Walker proceeds further to deal with this shibboleth as follows:

> No man would now presume to talk in this way before an intelligent audience. It has come to be understood that social and industrial organizations and structures are matters of immense importance; that society and industry can not be reasoned upon as homogeneous and as in a state of continual flux. It is acknowledged that the process of readjustment is not easy, and that its period is not short; that economic shocks are propagated along the lines of least resistance; that burdens and taxes tend to rest upon those individuals and classes who are least able to throw them off upon others, and who are therefore least able to bear these themselves; that economic injuries once inflicted tend to deepen and to become permanent.
> It must be admitted, if ever the old-fashioned style of reasoning was applicable to any subject-matter in economics, it was applicable to the influence of alterations in the money supply upon prices. Economists, even the most reasonable, have been disposed to speak of this matter as if the effects were instantaneous, or were produced with scarcely sensible intervals. That the economic movement is more rapid in this field than in any other is due partly to the nature of money and partly to the fact that the trading classes, who are the chief agents in the work, are a selected body, active, alert, and well informed. Yet Professors Cairnes and Cliffe Leslie have shown that, in fact, both after the silver discoveries of America and after the gold discoveries of California and Australia, the distribution of the new money proceeded by distinct steps, with appreciable intervals, extending in the former case to considerable periods, periods measured not by years, but by decades.

General Walker returns to this point in a later portion of his book, where he is treating of the effect of the demonetization of silver upon the industry and trade of oriental nations, and says:

> I have more than once commented upon the rapidity and completeness with which writers of the a priori school in economics are accustomed to assume that readjustment will take place after important changes, whether in the standard of value or in the conditions of production or exchange. I have referred to the writings of Professors Cairnes and Cliffe Leslie to show that after the discovery of America the effects of the new silver extended from land to land, only with long intervals; and in the result were irregularly experienced by different nations, by different classes of economic agents, and even by different commodities. Even after the gold discoveries at the middle of this century, when it might be supposed improvements in trade, in transportation, and in the communication of intelligence would have secured an almost instantaneous propagation of economic forces, Professor Cairnes has abundantly shown in his Essays on the Gold Question that the influence of the new money proceeded from commodity to commodity, from class to class, and from country to country, with still very considerable intervals; and that this retardation of the forces thus operating produced large, important, and permanent economic effects.

That I may not be suspected of exaggeration, I quote the words of this most authoritative writer:

"Before this result is attained, a period of time, longer or shorter, according to the amount of the augmentation and the general circumstances of commerce, must elapse. In the present instance, the additions which are being made to the monetary systems of the world are upon an enormous scale, and the disturbances effected in the relation of prices is proportionally great. Under such circumstances it is very possible that the inequalities resulting may not find their corrections throughout the whole period of progressive depreciation, a period which, even with our present facilities of production and distribution, may easily extend over some thirty or forty years. During this transitional term the action of the new gold on prices will not be uniform, but partial. Certain classes of commodities and services will be affected much more powerfully than others. Prices generally will rise, but with unequal steps."

In the light of such facts, the monometallists were clearly not justified in assuming that the readjustment of international values, made necessary by the demonetization of silver in Europe, would be early or easily effected. But their error becomes altogether inexcusable when we consider how well it was understood that changes of any nature are brought about with exceptional difficulty and delay among the people of the East. The force of custom, tradition, and caste there rises to its maximum. So great is the inertia of the Eastern peoples under economic shocks, even the most tremendous, that at times it seems as if those shocks were not felt at all. (Walker on Bimetallism. 243, 244, 245.)

Accepting fully these views of General Walker, and applying them to the progress of demonetization since 1873, and considering the efforts made by the United States to resist that progress, and the fact that the India mints were not closed until 1893, and that Secretary Carlisle did not strike his last deadly blow at silver until September, 1896, I am led to the conclusion that by far the greater share of the effect upon the prices of property produced by the successive steps of demonetization has been realized since the year 1890, when the last census of the United States was taken.

EFFECT OF FALL IN PRICES IN THE UNITED STATES.

Prior to that year, notwithstanding the effects of demonetization of silver had begun to be felt, the nominal growth of wealth in this country had been rapid. Many railroads had been built, much new land opened to settlement, and increased cultivation and abundant foreign immigration had helped to swell our population. By the census of 1890 it appears that the property, real and personal, in the United States was $65,037,091,197, classified as follows:

Real estate with improvements thereon	$39,544,544,333
Live stock on farms, farm implements, and machinery	2,703,015,040
Mines and quarries, including product on hand	1,291,291,579
Gold and silver coin and bullion	1,158,774,948
Machinery of mills and product on hand, raw and manufactured	3,058,593,441
Railroads and equipments, including $389,357,289 for street railroads	8,685,407,323
Telegraphs, telephones, shipping, canals, and equipments	701,755,712
Miscellaneous	7,893,708,821

The indebtedness of individuals and corporations in the United States in 1890, not reckoning $2,027,170,546 of national, State, and local debts, was sixteen thousand millions of dollars, as appears by the estimate of Mr. George K. Holmes, the head of the Bureau of Mortgages, in the Department of Labor Bulletin for November, 1895 (page 48). According to the best of my information and belief, as already stated, the value of the sixty-five thousand millions of property in the United States in 1890 has shrunk 25 per cent since that date, and therefore the same property would not be valued to-day at more than forty-nine thousand millions.

It is to be borne in mind that this amount of sixty-five thousand millions was placed at those figures by the census authorities, acting according to their own judgment, by making additions of $39,563,917,779 to the sum of only $25,473,173,418, which was the value of the same property according to the valuations of the State and other local taxation officers.

Here, then, we have this startling condition of our country: Our sixty-five thousand millions have shrunk sixteen thousand millions, or to forty-nine thousand millions. Our debts of sixteen thousand millions have not shrunk, but remain due, according to the letter of the bonds, and are an inexorable charge upon our property to that full amount, leaving us, deducting our debts, values to the amount of only thirty-three thousand millions. Can this continuous shrinkage of our property and the unyielding burden of our debts be endured without widespread bankruptcies?

Can all this indebtedness be liquidated, or that portion of it which falls due in the near future, with such a fall in values? I am compelled to believe that if the present tendency of prices downward continues the debtors of the world will be unable to meet their engagements, and insolvencies will continue to increase from year to year until almost a revolution will take place in the ownership of the property of the country, which will pass from the control of debtors into the hands of creditors.

It is best to look the actual situation squarely in the face. In 1893, from various causes, about which there is controversy, came the worst business year this country had ever seen. The commercial failures were, in liabilities, $346,779,889. The banking failures were, in liabilities, $210,998,808. The railroad failures were, with indebtedness, $1,212,217,033.

In 1894 there was a recovery, as follows: Commercial failures, liabilities, $172,992,856. In 1895 the commercial failures were $173,196,060. But in 1896 again an increase of failures confronts us as follows, $226,096,834.

These figures are taken from Messrs. R. G. Dun & Co.'s Review, of January 30, 1897, and the editor adds:

Wheat has declined severely, cotton has scarcely risen enough to pay brokerage, wool holds steady in spite of enormous buying, woolen goods hardly change in price, iron and its products decline, leather is sluggish, hides are lower, * * * the average of railroad stocks is slightly lower than it was December 31, and the advance in trust stocks has been small. To traders in such properties the month has been disappointing. January—

Say Messrs. Dun & Co.—

has been a month of disappointment—

And then grotesquely add—

but of real gain.

Where the real gain comes in they do not say, perhaps from complacently contemplating the fortunate balance of trade in favor of the United States against Europe, as shown by the statistics for 1896. Those statistics are stated in Mr. Barker's American of January 23, 1897, under an article headed "The nation's balance sheet," and I will quote the figures, which are taken by Mr. Barker, and have been verified by me, from the Treasury Department's returns.

In 1896 we exported goods to the reported value of $325,322,184 in excess of imports, and on top of this we exported $33,777,884 of silver in excess of imports. Thus by the export of our products we placed to our credit abroad the enormous sum of $359,100,068. This much more we sold than we bought, and yet gold was sent to us in payment to the amount of only $47,777,097. A balance of $311,322,971 was therefore left.

Now, what has become, Mr. Barker pertinently asks, of the $311,000,000? It has gone to pay to Europe what we would otherwise have been obliged to pay her in gold or to borrow from her in new loans. Mr. Barker makes an estimate of what has become of the $311,000,000 balance. He states the account against the United States as follows:

Interest, at 4 per cent, on our foreign indebtedness of $5,000,000,000		$200,000,000
Expenditures of Americans traveling and living abroad		75,000,000
Freights paid foreign shipowners on account of the carriage of, say, $575,000,000 worth of our imports allowing a charge for transportation equal to 8 per cent of the value of the produce imported	$46,000,000
Less freights paid by foreigners to American shipowners for the carriage of, say, $80,000,000 worth of our exports, allowing a freight charge equal to 12 per cent of the value of produce exported	9,600,000
		36,400,000
Total account against the United States		311,400,000

That is where the balance of trade has gone. I see no escape from the conclusion that if unfortunately we had not had this balance of $311,000,000 in our favor, we would have been obliged to find in some way $311,000,000 to send abroad in gold, or we would have been obliged to borrow that money in Europe. In other words, if it had not been for this fortunate balance of trade in our favor, there would have been a business cataclysm in this country which would have prostrated all industries and produced infinite misery in our commercial and domestic affairs.

There is a most discouraging exhibit made by Mr. Barker in The American of February 6, 1897, where he gives for 1875, 1885, 1895, and also 1896, the estimated acreage and value of the cereal crops of the United States. I will insert the two tables in my remarks.

So there has been a loss to the farmers of this country of $777,000,000 by the fall in the price of crops since 1875. And notwithstanding that, if it had not been for the sums realized by these cereal products in 1896, the balance of trade in favor of the United States as against Europe would not have existed; the amount which we owed could not have been paid by our own products, and this country would have been subjected either to the pressure of exporting gold or to the necessity of making several hundred million dollars of new loans abroad.

Mr. President, the country has been saved from these evil effects of the fall in prices, caused, as I believe, by the demonetization of silver only, because, fortunately for us, unfortunately for them, gaunt famine stalks through India, and the starvation of the people of other lands is causing a rise in the value of the cereal crops of America. We are only saved from great misery by the overwhelming misery which has come to the people of the Orient.

It is possible that I have made an erroneous collocation of facts and conclusions, and that optimistic reviewers may find hope in the face of the facts as they may be able to present them, and that they may believe and demonstrate that we are upon the eve of revived agricultural, commercial, and financial prosperity upon the platform laid down by the recent monetary convention at Indianapolis, that the gold standard must be maintained. If they can plausibly make such a prediction, I shall be greatly rejoiced. But as at present instructed, I am imperatively forced to the opposite conclusion. I fear that prices will not rise, that business will not revive, that debtors can not pay, and that bankruptcies will increase, and I believe that the present lamentable condition of the business of this country, and of nearly all countries, is owing, in large measure, to the fact that, as the Iddesleigh Commission of 1885 declared, there has been "a continuous fall of prices caused, in large measure, by the appreciation of the standard of value."

IS THERE A SYSTEM OF BIMETALLISM?

The confidently proposed remedy for the evils to mankind thus described and proved is the restoration of bimetallism. To the system from which we have departed we must return, and I trust that we are already on the road. But the objectors continue to say that there is no such thing as bimetallism, that it did not in fact exist before 1873, and that there is, in truth, no bimetallism to which we can return. This was the idea presented during the debate in the Chamber of Deputies of France, sitting on December 9, 1896, according to the Journal Officiel of Thursday, December 10, 1896 (page 2101).

Mr. Meline, president of the council and minister of agriculture, was replying to the observations made at the previous session by Mr. Joseph Jourdan. When he spoke of the reestablishment of a fixed ratio between gold and silver, he was interrupted as follows:

Mr. CHARLES GRUET. It is a myth.

The PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL. No; it is not a myth, for up to 1873 it was the law that ruled the world.

Mr. Meline's brief but forcible statement seems vindicated by the facts. In the report of the Director of the Mint for 1895, dated October 16, 1896, on page 329, is given "the commercial ratio of silver to gold each year since 1687."

I will insert the table.

NOTE.—From 1687 to 1832 the ratios are taken from Dr. A. Soetbeer; from 1833 to 1878 from Pixley and Abell's tables; and from 1879 to 1895 from daily cablegrams from London.

In 1687 the ratio was 14.94 and in 1872 it was 15.63, and during this whole period of one hundred and eighty-six years the number, without fractions, of the ratio is either 14, 15, or 16. The number is 14 during fifty-nine years, 15 during one hundred and twenty-four years, and 16 during only three years. Starting from the year 1803, when France formally adopted a statutory ratio between silver and gold, down to 1874, the ratio, disregarding fractions, was 15 every year except 1808, when it was 16.08.

But when formal demonetization commenced in 1873, up began to rise the number of ounces of silver necessary to equal an ounce of gold. Beginning in 1873 with 15.92, in 1889 it had reached 22.10. In 1890, under the influence of our purchasing law, the ratio fell to 19.76. In 1891 the upward movement again began. In 1893, when the India mints closed, it went in one week from 24 to 30. In 1895 it was 31.60, and in 1896 it was 30.66.

It seems impossible that any candid inquirer should doubt that this remarkable uniformity in the ratio down to 1873, covering nearly two centuries, notwithstanding all the fluctuations in the product of the two metals, was occasioned by some cause acting independently of the quantities of the two metals produced. Those quantities varied greatly during this period, as appears by the following table:

[From 1493 to 1885 the above figures are from a table of averages for certain periods compiled by Dr. Adolph Soetbeer. For the years 1886 to 1896 the production is the annual estimate of the United States Bureau of the Mint. The table down to and including 1895 is contained in the report of the Director of the Mint for 1895, House Document No. 23, Fifty-fourth Congress, second session, page 346; and the estimate for 1896 is made by the Director of the Mint.]

Here, Mr. President, are striking facts to be noticed. During the years from 1781 to 1830, about fifty years, the proportion of the production of gold and silver (coining value) was as follows: 24 to 76, 24 to 76, 25 to 75, 33 to 67. Come on down, however, to 1851, and from 1851 to 1870 the conditions were exactly reversed, and the percentage of the production of gold to silver was 78 of gold to 22 of silver, 78 to 22, 73 to 27, 70 to 30; and yet during all those periods practical bimetallism prevailed, as I shall show later, and this enormous disproportion in the relative production of gold and silver did not destroy the bimetallic law.

Mr. President, here is the total of the production of silver and gold in the world since the discovery of America brought down to and including 1896. The total production of gold (coining value) is $9,000,000,000, and of silver, $10,500,000,000, a difference practically imperceptible for the whole period since 1492; and the difference between the coining value of the silver and the coining value of the gold is more than made up, in my judgment, by the larger use of silver than gold in the arts.

I find the most remarkable fact of all, and that is, that in 1896 the world's production of gold was $215,000,000 and the world's production of silver was $215,000,000. It would seem as if good fortune, as if nature, as if perhaps God himself, had interposed here to refute the prediction of those who have demanded the demonetization of silver on the ground of its enormous overproduction, and had shown us in this year 1897, as the result of the production of gold and silver in the world in the year 1896, the exact equality of $215,000,000 worth of each of the precious metals. Yet we are told we can not have bimetallism because the one metal or the other, being produced disproportionately, will drive its associate out of existence. Here the equality of 15 to 1 in the coinage was maintained during the period when gold as to silver was as 25 to 75, and during the later period, when the production of gold as to silver was as 75 to 25.

It is easy, examining the subject historically, to see how the bimetallic system maintained the ratio of 15½ to 1, notwithstanding the variations in the quantities of the two metals produced. France, principally, ran the risk and bore the strain whenever the production of either metal took place in unusual quantities disproportionate to the production of the other metal. In 1848 and 1851 there were enormous discoveries of gold in California and Australia. The bimetallic link of 15½ to 1 was threatened. France, between 1853 and 1860, boldly took $616,000,000 worth of gold and parted to other nations with $293,000,000 worth of silver; and bimetallism was saved. Later, toward 1873, when silver began to be more abundantly produced than gold, France again tried to hold the ratio firmly, and there can be little doubt that, even against nominal demonetization of silver by the United States in 1873 and the continued efforts of England to establish the single standard of gold, France would have continued to maintain the parity of silver with gold at the ratio of 15½ to 1 had it not been for the action of Germany on the 9th day of July, 1873, when, enriched by the French indemnity of one thousand millions in gold, that Government began to sell its silver thalers, and thus joined England in the movement to demonetize silver, which, unfortunately, as Senator SHERMAN said, was brought about because the other nations yielded to the demand of the United States for the single standard of gold, although the Senator manfully acknowledged that this demand was an error in his letter of July 15, 1878, to Hon. W. S. Groesbeck, in which he says:

> But other arguments showing the dangerous effect upon industry by dropping one of the precious metals from the standard of value outweigh, in my mind, all theoretical objections to the bimetallic system.

In the light of the facts which have been recited, and looking carefully at the dates in which the various commercial nations have acted on the subject of standards, the whole argument for bimetallism is revealed to the thoughtful inquirer. Here the dates stand:

In 1785, 1786, and 1792 came the establishment of the double standard in the United States; in 1803 its formal establishment in France, ratio 15½ to 1; 1816, the adoption of the gold standard in England; 1862, the adoption of the French system by Italy; 1865, the formation of the Latin Union by France, Belgium, and Switzerland, ratio 15½ to 1; 1868, the admission of Greece to the Latin Union and the adoption by Spain of the French system; 1871, the adoption by Germany of the gold standard; 1873, suspension by the United States of the coinage of silver dollars and the suspension of silver coinage by France, Belgium, and Holland; 1875, the suspension by Italy and the Dutch colonies; 1892, by Austria-Hungary; 1893, by British India; panic in the silver market in July in London, when the price fell until the ratio was 31.43 to 1. (See United States Treasury Department Circular No. 123, July 1, 1896.)

The learned editors of the Encyclopedia Britannica (9th ed., article "Money," page 729), speaking of the sudden increase about 1870 of the annual product of silver from $45,000,000 to $75,000,000, more than half coming from new mines opened in Nevada, say:

> The increased production of silver was only a minor element in causing its depreciation. The policy pursued by various states—viz: (1) Germany and the Scandinavian States in adopting a single gold standard; (2) the countries composing the Latin Union in limiting the coinage of silver; (3) the Indian Government by adopting a new method of drawing bills—proved to be the really influential causes for the decline in the value of silver as contrasted with gold.

Considering the facts which have been thus set forth, is it possible to assert that bimetallism is a myth? Is it not as clear as light that it was a substantial principle of monetary science, operating silently and powerfully for two hundred years, before it was recognized and studied by the political economists of the nations, and which would have continued to maintain the parity of silver with gold even to this day had it not been for the unwise interference of the great governments of the earth?

Yet gold monometallists continue to say that the parity between the two metals was not maintained prior to 1873. They can only keep themselves from being characterized as censurable deceivers by pointing to the slight fluctuations, between fourteen and a fraction to sixteen and a fraction, shown by the statistics from 1687 to 1873. But those fluctuations were of comparatively little moment, and did not seriously impair the existence during all that period of the bimetallic system.

Prof. Willard Fisher, of the Wesleyan University, in the Quarterly Journal of Economics for January, 1896 (see Walker on International Bimetallism, 109), states the answer to this argument in language which is so apt and so much better than my own that I must here repeat it:

> Professor Laughlin utterly fails to grasp what bimetallists claim for and expect from their system, and he makes the same mistake that Mr. Robert Giffen made in his Case against Bimetallism. They both think that if the French law of 1803 had any effect upon the market value of the precious metals, it must have kept the commercial ratio at exactly 15½ to 1; and in citing the familiar fact that the market figures fluctuated up and down, but rarely, if ever, coincided with the mint ratio, they complacently assume that they have refuted the historical argument for bimetallism. But it is absolutely certain that no such identity of ratios could be expected, even by the most confident bimetallist. So long as there are seigniorage charges, freight charges, insurance fees, or any other expenses involved in passing metal through the mint, the nominal legal ratio is never the effective mint ratio. The inefficiency of the French law in steadying the relative values of the precious metals can never be proved by citing differences between the market ratio and the nominal legal ratio, unless it be shown that the differences are greater than can be accounted for by (1) the seigniorage and all other mint charges, (2) the cost of transporting the metal from the market whose ratio is cited to the mint, (3) the fees for insurance during the transit, (4) the agents' commissions, (5) the interest on the capital temporarily locked up, and (6) the exigencies of sudden and urgent demand. But no man has even so much as attempted to examine thus fully the deviation of the London market from the French mint ratio. Let just a simple hint as to the effects of these various charges and expenses suffice. The law of 1803 imposed a seigniorage of 9 francs a kilo on gold and 3 francs a kilo on silver; and if no thought be given to the five other heads, this mint charge alone makes the effective legal ratio not 15½ to 1, but anywhere between 15.730+ to 1 and 15.455 to 1.

General Walker, in International Bimetallism (page 222), speaking of a bimetallic league, says:

> This would not mean that the value of gold and silver would remain absolutely at the ratio fixed by the bimetallic agreement, but that the range of divergence would be always within the cost of transporting metals from monometallist markets to bimetallic mints. If this were so, it would, for all practical commercial purposes, be the same thing as if there were no divergence whatever. A preference for either metal in a monometallist market, which fell short of the cost of transporting the other, the cheapening metal, to a bimetallic mint, would, for all purposes of economic reasoning, be the same as actual indifference. To this case would apply Mr. J. S. Mill's remark made with reference to another subject: "Small means do not merely produce small effects; they produce no effect at all."

In truth, the variations under the bimetallic law prior to 1873 from the French ratio of 15½ to 1 were no greater and quite as immaterial as are the differences between the two eyes and the two ears of the human body, the two pairs of engines of the twin-screw steamship, and the two horses that draw a carriage. The claim that bimetallism never has existed and that there can be no such thing as a permanent system of bimetallism created by the consensus of the nations, involving a bimetallic standard of money which shall determine the value of the property of the world, is a contention that finds no support in reason, and very little countenance from the careful thinkers and writers on monetary science.

All the members of the celebrated Herschell commission declared as to the system of bimetallism prevailing before 1873 as follows:

So long as that system was in force we think that, notwithstanding the changes in the production and use of the precious metals, it kept the market price of silver approximately steady at the ratio fixed by law between them, namely, 15½ to 1. (Report, end of section 192, part 1, November 6, 1888.)

"It is upon this principle," said Professor Jevons, writing in 1874, "that we must explain the extraordinary permanence of the ratio of exchange of gold and silver. That this fixedness of ratio does not depend upon the amount and cost of production is proved by the very slight effect of the Australian and California discoveries." (Bimetallism: A Tract for the Times, by Francis A. Walker, page 16.)

Here the special attention of that distinguished gold monometallist, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS], ought to be called to these authoritative declarations in such striking contradiction of the views expressed by him in this Chamber on January 29 in opposition to the bill for another international conference. The Senator said:

The bill is worse than useless—it is highly vicious.

In the same speech the Senator spoke of it as "this vicious and misleading bill."

He also said:

No such bimetallism has ever existed in fact; in no country of the world does it exist now. * * * The pretense that any such system of bimetallism * * * has ever had existence in the world * * * must be consigned to the limbo where the ghosts of witchcraft, astrology, demonology, and kindred superstitions have been driven by the advancing intelligence and wisdom of mankind.

It is painful to be obliged to impugn the Senator's dogmatic infallibility by contrasting his utterances with those of such eminent men as venture to hold an opposite opinion.

I have in my hand Prof. Charles B. Spahr's review of Giffen's Case against Bimetallism, where he quotes from Professor Foxwell, of Cambridge. The latter describes the condition of scientific opinion in England concerning bimetallism, and, after naming the very eminent men who believe in bimetallism, he adds:

Whoever refuses to admit that a fixed ratio between gold and silver can be established and maintained by international treaty is no longer considered amongst us an economist.

Therefore, by this authority the Senator from Wisconsin could not be considered as an economist. He certainly can be considered as a vituperator, and, Mr. President, vituperation seems to be a common habit of the advocates of gold monometallism. I find here that Mr. Giffen has fallen into the habit of using expletives like those which are used by the Senator from Wisconsin. Mr. Giffen speaks of bimetallism as "the detestation of men of sense."

Mr. President, the Senator from Wisconsin did not always think that bimetallism is as bad as witchcraft and demonology. The Senator was a member of the convention which nominated Mr. Bryan for President; and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER] will excuse me for calling that a Democratic convention. I find a declaration of the minority committee on resolutions to that convention, as follows:

That the efforts of the Government should be steadily directed toward the establishment of international bimetallism.

Now, on the one hand, we have the Senator saying that no such bimetallism has ever existed in fact; that—the pretense it ever had existence in the world * * * must be consigned to the limbo where the ghosts of witchcraft, astrology, demonology, and kindred superstitions have been driven by the advancing intelligence and wisdom of mankind.

That was the Senator on the 29th of January, but at the Democratic convention of 1896 we heard him declaring to the convention and to the people of the world—

That the efforts of the Government should be steadily directed toward the establishment of international bimetallism.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PERKINS in the chair). Will the Senator from New Hampshire suspend? Under the rules of the Senate, the Chair is obliged to lay before it the unfinished business coming over from yesterday, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 8110) to establish a uniform law on the subject of bankruptcies throughout the United States.

Mr. FRYE. I ask that that may be informally laid aside, and that the Senator from New Hampshire may be permitted to conclude his speech.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is asked that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside and that the Senator from New Hampshire be permitted to finish his speech. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Senator from New Hampshire will proceed.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, who signed this report declaring that the efforts of the Government should be steadily directed to the establishment of international bimetallism? The first name is that of the distinguished Senator from New York, DAVID B. HILL; the second, WILLIAM F. VILAS, of Wisconsin; the third, GEORGE GRAY, of Delaware; the fourth, John Prentiss Poe, of Maryland; the fifth, Irving W. Drew, of New Hampshire. My colleague will recognize Mr. Drew as a distinguished member of the convention, who, after declaring against the free coinage of silver by the United States alone and in favor of international bimetallism, went home to New Hampshire and manfully assisted in giving the McKinley Republicans of that State their unprecedented majority of 36,000.

It seems to me that the Senator from Wisconsin ought to allow those of us who still believe that the powers of the Government should be steadily directed to the establishment of international bimetallism to do so without charging that in so doing we are advocating either witchcraft, astrology, demonology, or a kindred superstition. We are only advocating a superstition to which the Senator from Wisconsin affixed his name less than one year ago.

Returning again to the Herschell commission, we find that six of its members, Rt. Hon. Sir Louis Mallet, C. B.; Rt. Hon. A. J. Balfour, M. P.; Rt. Hon. Henry Chaplin, M. P.; Sir D. Barbour, K. C. S. I.; Sir W. H. Houldsworth, Bart., M. P.; Mr. Samuel Montagu, M. P., declared as follows:

Part III, section 29. In 1873-74 the connecting link disappeared, and for the first time the system of rating the two metals ceased to form a subject of legislation in any country in the world. The law of supply and demand was for the first time left to operate independently upon the value of each metal; and simultaneously the ratio which had been maintained, with scarcely any perceptible variation, for two hundred years, gave place to a marked and rapid divergence in the relative value of gold and silver, which has culminated in a change from 15½ to 1 to 22 to 1.

The chairman of the Holland delegation to the international conference of 1892, Mr. Van Den Berg, made the following striking statement, showing that bimetallism was no myth, but a potent reality, from 1800 to 1873. His language is as follows:

Our ideal is an international bimetallic agreement. Such an agreement we fully believe to be possible and desirable, both from the theoretical and also from the practical point of view. We in Holland are unanimous in the belief that, should an international bimetallic agreement admit gold and silver to free coinage at a fixed ratio, the union between the two metals would be reestablished and would be maintained on a fixed basis, as in fact it was maintained during nearly three-quarters of a century in spite of the extreme variations in the production of gold and silver, respectively, which took place in that period. I need not remind you, gentlemen, that from 1800 to 1820 silver yielded 75 per cent and gold 25 per cent only of the total value of the precious metals produced. Gradually the production of gold increased, while the production of silver continually diminished relatively to the production of the yellow metal until, after the discovery of the Californian and Australian mines, the two metals arrived at a position exactly the reverse of that which I have just mentioned, for it was gold that now yielded 75 per cent of the world's production, while silver sunk to 25 per cent and took the place which gold had occupied half a century before. Well, notwithstanding this complete inversion of the respective production of the two metals, the ratio between gold and silver remained nearly fixed and steady, and I believe that ratio would have been maintained permanently if the use of silver had not been proscribed by legislative enactments. It must be admitted that the increase in the production of silver, of which we hear so much, has only a very slight importance in comparison with the development in the production of gold toward the middle of the century which is now approaching its close. (Walker on International Bimetallism, 227.)

THE GOLD PANIC AFTER 1849.

General Walker, in his International Bimetallism, page 122, thus graphically describes the gold panic after 1849:

In 1848 occurred the discovery of gold on the Pacific Coast of North America. Only three years later, on the other side of the globe, gold was discovered in enormous and seemingly inexhaustible amounts in Australia. It is surely one of the most marvelous coincidences of human history, that on the three great "finds" of the yellow metal which have occurred since authentic history began two should have come within so narrow a space. The aggregate effect upon the supply of gold produced by the simultaneous discovery of the California and Australia mines, together with a three or four fold increase in the yield of the alluvial deposits of the Ural Mountains, threatened for the time to be overwhelming. The average production of the world had been twenty or thirty million dollars. In a few years it rose to five times that amount. Within the ten or twelve years succeeding 1851 it is estimated that the stock of gold in the hands of civilized man was literally doubled. During the decade 1801-1810 the production of silver had been to that of gold, by weight, 50.2 to 1; during the decade 1851-1860 it was only 4.4 to 1, a change to the extent of nearly eleven-twelfths. M. Chevalier states the change in production in still higher terms. In 1857 he wrote that the production of gold as compared with silver had increased fivefold since 1851, and fifteenfold in the course of only forty years. A veritable gold panic set in. It hardly seemed to anyone out of France that it would be possible to stem the flood and to save commercial and financial values from such a fall as would amount to the destruction of all individual credit. Few dared to hope that the barrier which France had to this time interposed against fluctuations in the value of the two metals could long withstand the strain. If once that gave way, gold might fall in a succession of plunges, from crag to crag, down to a level which would mean nothing less than universal bankruptcy. Estimates were freely made that, from being worth 15½ to 1 of silver, it would soon be worth 12 to 1, 10 to 1, even 8 to 1. In his book on the Probable Fall in the Value of Gold, Chevalier more than once uses the illustration of a fall to one-half its former value. He indeed states that this assumption is not the result of anything like exact computation, and is only used to show briefly and strikingly what might come from the bursting of the great reservoir and the rushing of its mighty waters down upon the marts of trade and the seats of industry; but Chevalier would not have used this illustration so freely had he regarded it as an extravagant statement of the possibilities, and even the reasonable probabilities, of the case.

The nations of Europe were prompt to take alarm at the menace to industry, finance, and even the social structure. "Ten years ago," wrote M. Leon Faucher, in 1852, in his work The Production of the Precious Metals, "everyone was frightened at the prospect of the depreciation of silver; during the last eighteen months it is the diminution in the price of gold that has been alarming the public." In June, 1850, Holland demonetized the gold 10-florin piece and the guillaume. Portugal prohibited any gold from having current value except English sovereigns. Belgium demonetized its gold circulation. Russia prohibited the export of silver as the metal likely to become the very stay and staff of the national existence. Austria, which was then on a basis of inconvertible paper, thought that the cheapening of gold offered a favorable opportunity to come to a metallic basis, and called the German States to meet in a monetary conference at Vienna. The other States feared the depreciating gold and insisted on the single silver standard. The most that Austria could do was to secure the concession of the coinage of gold crowns as trade pieces. (Suess, Die Zukunft des Goldes, 11, 12; Soetbeer, Litteraturnachweis über Geld- u. Munzwesen, 77, 78.)

In some countries shops sought to attract trade by offering to receive gold at par. M. de Laveleye states (La Mon. et le Bimet., p. xii) that traders hung out the sign, "L'or est reçu sans perte!" "Even in England," wrote Chevalier, "some persons have put forth the advice that the standard should be altered and that silver should be substituted for gold. They ground their opinion primarily upon the plea of principle, in maintaining that, gold having ceased for an interval of time, which may possibly be rather long, to satisfy the essential condition of having a value relatively stable, it thereby loses its aptitude for the functions of money." So respectable an authority as Mr. James Maclaren, author of the History of the Currency, put forth a proposal that life-insurance companies should be established on a silver basis. Certain American corporations in the same period sought to safeguard themselves by similar arrangements, and to this day have the satisfaction of receiving every month a certain number of ounces of fine silver, paid in for rents under contracts then made.

Those are companies at Lawrence, Mass. When I was there last summer making a call upon a friend, I inquired whether the statement of General Walker was correct. I found that it was even so, and that the Essex Company, in Lawrence, at the time when gold was plenty and silver was scarce, had undertaken to safeguard themselves by requiring that certain rents of real estate, leased for a long period of years, should be paid each year in so many ounces of fine silver; and to-day I suppose their tenants must be felicitating themselves that they are, by express contract of the creditor, paying their rents in depreciated 50-cent silver.

Returning to the quotation from General Walker, I read:

One English financier is quoted as declaring that gold would soon only be "fit for the dustpan."

Amid this general alarm, amounting to panic, the statesmen and financiers of France stood firm. The Government, indeed, assembled a commission for the consideration of the question in its new and startling aspects; and some economists, like Chevalier, declared in favor of silver monometallism as the only hope of preserving industry and trade and the social structure. Chevalier proposed to return to the system in force down to 1785, when silver was the standard and gold was rated to it by law or proclamation. He proposed that this rerating should be made every six to twelve months to keep pace with the fall of gold. He even raised the question whether the gold coin thus issued should not be restricted as to the amount for which it could be tendered. And this of gold! The man who could put forward such a proposal should have been prosecuted for lese-majeste. But the hearts of the men who controlled the destinies of France did not fail. Freely that country gave of her silver to all, freely took gold from all, without fear of its becoming worthless on her hands. Year after year the flood of the yellow metal poured in upon her mints; and her moneyers stood at their posts to coin it and give it back, full legal tender, at 15½ to 1. In the eight years between 1853 and 1860, both inclusive, there was imported into France gold to the value of 3,082,000,000 francs, or $616,000,000, or 123,000,000 pounds sterling. Coincidently with this influx of gold began the exportation of silver. In the eight years of which we have just spoken, France sold silver to the amount of 1,465,000,000 francs, or $293,000,000, or 59,000,000 pounds sterling.

Such was the course of the greatest financial storm of two centuries. By the end of 1860 the gale had well-nigh blown itself out, though the waves were still running high. During the decade then closing there had been added to the stock of gold $1,407,000,000, as estimated by Soetbeer; $1,237,000,000, as estimated by Tooke and Newmarch. Even these figures do not fully express the shock which the bimetallic system had to bear during this tremendous crisis. Not only was France without an ally in sustaining the ratio of 15½ to 1, but, in addition to the blows which fell upon her from the enormously increased production of gold, she had to meet the hostile action of other nations in demonetizing that metal, or restricting its use within their own circulation. When it is said that the gale had well-nigh blown itself out by the close of 1860, it is not meant that the production of gold very greatly declined after that period, though, in fact, it fell off considerably, owing to the exhaustion of the richest of the alluvial deposits; the average of the next decade was, according to Tooke and Newmarch, almost precisely 20 per cent below that of 1851-1860. But the storm center had passed by France. The other countries, protected so long by the action of the French bimetallic system, were now experiencing the effects of the increased production of the precious metals, in a not too tumultuous manner, by gradual accessions which exerted an influence on trade, industry, and the social structure, here and there injurious to individuals, but on the whole immensely beneficial to mankind. The French breakwater had beaten off the fury of the waves, but it could not, and indeed it was not desirable that it should, prevent the level of the harbor thus protected from being gradually raised.

Mr. President, after this magnificent historic picture of the success of bimetallism at 15½ to 1, achieved mainly by France, notwithstanding the enormous increase in the production of gold in the decade preceding 1860, he must be indeed a bold man—as bold as the Senator from Wisconsin—who will not admit that a like success would have been gained over the disproportionate production of silver during the last fifteen years if it had not been for the demonetization of that metal by the United States and Germany and the other nations which followed their lead.

I would be willing to end the whole argument for bimetallism before any intelligent American tribunal—and such could be found—if composed of disinterested members—and such it would be difficult to find—by submitting to the tribunal nothing but the documents that I have already introduced into my remarks, and extra copies of which I now hold in my hand, as follows:

I.

The Sauerbeck table (1), showing the fall of the prices of commodities since 1873, supplemented (2 and 3) by Mr. Barker's tables, and (4) those of Secretary Morton.

II.

The table (5) showing the ratios between gold and silver so near 15½ to 1 from 1687 to 1873 and the change since 1873.

III.

The table (6) showing the production of gold and silver, with the variations from 1493 to 1896, at which last date the production of each metal was of the same coinage value, $215,000,000, and the total of each metal for the four hundred and three years was not far from a similar equality—gold $9,000,000,000, silver $10,500,000,000.

IV.

The United States bimetallic laws of 1785, 1786, and 1792 (7), the French law of 1802 (8), and the memorandum (9) showing the successive acts of demonetization committed by the nations since 1873.

The early United States legislation was as follows:

July 6, 1785: "That the money unit of the United States of America shall be one dollar." August, 1786: "Resolved, That the money unit of the United States, being by the resolve of Congress of the 6th of July, 1785, a dollar, shall contain of fine silver 375.64 grains. * * * That there shall be two gold coins, one containing 246.268 grains of fine gold equal to ten dollars, and to be called an eagle; one containing 123.134 grains of fine gold, equal to five dollars, and to be called a half eagle."

Coinage act of 1792, ninth section, in part as follows:

"There shall be from time to time struck and coined at the said mint coins of gold, silver, and copper of the following denominations, values, and descriptions, namely: Eagles, each to be of the value of ten dollars or units, and to contain 247½ grains of pure or 270 grains of standard gold; half eagles, each to be of the value of five dollars, and to contain 123¾ grains of pure or 135 grains of standard gold; quarter eagles, each to be of the value of two dollars and a half a dollar, and to contain 61½ grains of pure or 67½ grains of standard gold; dollars or units each to be of the value of a Spanish milled dollar, as the same is now current, and to contain 371¼ grains of pure or 416 grains of standard silver."

The French law of the year 1802 decrees as follows;

To every person bringing to this mint 1 kilogram of gold nine-tenths fine, this same kilogram shall be given back to him transformed into 155 gold pieces of 20 francs, the total being equal to 3,100 francs. To every person bringing 1 kilogram of silver nine-tenths fine, this same kilogram shall be returned to him coined into forty 5-franc pieces, the total being equal to 200 francs. The debtor may tender these gold or silver pieces at his option, and can obtain for them a full receipt for his debt.

The foregoing nine documents are an impregnable mass of convincing facts which can not be blotted out of sight nor sneered down by the gold monometallists of Europe or America.

I have addressed this package to any gold monometallist, intending to submit it to the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS], but, as he is not present, I will venture to ask my respected friend from Illinois [Mr. PALMER] if he will accept it and hand it to the Senator from Wisconsin when he makes his appearance?

Mr. PALMER. With pleasure.

SOME OBJECTIONS TO BIMETALLISM.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, there are scores of objections not yet alluded to that have been made to the continued agitation for the restoration of bimetallism, which it would not be possible, within any reasonable time to-day, to recite and endeavor to refute, even if I were capable of the task. A few may be profitably alluded to, and a reply stated without elaboration.

THE INCIDENTAL USE OF SILVER NOT BIMETALLISM.

The fact is pointed to that before 1873 we had coined in the United States only about eight millions of silver dollars ($8,031,238), while since the date fixed as the beginning of demonetization we have coined over four hundred millions ($423,289,629). The Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] is fond of stating these facts to prove that we now have bimetallism.

There is usually an omission to state that, in addition to the silver dollars, we had coined before 1853 other silver, making the total $79,241,854.50; and also coined between 1853 and 1873, $64,571,744.20, making a total amount in 1873 of $143,813,598.70. (United States Treasury Circular No. 123, July 1, 1896, page 15.) Spanish, Mexican, and South American silver coins were also for a long time legal tender under United States laws.

But the true answer to this argument seems to be that the use of silver coin as token money, or even in considerable quantities as legal-tender money, is not bimetallism so long as the mints are closed to all but limited amounts of silver. When the United States had but little coined silver in actual circulation, yet the amount of that metal still in use in the world, joined with the gold of the world, measured the values and determined the prices of the world's property. When this Government prohibited the coinage of silver dollars, and Germany followed our decision, the downward movement of the prices of property began, because the real money of the world began to diminish in quantity. The purchases of silver made by our Government retarded the movement and held up for a time the price of silver bullion, but silver was no longer real money. When it came to be authoritatively proclaimed that our silver dollars must be redeemed on demand in gold, they ceased to be money in fact and became only promises to pay money, like the paper dollars, which were just as good money as silver dollars, and it was a waste to use the silver merely to imprint upon it promises to pay gold dollars. In short, the limited use of silver while the mints are closed to the coinage of silver, although it may help for a time to maintain better prices than would otherwise prevail for silver bullion, has but little effect in retarding the fall of the prices of commodities and the increased burdens upon debtors, and is no more bimetallism in principle or permanent effect than is the petty use of silver for dimes, quarters, and half dollars.

BIMETALLISM NOT REPUDIATION.

Attempts are made to discredit the efforts to remonetize silver by saying they are dishonestly intended to relieve debtors from the payment of their debts in full. The charge is unjust. Debtors have the right to have the burden of their debts unchanged by any changes in the currency. If during twenty years the value of the property of the debtors has been reduced, not from natural causes, but by the appreciation of gold caused by the demonetization of silver, that is an unnatural reduction of values, and debtors have the right to ask that the steps of demonetization shall be retraced and the constant increase in the burden of their debts arrested. To yield to this right of the debtors is in no sense assisting them to repudiate their debts.

This kind of argument—the appeal against anything which would look like repudiation—made in the late Presidential canvass was frequently and forcibly made, and was very effective in defeating Mr. Bryan.

Americans are sensitive to any imputation of private or public dishonor, and audiences responded promptly to invocations to maintain what was claimed to be the plighted faith of the nation and not to vote to pay debts in a currency deliberately or purposely depreciated. The argument and the appeal were fair, I think, in dealing with the Bryan proposition for the immediate free coinage of silver by the United States alone, which would have resulted in silver monometallism; gold would have gone to a premium and debtors could have paid their debts in a cheapened dollar.

This would have been contrary to the pledge of the nation to maintain the parity between the two metals, contained in the acts of 1890 and 1893, and would have savored of repudiation; and so it was overwhelmingly rejected by the American voters.

But when the argument is extended in the form of a claim that the United States can not honestly change its present monetary system, it is a false one. Mistaken policy as it would be for this people to adopt silver monometallism, yet it may be honestly done if they so decide. But the change must be made with due fulfillment of all existing express or implied pledges. Not long ago I asked that distinguished statesman of Massachusetts, Hon. George S. Boutwell, whether if the United States were to pay its existing debt, principal and interest, in gold, redeem its existing paper currency in gold, and its existing silver dollars in gold, it would not then be honest, even if unwise, thereafter, in its new issues of bonds and money to base them upon the single silver standard; and Mr. Boutwell did not undertake to maintain that any imputation of dishonor would lie against such a course.

The legal decisions of our highest court leave no doubt as to the right of a nation to change its monetary system, without impairing the obligation of contracts. In the Legal-Tender Cases (12 Wall., 564), Judge Bradley says:

> But the creditor interest will lose some of its gold. Is gold the one thing needful? Is it worse for the creditor to lose a little by depreciation than everything by the bankruptcy of his debtor?

Mr. Justice Strong says (page 529):

> But the obligation of a contract is to pay that which the law shall recognize as money when the payment is to be made.

In Juilliard and Greenman (110 U. S., 449), Mr. Justice Gray said:

> A contract to pay a certain sum in money, without any stipulation as to the kind of money in which it shall be paid, may always be satisfied by payment of that sum in any currency which is lawful money at the place and time at which payment is to be made. * * * As observed by Mr. Justice Strong, in delivering the opinion of the court in the Legal-Tender Cases, "Every contract for the payment of money, simply, is necessarily subject to the constitutional power of the Government over the currency, whatever that power may be, and the obligation of the parties is therefore assumed with reference to that power." (12 Wall., 457.)

There are many more dicta in the several Legal-Tender Cases to the same effect. I will make a part of my remarks an extract from the opinion of the court, given by Mr. Justice Strong, in the Legal-Tender Cases (12 Wall., 457), concurred in by Justices Swayne, Davis, Miller, and Bradley; dissented from by Chief Justice Chase and Justices Clifford and Field.

But the proposition that a nation once having established a monetary system, once having been seduced into the adoption of the single gold standard, could never to the end of time return to bimetallism, or adopt even silver monometallism, would have met with no favor from any one of those famous legists. It should not appear in any argument against bimetallism. Here is the powerful utterance of Mr. Justice Strong:

> We come next to the argument much used, and, indeed, the main reliance of those who assert the unconstitutionality of the legal-tender acts. It is that they are prohibited by the spirit of the Constitution because they indirectly impair the obligations of contracts. The argument, of course, related only to those contracts which were made before February, 1862, when the first act was passed, and it has no bearing upon the question whether the acts are valid when applied to contracts made after their passage. The argument assumes two things; first, that the acts do, in effect, impair the obligation of contracts, and second, that Congress is prohibited from taking any action which may indirectly have that effect. Neither of these assumptions can be accepted. It is true that under the acts a debtor, who became such before they were passed, may discharge his debt with the notes authorized by them, and the creditor is compelled to receive such notes in discharge of his claim. But whether the obligation of the contract is thereby weakened can be determined only after considering what was the contract obligation. It was not a duty to pay gold or silver, or the kind of money recognized by law at the time when the contract was made, nor was it a duty to pay money of equal intrinsic value in the market. (We speak now of contracts to pay money generally, not contracts to pay some specifically defined species of money.) The expectation of the creditor and the anticipation of the debtor may have been that the contract would be discharged by the payment of coined metals, but neither the expectation of one party to the contract respecting its fruits nor the anticipation of the other constitutes its obligation. There is a well-recognized distinction between the expectation of the parties to a contract and the duty imposed by it. Were it not so, the expectation of results would be always equivalent to a binding engagement that they should follow.
> "But the obligation of a contract to pay money is to pay that which the law shall recognize as money when the payment is to be made." If there is anything settled by decision it is this, and we do not understand it to be controverted. No one ever doubted that a debt of $1,000 contracted before 1834 could be paid by 100 eagles coined after that year, though they contained no more gold than 94 eagles such as were coined when the contract was made, and this not because of the intrinsic value of the coin, but because of its legal value. The eagles coined after 1834 were not money until they were authorized by law, and had they been coined before, without a law fixing their legal value, they could no more have paid a debt than uncoined bullion or cotton or wheat. Every contract for the payment of money simply is necessarily subject to the constitutional power of the Government over the currency, whatever that power may be, and the obligation of the parties is therefore assumed with reference to that power. Nor is this singular. A covenant for quiet enjoyment is not broken, nor is its obligation impaired by the Government's taking the land granted in virtue of its right of eminent domain. The expectation of the covenantee may be disappointed. He may not enjoy all he anticipated, but the grant was made and the covenant undertaken in subordination to the paramount right of the Government. We have been asked whether Congress can declare that a contract to deliver a quantity of grain may be satisfied by the tender of a less quantity. Undoubtedly not. But this is a false analogy. There is a wide distinction between a tender of quantities, or of specific articles, and a tender of legal values. Contracts for the delivery of specific articles belong exclusively to the domain of State legislation, while contracts for the payment of money are subject to the authority of Congress, at least so far as relates to the means of payment. They are engagements to pay with lawful money of the United States and Congress is empowered to regulate that money. It can not therefore be maintained that the legal-tender acts impaired the obligation of contracts.

Moreover, it is pertinent at this point to ask those who contend that it will be dishonest to creditors to remonetize silver: What will you do whenever a great mass of gold is discovered somewhere in the world? Will you then call for silver payments and denounce the advocates of gold as dishonest? It will be impossible, as time passes, as the business world grows, and as trade expands, to base all the other money of the world upon the gold money of the world. You can put the $215,000,000 worth of gold produced in 1896 in an eight-foot cube. Four hundred thousand dollars makes a cubic foot; the two hundred and fifteen millions will make 540 cubic feet. An eight-foot cube is 512 feet; so that will about hold the two hundred and fifteen millions of gold, and 16 such cubes will hold the two hundred and fifteen millions of silver produced in 1896; 20 such cubes will hold all the gold coin in the world, and 320 such cubes will hold all the silver coin in the world; and the 20 eight-foot cubes of gold and the 320 eight-foot cubes of silver can all be put inside this Senate Chamber, and still leave room enough for the Senators now present to transact the business of the Senate.

MONEY IS THE CREATION OF LAW.

Even more common is the argument against bimetallism that it is an attempt to create values by law, which, it is said, can not be done. True it is that law can not of itself create values; but, as General Walker well says, it can set in operation economic forces which will create values; and this is precisely what is done when the law defines what shall be the money of the people, the medium of exchanges, the means of paying debts. Such a law increases the value of gold and silver by adopting them as money and creating a new demand for them. This demand for gold and silver can only be made by law. Law alone can make money. It may be a consensus of the people of one nation, making the money of that nation; or it may be a consensus of all the nations, making one money for all the nations; or it may be express statutes of one country or of all the countries. Chief Justice Chase said, in the Legal-Tender Cases (12 Wall., 583), in connection with an expression already cited:

We assume as a fundamental proposition that it is the duty of every government to establish a standard of value.

Indeed, it may be truly said that modern money is the creation of the statutes for the collection of debts and the legal-tender statutes, and that these give the value to gold and silver, and that without these their value would be insignificant. Without these, gold and silver would be merely merchandise, and would be used only like other commodities, in barter, and they would be almost the least valuable commodities in barter. Bimetallists could easily confute those who claim that it is the commercial value of the metals that makes them money, and that the intrinsic value of gold is to-day thirty times greater than silver, if the laws making gold a legal tender and providing for its free coinage could be repealed, as those relating to silver have been repealed. Yet more conclusive would be the experiment if all laws for the collection of debts could be abrogated. This would be the destruction of all commerce among men and a return to semi-savagery; but it would place gold and silver upon an equality where, prior to 1873, they stood by force of the laws, written or unwritten, now known to constitute the bimetallic system. Let us go rather in the other direction, and in due time and with proper safeguards remonetize silver by opening the mints to its free coinage at the ratio of 15½ to 1, and it will soon regain its old value, a value created like that of gold, because it is in demand for use as money, which is an artificial instrument of exchange, created, limited, sustained, and made potent for the good of mankind by law, and by nothing else but law.

CAN BIMETALLISM BE SECURED?

Thus having endeavored to show briefly and imperfectly (1) the great evils that have come to this country and the world from an unnatural reduction in the prices of property; (2) that the evils have arisen, not from natural causes, but from a change in the money of the world, which measures the values of property; and (3) that the remedy is to be found in a return to the principles and practice of bimetallism which have been unwisely abandoned, the next question is, Shall that remedy be applied? The answer to this question will depend somewhat on the course of politics in this country and in other lands. The question is an economic one, it is true; but it is equally true, even if it is to be regretted, that economic questions frequently enter into politics and become the subject of controversy between two great political parties, each striving to obtain the control of a nation; and such is the case to-day with the money question. However much this condition may be lamented, it can not be helped and must be endured.

THE POLITICAL CONTROVERSY IN THE UNITED STATES.

What is the situation of the controversy in the United States? During the recent Presidential conflict Mr. Bryan and his supporters contended that an immediate return to the free coinage of silver by the United States alone ought to be ordered by the American people. This contention met with defeat as the result of the election. It came to be clearly seen by the voters that while a return to bimetallism—the use of the two metals maintained at a par with each other, according to the fixed ratio—would be a wise remedy for existing evils, yet that the adoption of immediate free coinage by the United States alone necessarily would result in silver monometallism—the breaking of the parity between the two metals which this Government was pledged by the acts of Congress of 1890 and 1893 not to allow to take place—and would be a joining by the United States of the silver monometallist nations. So the Bryan proposition was rejected.

The Democrats who seceded from the Bryan convention and at Indianapolis nominated PALMER and Buckner, inspired by President Cleveland and his Administration, were patriotic in their opposition to the silver monometallism of the Bryanites, but they committed the mistake of asserting that the Democratic party "practically established by the legislation of 1834 and 1853 the gold standard of monetary measurement" and of declaring as follows: "To this long-established Democratic policy we adhere, and insist upon the maintenance of the gold standard." They also made a mistake when, in connection with opposition to the free coinage of silver, they denounced protection to American industries and American labor by tariff duties as a scheme "for the personal profit of a few at the expense of the masses," and condemned its advocates as "hostile to the people of the Republic, whose food and shelter, comfort and prosperity, are attacked by higher taxes." When they declared thus: "In fine, we reaffirm the historic Democratic doctrine of a tariff for revenue only," it became no wonder that their respectable and respected candidates, bearing the motto "Gold monometallism and free trade," received but 136,000 out of 14,000,000 votes cast. Nevertheless, the assistance of these worthy, old-fashioned gentlemen in the election of Mr. McKinley was gladly welcomed. It was time for the passing of the Democratic party, and they were entitled to perform an honorable part in the interment.

THE REPUBLICAN BIMETALLISTS SAVED M'KINLEY'S ELECTION.

The Republican bimetallists saved the election of McKinley and Hobart. It would not have been thus carried if the Republican party had adopted a money plank similar to that of the Indianapolis convention. While pronouncing against the immediate free coinage of silver without an international agreement, the Republican party declared, by adding concerning bimetallism six potent words, "which we pledge ourselves to promote," that it would equally oppose a permanent acquiescence in gold monometallism. This party therefore stands recognizing the evil consequences which have come from the reduction of the values of the world's property, proclaiming that the cause is the demonetization of silver, and declaring that the remedy is the reestablishment of bimetallism. The great political question of the future, therefore, is, Shall this pledge be kept? If it is kept in letter and in spirit, and the party is wisely conducted, as it is to be hoped it will be, in other essential particulars, the members of that party may not only contemplate with pride its glorious record of past achievements, but may hope to see it win further victories over the Populist party, which has now practically taken possession of the Democratic party and is masquerading under the name of Democracy.

THE HOPES OF INTERNATIONAL BIMETALLISM.

Concerning the prospects of international bimetallism, it must be admitted there can be no safe prediction, yet there is much to give encouragement to its American advocates. France is thoroughly in favor of remonetization.

FRANCE.

Mr. Edward Thery, in the Economiste of July 16, 1896, says:

On the 17th of March last Mr. Meline, the honorary president of the French Bimetallic League, and now president of the Council of Ministers, deposited at the bureau of the Chamber of Deputies a motion signed by 317 deputies, that is to say, about two-thirds of the habitual voters in the chamber, as follows: "The Chamber of Deputies is of opinion that the establishment of international bimetallism would be a great benefit to the agricultural, industrial, and commercial interests of the country, and urges upon the Government the advisability of doing all in their power to establish and maintain by international agreement a stable monetary par of exchange between gold and silver."

Mr. Thery also says:

At least two-thirds of the French Senate share this opinion. Furthermore, Mr. Loubet, the president of the Senate, is now the honorary president of the Bimetallic League, after having been acting president-founder during fourteen months.

GERMANY.

The position of Germany was stated by Count Alvensleben to the Brussels conference of 1892, as follows:

Germany, being satisfied with its monetary system, has no intention of modifying its basis. The Imperial Government does not, however, fail to recognize that the continual oscillation and the considerable fall of silver are much to be regretted from an economic point of view, and that it would be advantageous to the economic interests of the Empire if these evils could be remedied in a lasting manner. (Walker on Int. Bimet., 229.)

General Walker (International Bimetallism 232) says that—

The German Reichstag has declared by a vote of more than 2 to 1 in favor of negotiation for monetary reform, the Imperial Chancellery by a vote of 10 to 4 rejecting the proviso that, in the course of such negotiations, the single gold standard should not be compromised.

The German action here referred to took place on February 16, 1895, when the Reichstag passed the following motion of the bimetallists, submitted by Count Mirbach:

To request the allied governments to issue, as soon as possible, invitations for a monetary conference for the international settlement of the currency question.

ENGLAND.

The British House of Commons, by unanimous vote, on February 26, 1895, adopted a resolution—

That this House regards with increasing apprehension the constant fluctuations and the growing divergence in the relative value of gold and silver, and heartily concurs in the recent expressions of opinions on the part of the Government of France and the Government and Parliament of Germany as to the serious evils resulting therefrom. It therefore urges upon Her Majesty's Government the desirability of cooperating with other powers in an international conference for the purpose of considering what measures can be taken to remove or mitigate these evils.

Again, on March 17, 1896, the House of Commons, without a division, resolved that—

This House is of opinion that the instability of the relative value of gold and silver since the action of the Latin Union in 1873 has proved injurious to the best interests of this country, and urges upon the Government the advisability of doing all in their power to secure by international agreement a stable monetary par of exchange between gold and silver.

Acquiescence in the House of Commons resolution was accompanied by oral declarations that the ministry would not be likely to consent to the abandonment of the gold standard, but it was also intimated that an agreement could be had, whenever an international conference should be held, that the mints of India should again be opened to the free coinage of silver.

The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW], in the recent debate on the passage of the bill for an international conference, quoted from various utterances of delegates from European countries at the international conference of 1892 who expressed an unwillingness to agree to the full remonetization of silver. The Senator should have investigated further, and he would doubtless have concluded that the later utterances from France, Germany, and England show a change of opinion and a growing feeling in favor of international bimetallism. Changes on such important subjects are frequently made in less time than that which has elapsed during the five years between 1892 and 1897. For illustration, the South Dakota resolutions adopted by the Republican convention in the summer of 1896 reaffirmed the Minneapolis financial plank of 1892 until the St. Louis convention should adopt a later statement. Previous to choosing delegates a resolution was adopted requiring all nominees to go upon the floor and declare for McKinley and sound money; not only to vote but to work to accomplish this end.

The Senator from South Dakota was chosen a delegate, and did go upon the floor and declare that he would work for McKinley and sound money. Within two weeks, however, the Senator gave in his adhesion to Mr. Bryan and a platform declaring (1) in favor of the free and unlimited coinage of silver, without waiting for the aid or consent of any other nation; (2) that the silver dollar should be a full legal tender for all debts, public and private, and (3) that laws should be made preventing private contracts to pay gold. It is unnecessary to add——

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President——

Mr. CHANDLER. In one moment I will yield.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I wish to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. CHANDLER. It is unnecessary to add that the Senator also supported Mr. Bryan.

When the Senator reflects upon his own radical change of opinion and position within one short month, he certainly must admit that possibly there may have been some change of opinion in Europe during the long five years between 1892 and 1897 which will make another international conference not absolutely hopeless. Yet the Senator, by his speech and vote, endeavored to prevent any such favorable consummation, and stamped himself as a hopeless silver monometallist.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I should like to ask the Senator from New Hampshire if what he was reading was a quotation or his own statement with regard to my attitude?

Mr. CHANDLER. In regard to the Senator's attitude? I do not understand him.

Mr. PETTIGREW. You made the statement just now that I went upon the floor of the convention and declared my adhesion to McKinley and gold. Was that your statement, or was it a quotation?

Mr. CHANDLER. It was my statement, derived from the daily newspapers at the time.

Mr. PETTIGREW. If the Senator will permit me, I brand that statement as wholly and unqualifiedly false in every particular. I will say further that I made the same statement in answer to those newspaper charges and placed it in the RECORD several months ago, previous to the St. Louis convention. Therefore, it hardly seems that the Senator from New Hampshire has any excuse for putting it in his speech to-day.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, the Senator says the statement is wholly false. I therefore understand him to say that he did not attend the South Dakota convention. Am I correct in that?

Mr. PETTIGREW. Is that the gist of it—the fact that I attended the convention?

Mr. CHANDLER. I said the Senator attended the convention and went upon the floor and declared that he would obey the instructions of the convention. The Senator says my statement is "wholly and unqualifiedly false." I ask whether he attended the convention?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I say that your statement on the whole, and the purpose you intended to convey——

Mr. CHANDLER. The purpose!

Mr. PETTIGREW. Is entirely and absolutely false.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask the Senator whether he was in the convention or not?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I was at the convention.

Mr. CHANDLER. Did the Senator go upon the floor and accept an election as a delegate, or not?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I was elected a delegate in that convention, but I stated on the floor and I stated in the Senate that I never was asked to support what was called sound money, and if you had taken any pains to ascertain the truth, you could have ascertained it.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator will kindly address his remarks to the Chair.

Mr. PETTIGREW. It would be much more agreeable than to address them to you.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota is speaking by the indulgence of the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I will take nothing by his indulgence.

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not know what the Senator means by this action of his. I stated what the newspapers had said—that he was chosen as a delegate, went upon the floor, accepted the nomination. Now the Senator says the statement I made is wholly and unqualifiedly false. He admits that he was upon the floor of the convention, that he accepted the commission then and there given him by the Republicans of South Dakota, and he did go to the McKinley convention. Where have I made any misstatement as to the Senator? The Senator does not pretend that he then and there dissented from the declaration of the South Dakota convention in favor of sound money. He does not say that he made any dissent there.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. CHANDLER. If the Senator will not get angry and sit down in a minute and say he will not say anything by my indulgence, certainly I will yield to him.

Mr. PETTIGREW. The South Dakota convention did not declare for sound money. If they had, they would not have declared for gold. They simply declared that they would refer the question of bimetallism to the St. Louis convention. They passed no resolution, made no declaration in favor of what is called, and wrongfully called, sound money.

Mr. CHANDLER. Did they not declare in favor of the Minneapolis plank on money.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Yes; they declared practically in favor of the Minneapolis plank—the plank of four years ago—and it was a plank, in my opinion, and in the opinion of those who agree with me, in favor of the free and unlimited coinage of silver as the only means of securing and maintaining the parity between the two metals.

Mr. CHANDLER. There is no quarrel between the Senator from South Dakota and myself. If the Senator had heard what I have said, he would have understood that I criticised quotations he made from declarations made in Europe at the bimetallist conference of 1892 as reasons why there should not be another international conference. I did not undertake to criticise the Senator. I ask the Senator's indulgence—I am willing to ask his indulgence when it is needed—for the supposition that these eminent men in five years might possibly have changed their opinions when he changed his opinions in one short month.

Mr. PETTIGREW. With the indulgence of the Senator from New Hampshire, I will say further that I declared in the convention of my State, when elected as a delegate to the St. Louis convention, that I would not support a platform in favor of the single gold standard, and that unless they chose to elect me as a delegate on that declaration I did not desire to go. Mr. President, I do not charge the Senator from New Hampshire with any intention to misrepresent me; he has been misinformed.

I will also state, Mr. President, with the indulgence of the Senator from New Hampshire, that the declarations of all the European advocates of the single gold standard are the same now as they were in 1892. They have not changed their position one particle. Further than that, they all declare, as does Bertrand Currie, who is at the head of the gold-defense association of Great Britain, that there would be a panic which would wreck the industries of the gold-using countries of the world if bimetallism were accomplished; and they picture ruin and disaster as great as that pictured by the advocates in this country of the single gold standard and the opponents of the free and unlimited coinage of silver by this country alone in case we try to coin gold and silver both. Why, then, should we delay the free coinage of silver if we are to have a panic with or without an international agreement?

I do not think there is a single authority in Great Britain who has not taken the position that a bill for international bimetallism could not be passed in Parliament; could not pass the House of Commons; could not reach a stage where it would look as though it would pass, without a panic which would ruin and destroy and bankrupt the financial and manufacturing institutions of Great Britain. I say they make a picture even more doleful and distressing than that painted by the opponents of the free coinage of silver if we should undertake to do it without the assistance of other countries.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator, I think, is mistaken. I have seen no such declarations from English gold monometallists as those which the Senator has suggested. I think that when the Senator comes to read what I have already said and what I shall hereafter say, he will conclude that international bimetallism is not only possible but probable, and will regret the vote he gave the other day against the calling of another international conference.

Mr. President, this is a living subject all over the world. I hold in my hand a letter written to the Manchester Guardian of January 14, showing the effect of the closing of the India mints upon the people of India. It is signed by J. P. Haseltine, and is dated London, January 12, 1897:

SIR: We are rightly engaged in raising a fund for the relief of our fellow-subjects in India now suffering from famine and pestilence. We shall congratulate ourselves if we raise £500,000, or say, roughly, 8,000,000 rupees. How few realize that one letter from Her Majesty's Government to the French premier and one to Mr. McKinley, the President-elect of the United States, stating that Her Majesty's Government were ready to join France and America in restoring the ancient legal-tender ratio of weight between gold and silver would, by a stroke of the pen, save the Indian taxpayers at least 85,000,000 of rupees per annum. This calculation can be roughly examined with great ease by anyone. To meet sterling obligations the Indian taxpayer has now to buy gold bills on London to the amount of £17,000,000 a year. At 15 rupees to the pound, this costs 255,000,000 of rupees. If we take the old rate at 10 rupees to the pound, the cost will be 170,000,000 of rupees, or a saving of 85,000,000 of rupees per annum, without costing Great Britain or India or anyone else one penny.

Yours, etc.,

J. P. HASELTINE.

LONDON, January 12, 1897.

There is in the New York Tribune of Monday, February 8, 1897, a letter of the very acute and able correspondent, Mr. Ford, in which he states the terrible condition of the Indian peasantry on account of the reduction in the value of their silver ornaments. As everyone knows, they have been in the habit of accumulating their savings in silver—silver dollars and silver ornaments. India has been a great market for silver. The estimate of the amount of silver in the possession of the Indian peasantry in the form of ornaments, Mr. Ford says, is thirteen hundred and twelve million ounces. There is no savings-bank system, and the natives have been accustomed to hoard silver in ornaments, worn by men, women, and children. He goes on to give an estimate of the shrinkage in the savings of the peasantry by the demonetization of silver, which he places at $470,000,000.

Mr. President, there is terrible misery in India now because when the peasants, confronted with short grain crops and famine and plague, come forward with their hoarded stores to dispose of them they find that they are reduced one-half in value.

[From the New York Daily Tribune, February 8, 1897.]

LONDON, January 27.

A significant letter has appeared in the Times from an expert in Indian finance, Sir Lepel Griffin. It directs public attention to a momentous fact which is seldom discussed by English journals, namely, that the sufferings of the plague-smitten, famine-stricken peninsula are terribly intensified by the depreciation of silver. Sir Lepel Griffin disclaims any intention of criticising current methods of Indian finance, but lays stress upon the monetary conditions in order to impart a fresh impulse to the charitable work which is now in progress throughout the United Kingdom. The results which have followed the depreciation of silver have nowhere else been equally calamitous. For generations the swarming millions of India have been in the habit of investing their savings in silver ornaments. Now, in their hour of direst need, they are finding out that there has been a tremendous shrinkage in the value of their savings and that they can not sell their ornaments without material loss.

Sir Lepel Griffin states, on the authority of Mr. Lesley Probyn, that the amount of silver in the possession of the Indian peasantry in the form of ornaments is 1,312,500,000 ounces. There is no savings-bank system. The natives have been accustomed to hoard silver in ornaments worn by men, women, and children. In former years government rupees were melted down and reworked into ornaments. In time of distress from famine or plague these ornaments were readily sold to the village bankers and rupees given in exchange at full weight. That was when the mints were open and there was a fixed relation between the metal and the coin. Sir Lepel Griffin estimates that the stock of ornaments, which was once worth £350,000,000, now has a value of £256,000,000. This implies a shrinkage of $470,000,000 in the savings of the peasantry. When the ornaments are sold, the natives receive from 35 to 40 per cent less, weight for weight, than formerly. The rupee has an artificial value, owing to the closure of the mints, and the money lender charges from 10 to 15 per cent to cover his risk. The conversion of ornaments into cash, which has been the main resource of the native population in time of famine, is thus attended with ruinous losses. These losses not only aggravate the sufferings of the people, but tend to excite distrust of the Government, which is held responsible for the shrinkage in value of these native savings—the only available reserve of the peasantry.

The gravity of the economic and political situation in India can hardly be overestimated. Here is a great empire with over 300,000,000 subjects whose savings have depreciated to the extent of $470,000,000 through the fall of silver; and millions of them are suddenly confronted with their losses when they attempt to sell their ornaments. It is not strange that veteran Indian officials are haunted with apprehension of the outbreak of another mutiny.

I have referred to the weighty statements of this expert in Indian finance not for the purpose of discussing the burning question of the expediency of reopening the mints as a relief measure, but in order to emphasize the fact that England has a vast empire which has been impoverished by the decline of silver. Not only is silver the only currency circulating in that populous realm, but also the meager savings of the peasantry are invested in silver ornaments, which can not be converted into rupees without enormous loss. Lancashire, with its diminishing cotton trade with India, has been warned year after year that there has been a shrinkage in the purchasing resources of its best market, and the silver question has been recognized by cotton manufacturers as one of supreme importance in relation to British trade; but it was not until the present crisis arose, with the awful visitations of famine and pestilence, that the magnitude of the imperial issues involved in the solvency of India was fully appreciated.

While England has adhered persistently to the single gold standard and shows no signs of abandoning it, the fact that the extreme poverty of the natives of India, who comprise one-fifth of the inhabitants of the globe, has been increased and intensified by the depreciation of silver possesses momentous significance. Theoretically, England has its well-ordered system of finance which, like the laws of the Medes and Persians, can never be changed; but, practically, it has an impoverished Indian empire and a larger commerce with silver countries than any other nation possesses, and the question of the solvency and prosperity of the silver-trading world is one of paramount importance.

This fact is indisputable, even if the House of Commons be emptied whenever an Indian debate comes on. Last night only about forty members listened to the first discussion of Indian affairs which has occurred during the present session. It opened with a keen inquiry from Mr. Maclean respecting the relief which might be afforded by government purchase of silver ornaments at a fixed price per ounce, and drew from the secretary for India, Lord George Hamilton, an expression of incredulity respecting the practicability of the scheme. Not long afterwards, Sir William Wedderburn offered an amendment to the address in favor of a full inquiry respecting the poverty and helplessness of Her Majesty's Indian subjects, and supported it with a well-informed, carefully prepared speech.

For an hour or two the debate dragged along, and finally it was brought to a close by an exchange of compliments between Lord George Hamilton and Sir Henry Fowler on the superior administrative methods of British India, and by the withdrawal of the amendment. The subject under discussion was the fate of 300,000,000 of the Queen's subjects, who are exposed to the appalling horrors of plague, starvation, poverty, and wretchedness; and not more than forty members took sufficient interest in it to listen to the languid debate.

While expert talent and sobriety of judgment are lacking in the Commons for adequate discussion of the Indian question, the financiers of the city and the merchants and manufacturers of the United Kingdom understand the general economic results of the insolvency and degraded impoverishment of the silver empire. They know that the prosperity of the Indian peasantry is dependent upon a satisfactory settlement of the silver question, and that British commerce has an enormous interest in the removal of existing causes of monetary disturbance and industrial stagnation. The British commercial empire has two lungs. One is the agricultural industry of the colonies and dependencies. The other is the manufacturing industry of the mother country. Both lungs must be in full operation if the industrial body is to be maintained in perfect health. British commerce must finally languish, if, through continued depreciation of silver and consequent monetary disturbance and economic disorder, trade with silver-using countries steadily declines.

SENATOR WOLCOTT'S SILVER QUEST.

In this morning's journals I notice a Washington dispatch stating that Senator WOLCOTT has not met with a hearty reception in London, but has been referred by British statesmen to their brethren on the Continent. I am able to contradict without reserve the inference that the Senator has been received with coolness and indifference by public men and financiers in London. His coming was heralded by dispatches in the daily journals from New York correspondents, stating that he had undertaken a mission on behalf of the President-elect. This was unfortunate, because it created an erroneous impression, which had to be removed as soon as he arrived. He was compelled to explain that his task was self-imposed and unofficial, and that it was simply a personal quest for information on the monetary situation. The frankness with which he released Mr. McKinley from responsibility for his tour of investigation, and the eagerness and thoroughness with which he entered upon his study of a complex subject, commended him at once to the good graces and hospitality of the leaders of political, financial, and social London.

Senator WOLCOTT has been literally overwhelmed with social attentions here. He has met Mr. Arthur Balfour several times; he has had a prolonged interview with the chancellor of the exchequer; he has seen Lord George Hamilton, Mr. Chamberlain, and other members of the Government, and he has been in daily communication with the most experienced financiers in the city. Nothing could be further from the truth than the Washington allegation that he has been coolly and cynically received in London.

Senator WOLCOTT, having had an unwelcome and unsolicited advertisement of his journey before he left New York, has been scrupulous in avoiding publicity here. His object was to obtain a free exchange of views with eminent public men, economists, and financiers on the silver question, and the possible conditions under which an international conference may be held. This purpose would not have been promoted by newspaper interviews. He has denied himself to reporters, and has not taken the public into his confidence. This policy, while it has exposed him to the penalty of escaping observation in the daily press, has facilitated his quest for information. The most important Government officials and economic experts have talked with him with the utmost freedom. He has met everyone whom he wished to see. The list of distinguished people with whom he has been conferring on confidential terms would be a long and impressive one. Mr. Bryan and other monometallist silver leaders, if they were in London, would supply more local copy for the press, but they would not promote the interests of international bimetallism. Senator WOLCOTT is a man of distinction, who has inspired confidence and commanded respect by the dignity of his conduct and by the reasonableness of his argument. He has adapted himself to English customs and methods of procedure.

CHANCES OF INTERNATIONAL ACTION.

While Senator WOLCOTT has left London to-day for Paris, his departure is not in consequence of any change of plans nor of any lack of cordiality in his reception here. He made no secret when he arrived in London of the fact that he had important work to do in Paris, and he is now carrying out a prearranged plan. It is not likely that he will go to Berlin or to any other European capital; nor is it probable that his stay in Paris will be longer than a week, nor that his return to America will be deferred many days after his arrival in London. One thing, however, may confidently be assumed, and that is that the Senator will return to Washington with a unique knowledge of the existing status of English and French opinion on the silver question. In that sense his self-imposed mission has been crowned already with success. He will be able to speak with authority on the prospects of international action respecting silver.

If nothing else has been gained through the Senator's conferences in London, a change of temper in the discussion of the monetary problem has been disclosed. When the Brussels conference was held, there was no attempt to conceal England's uncompromising hostility to a double standard and to international action on behalf of silver. I do not believe that there is even a remote probability that England will abandon the single gold standard; but it is certainly true that the tone of inflexible opposition to international action is not as bitter as it was. If an international conference were called, it is probable that the Indian mints would be reopened at once.

That might be the only concession which England would make, but it would be an important one. The Indian situation is a critical one, and under existing conditions the reopening of the mints would prove a relief measure in releasing the peasantry from bondage to the village money lenders and in enabling them to make better terms in disposing of their ornaments—their only reserve and last resource. The ministers of the day might be glad of a pretext for reopening the mints, and their example would not be without effect upon continental nations, like Germany, Russia, and Austria-Hungary, which, in reorganizing their currency systems, have been approaching gold monometallism as the safest basis of finance. No shrewd observer will be beguiled into the belief that the prospect for international action is either hopeful or promising; but India in this calamitous year is an object lesson from which much is to be learned. England has a paramount interest in the restoration of the solvency and prosperity of silver countries.

I. N. F.

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator from New Hampshire allow me?

Mr. CHANDLER. Certainly.

Mr. STEWART. I understand what is stated in the article is a fact, and it has resulted from the suspension of silver coinage in 1893.

Mr. CHANDLER. I understand so. Up to the suspension of the coinage of the rupee in 1893 the demonetization of silver had but little effect in India, because, as I have already shown, economic changes are very slow in taking effect, particularly among the oriental people. But after 1893 the fall of silver in India began to take place; the consequences to that country now are exceedingly lamentable; and England is beginning, with poverty, pestilence, and starvation in India, to take account whether it is not her duty to do something toward the remonetization of silver. It stands as an absolutely unequivocal promise, so far as it can be made, except by statute, that in the aid of the remonetization of silver England will open the India mints.

Mr. President, the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW] will, I think, change his mind, and the Senator from Wisconsin also will change his mind, as to the probabilities of the success of international bimetallism if they will read the February (1897) number of the National Review, published in London and New York—edited by Mr. L. J. Maxse, an extremely intelligent English gentleman and writer, who was recently in this country—where there are three articles on bimetallism in Europe: On France, by Mr. Edmond D'Artois, who was the assistant general secretary of the French Bimetallic League; on Germany, by Dr. Otto Arendt, who is a member of the Prussian diet and honorary secretary of the German Bimetallic League, and by Lord Aldenham, president of the British Bimetallic League. I ask not that these three short articles may be printed in the RECORD, but that, in order that I may send out some of them with my speech, they may be printed as a document for the use of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, that order will be made. The Chair hears none.

Mr. CHANDLER. I will read what Lord Aldenham says, if the Senator from South Dakota will listen to me:

Nevertheless—

He says—

I would point out that opinions expressed by distinguished foreigners in 1892 are not a proof that the same opinions are held by other people of the same nations in 1897.

Dr. Arendt, speaking of an international conference, says:

Should such a conference take place, the German Parliament can therefore be relied upon as a strong supporter.

I do respectfully and earnestly request that Senators, whether or not they read my remarks, will take pains to read these three cogent and extremely interesting articles from the National Review.

THE UNITED STATES.

The position of the United States stands recorded in the declaration of the act of November 1, 1893, as follows:

And it is hereby declared to be the policy of the United States to continue the use of both gold and silver as standard money, and to coin both gold and silver into money of equal intrinsic and exchangeable value, such equality to be secured through international agreement, or by such safeguards of legislation as will insure the maintenance of the parity in value of the coins of the two metals, and the equal power of every dollar at all times in the markets, and in the payment of debts. And it is hereby further declared that the efforts of the Government should be steadily directed to the establishment of such a safe system of bimetallism as will maintain at all times the equal power of every dollar coined or issued by the United States in the markets and in the payment of debts.

A minor but equally significant American declaration was the telegram sent to the lord mayor of London and read at the international bimetallic conference at the Mansion House in London May 2, 1894, as follows:

We desire to express our cordial sympathy with the movement to promote the restoration of silver by international agreement, in aid of which we understand a meeting is to be held to-morrow under your lordship's presidency. We believe that the free coinage of both gold and silver by international agreement at a fixed ratio would secure to mankind the blessings of a sufficient volume of metallic money, and, what is hardly less important, would secure to the world of trade immunity from violent exchange fluctuations. JOHN SHERMAN, WILLIAM B. ALLISON, D. W. VOORHEES, H. C. LODGE, G. F. HOAR, N. W. ALDRICH, D. B. HILL, E. MURPHY, C. S. BRICE, O. H. PLATT, A. P. GORMAN, W. P. FRYE, C. K. DAVIS, S. M. CULLOM, J. M. Cary. (Report of the proceedings of the conference, page 18.)

These utterances may be fittingly supplemented by two of the many declarations in favor of bimetallism made by Mr. McKinley, beginning with that in his speech in the House of Representatives on June 25, 1890, when, although he resisted the free coinage of silver independently of international action, he said:

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that we should preserve these two metals side by side. * * * I want both metals side by side, equal in purchasing power and in legal tender quality, equal in power to perform the functions of money with which to do the business and move the commerce of the United States. * * * Whatever money we have, it must be based upon both gold and silver.

And ending with that of his letter of acceptance of August 26, 1896:

The Republican party has declared in favor of an international agreement, and if elected President it will be my duty to employ all proper means to promote it.

Surely it is impossible to doubt that upon this record the movement for international bimetallism has a large chance of success. Much will of course depend upon the course of prices and business during the months that are before us, while the subject is undergoing further discussion. If changes for the better take place, if the downward tendency of prices is arrested and an upward movement begins, if the widespread failures of debtors shall cease, if prosperity shall come to this country and the other countries of the world while the existing gold standard prevails, the efforts of bimetallists may be in vain. If, on the other hand, the present prices of property, the present conditions of trade, the present woeful plight of the debtors of the world remain as now, or grow worse, there will be an irresistible movement against the existing gold standard which it will not be wise for the public men of any country to attempt to arrest.

THE UTTERANCES OF SENATORS AND SECRETARIES SHERMAN AND CARLISLE.

Mr. President, whatever may be the near or the final result, the cause in which the bimetallists of this country are about to engage will be a noble one. No other words can depict its importance so well as those which have been used by two statesmen of the present day, each of whom has been Senator of the United States and Secretary of the Treasury. Fortunate has been the Senate in retaining for so many years in its membership the Senator from Ohio. His long life has been one of patriotic devotion to the interests of his country, and he now stands here with the highest prestige of any member of the Chamber, in full vigor of body and mind, and it is to be hoped that he may long continue in his country's service. His fame is our fame and the nation's fame, and when he goes forward to his new sphere as Secretary of State we shall all recognize in him the appropriate leader of the new movement to save the country and the world from the evils of gold monometallism, so powerfully described by him in his speech in the Senate of April 10, 1876.

Speaking of the German demonetization of silver, he said (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, volume 4, Part III, page 2341):

It at once begot a struggle for the possession of gold between all the great nations of the world, because everybody could see that if you demonetize $3,200,000,000 of silver coin and make $3,500,000,000 of gold coin the sole standard of the transactions of the world * * * it would enormously add to the value of gold. * * * Therefore what we have observed recently is not so much a fall of silver as it is a rise of gold, the inevitable effect of a fear of demonetizing the whole mass of this silver.

* * * * * * *

To adopt the gold standard alone and demonetize silver would be to deprive the poor people of the world of the money which alone measures the value of their production and their labor. * * * Gold alone is not suitable for a currency, because it will not measure the daily wants of the great mass of mankind. (Page 2341.)

The utter ruin that would come to mankind, especially to the poorer nations, by the entire demonetization of silver can not be estimated by us. Take one-half of the solid money of the world out of existence, take the sole standard of more than two-thirds of the human race, reduce it to a base metal, and the effect upon the commerce of the world would be incalculable. It can not be done; it will not be done. There is no danger of it. These two metals, gold and silver, have traveled side by side from the beginning of time; the records of human history do not go back beyond it. They have varied, sometimes one and sometimes the other higher, but they have gone on, gold the money of the rich, silver the money of the poor, the one to measure acquired wealth, the other to measure the daily necessities of life; and, sir, no act of Parliament, although it may disturb for a moment the relation of these two metals to each other, nothing but an act of God, can destroy the use of both these metals among the nations of mankind. (Page 2246.)

Mr. President, three Sundays ago, while these impassioned words of the Senator were running in my mind, I listened to the discourse of a young and eloquent preacher in Washington, who told the story of Micah, the man of Mount Ephraim, and of the Levite priest, who had come to his house while wandering about the earth seeking a sojourning place:

And Micah said unto him, Dwell with me, and be unto me a father and a priest, and I will give thee ten shekels of silver by the year, and a suit of apparel, and thy victuals. So the Levite went in. (Judges xvii, 10.)

And the Levite was content to dwell with Micah.

Then said Micah, Now know I that the Lord will do me good, seeing I have a Levite to my priest. (Judges xvii, 13.)

When I heard this narrative, I imagined that the fervid Senator knew the story of Micah when he made his earnest assertion that silver was "the money of the poor" and predicted that nothing but "an act of God" could destroy its use as money. A silver shekel was equal to the sum of about 70 cents. So Micah hired his priest for $7 per year in money, for a suit of apparel (which in the Hebrew original meant a double suit—one for summer and one for winter), for his food, and for lodging also in his humble house hard by the burial place of Joshua, the son of Nun, on the wooded slopes of Mount Ephraim, which mountain was a part of the lot of the tribe of the children of Judah. Micah, the silverite, lived there with his mother and his sons and his priest in honest poverty, using the silver money which God had provided for him. But his happy condition did not long last. The children of Dan had spied out the land and came with 600 men, appointed with weapons of war, and plundered the house of Micah, and then went away and smote the people of Laish with the edge of the sword and built a city in the land of Laish and dwelt therein, and, alas, the Levite priest, at the bidding of the robbers, laid his hand on his mouth and held his peace, abandoned his benefactor, Micah, and fled to the new city and became a priest of his new employers, the Danites.

Thousands of years have rolled around since Samuel, the prophet, wrote this story of Micah, but human nature remains the same.

Lowly cottagers are benevolent; mendicants are ungrateful; noble men and righteous causes are betrayed by those who, when their fidelity and courage are brought to the test, lay their hands on their mouths and hold their peace; but silver is still the money of the poor, which God gave and nothing but an act of God can destroy, and the faithful Senator from Ohio, more earnestly than ever before, will in his new position of power strive to restore and maintain that bimetallism which begun in the days of the prophets and the priests, the kings and the judges of the tribes of Israel and Judah.

The other Senator and Secretary is a distinguished son of Kentucky, to whom it will certainly ever be a pleasure for me to give the meed of praise which belongs to an honorable and patriotic public servant. There are few limits to my gratitude to him, because in the recent election he showed the full courage of his convictions, broke loose from the party ties of a lifetime, and contributed all in his power to give to Mr. McKinley the electoral vote of the State of Kentucky. No language can be constructed which will more forcibly declare the necessity of the rejection of the single gold standard and the restoration of the bimetallic standard in the monetary system of mankind than his utterances on the 21st of February, 1878. This is what he said:

> According to my view of the subject, the conspiracy which seems to have been formed here and in Europe to destroy by legislation and otherwise from three-sevenths to one half the metallic money of the world is the most gigantic crime of this or any other age. The consummation of such a scheme would ultimately entail more misery upon the human race than all the wars, pestilence, and famine that ever occurred in the history of the world. The absolute and instantaneous destruction of half the movable property of the world, including horses, ships, railroads, and all other appliances for carrying on commerce, while it would be felt more sensibly at the moment, would not produce anything like the prolonged distress and disorganization of society that must inevitably result from the permanent annihilation of one-half of the metallic money of the world.

THE DUTIES AND DANGERS OF THE REPUBLICAN PARTY.

Surely, in view of these tremendous assertions of two of the greatest and wisest statesmen now living in America, there ought to be universal concurrence in the determination that something shall be done to arrest the evils which they have so luridly depicted. There was much deprecation in the recent political canvass against appeals for the votes of classes as against appeals for the votes of the whole people without regard to classes. In view of the utterances of Senator SHERMAN, such criticism is not well founded. There can not be wise legislation for the whole people that does not take account of classes, at least to the extent of making certain that the legislation does not affect one class more unfavorably than the other; that it does not benefit one class more than it benefits another. The highest authority that ever spoke said: "The poor ye have always with you." Certainly it can not be unwise for the rulers of the people or the members of a national legislature to specially endeavor to protect the poorer classes of society and to lift from them some of the burdens which press them downward into poverty. The hour has struck in this country when there must be a sincere and earnest movement to arrest the injustice that is being done to the masses of the people by the great aggregations of capital, a few great monopolies and many unlawful trusts. In an article written by me on the 14th day of July last, and published in the North American Review of August last, after stating the issues and predicting the result of the campaign, I added:

> The time of trial to the Republican party will come after its approaching victory. It will then be in order to determine whether it is the slave of the rich capitalists, of the promoters of trusts and monopolies, and of the bloated bondholders, as the Bryan Democrats and the Populists will contend.

That time has arrived. The writer of a recent essay on "The present distribution of wealth in the United States," Prof. Charles B. Spahr, sums up his conclusions as follows: That there is constantly going forward in this country a concentration of wealth in the cities to the impoverishment of the country districts, and that in the cities there are forces constantly working toward a yet narrower concentration of wealth—as much more concentrated as it is greater than the wealth in the country. He asserts that, taking the whole country, the great body of the small property holders, embracing seven-eighths of the property-holding families, hold of the national wealth only one-eighth, while the wealthy classes hold five-eighths; that one family out of every hundred holds as much wealth as the other ninety-nine; that the average wealth of the families in the country districts is $3,250, while in the cities it is $9,000; that the wealth of the East, including foreign holdings, with but 30 per cent of the population of the country, amounts to thirty-one thousand five hundred millions of dollars, while the wealth of the West and the South, with 70 per cent of the population, is thirty-three thousand five hundred millions.

He says, in connection with incomes, that two-fifths of the product of industry goes to capital; that one-tenth of the families have as much income as the nine-tenths; that 1 per cent of the families, the richest, at the top, have as much income as 50 per cent, the poorest, at the bottom. In other words, that one-eighth of the families have more than one-half of the whole income of the people.

Referring to taxation, he claims that of the national taxes, including customs, the wealthy classes pay one-tenth, the well-to-do citizens pay one-fourth, and the relatively poorer classes pay two-thirds; while, taking local and national taxes together, the wealthier classes pay less than 1 per cent per year on their property, the masses of the people pay 4 per cent on their property.

If these conclusions are to be relied upon—and they are carefully set forth and gravely defended—while it may not be patriotic to appeal for the votes of the poor against the rich, yet it certainly will be wise for the governing classes of this country to devote themselves, in hard and distressing times, to the alleviation of the burdens of the poorer classes; to preserve as money of the world—in the language of the Senator from Ohio—silver, which is the money of the poor, as well as gold, which is the money of the rich; to lessen as much as possible the taxes of the poor, and to so manage the affairs of the Government that neither in 1898 nor in 1900 shall the country be confronted, in the political contests in which we are next to engage, with any unjust national laws, framed and maintained either in the interest of the money lenders or of the managers of illegal trusts and monopolies of any sort.

The fortunate renaissance of the Republican party ought to give as the first fruits of reascendency not the free coinage of silver by the United States alone, which would be silver monometallism, but—

I.

The restoration of bimetallism, in moderate course, and with due regard to all the honorable pledges of the nation.

II.

The Republican party should also, without interfering with the right of private individuals to accumulate property, so control the exercise of corporation powers as to forbid the payment of excessive salaries or dividends or of interest on fictitious capitalization.

III.

It should, without prohibiting the consolidation of business enterprises into single corporations, prevent the combination of separate companies by trust agreements in restraint of trade and in destruction of competition, which is the life of trade.

IV.

It should, without hindering the use of modern methods of freight and passenger transit, effectually regulate and govern transportation companies, so as to prevent free transportation and all other discriminations for favored classes, and so as to fix, by governmental authority, in the first instance and before they can be lawfully collected, reasonable rates of fares and freights, in order that complaining parties may not be forced to actually pay exorbitant rates and vainly look for a remedy in futile lawsuits to recover them back.

V.

It should readjust the schemes of national and local taxation, so that the burdens shall not weigh unjustly upon the classes in the community least able to bear them, and so that American industries may be developed, while American wages are maintained at the highest possible standard.

VI.

Above all, it should struggle to restore and establish honesty and purity in making political nominations and conducting political elections, thrusting corruption away "from the seats of the mighty;" thus making this country—

> The land of justice, where the poor
> Shall hold their rights as safe
> As those the rich secure.
> Where right, not might, shall rule; all men
> Be equal; while o'er all,
> God's blessing shall endure.

When, forty years ago, the Republican party was formed, it had the noblest possible mission—to resist the extension of American chattel slavery. Its efforts resulted in a war between the North and the South, the greatest conflict in the world in modern times. The Union was saved, a race liberated, and the nation of freemen carried by the Republican party to the highest degree of prosperity ever attained by any country in any age. After a brief exclusion from national power by a combination of Eastern plutocrats, Southern sectionalists, and Western malcontents, typified at one extreme by President Cleveland and at the other by Governor Altgeld, the reins of Government have again been placed in Republican hands. New occasions teach new duties. In repetition and conclusion, I declare my belief that President McKinley and the other leaders of the party, in its present advent to power, may, by wise designs and virtuous deeds, indefinitely prolong its ascendency in the country. This can surely be done by making it the true party of the people, to the final confusion and discomfiture of those pretenders, the blind leaders of the blind, who were so summarily, on the 3d of November last, all thrown into the ditch together. If, on the contrary, this is not done, and the Republican party shall content itself with seizing and enjoying the spoils of office, surrendering unreservedly to the money power which so effectively contributed to its recent victory, acquiescing permanently in the existing gold standard, and treating bimetallism, according to the advice of the Portland Oregonian, as "a juggling humbug," and the promise to promote it, according to the advice of the New York Sun, as a pledge never intended to be fulfilled, Republicans will speedily find the tide of political battle once more turned against them, and they will soon exchange places with their now sore, bleeding, and prostrate foes.

To the coming triumphant President, hopeful and overconfident, rejoicing as a strong man to run a race, and to his chosen advisers, soon to challenge all the adverse currents of the future, I can not help warningly say concerning the pending world-wide controversy over the burning question of money: Unsettled questions pay no heed to the repose of nations. "Be wise to-day; 'tis madness to defer."

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator from New Hampshire allow me to ask him one question? I have been much entertained and interested in his very able speech as showing the absolute necessity of bimetallism. I wish to ask him, in case the Republican party fail to secure international bimetallism, what is then to be done? If bimetallism can not be obtained through international agreement, is there any remedy which he would advise?

Mr. CHANDLER. I shall never help fasten the single gold standard upon mankind. I should suppose that inference was pretty easily drawn from what I have said. I have so much confidence that we are to have international bimetallism that I do not have to take up any further question. I only hope that my silver monometallist friends are not so anxious to have their own way about it that they are not willing to have the free coinage of silver adopted in concurrence with the other nations. I sometimes fear that they are so earnest and zealous and persistent that they do not want international bimetallism, but prefer to have this country join the silver nations. I do not wish this country to be compelled to join the silver nations, and I am quite sure we are going to have international bimetallism.

Mr. STEWART. That is not an answer to the question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BACON in the chair). The Chair will state that the unanimous consent which was given extended only to the speech of the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. STEWART. I ask unanimous consent to ask a question. I will quit then.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senator from Nevada will proceed.

Mr. STEWART. The Senator's reply does not answer the question. My question is, Whether, in case international bimetallism can not be obtained, the Senator from New Hampshire is prepared to say what he would do—what he would advise?

Mr. CHANDLER. I think it is the highest folly in the world to set about any enterprise by making threats——

Mr. STEWART. There is no threat about it.

Mr. CHANDLER. Or by undertaking to define what your future position would be. I am a convinced bimetallist; I am an earnest bimetallist; I believe we are going to accomplish bimetallism, and I am not going to say what I shall do if we do not accomplish it in one way or the other. We will attend to that question when we get to it.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills:

A bill (S. 1816) granting a pension to Eliza Craig Heckman, widow of Brig. Gen. Charles A. Heckman;

A bill (S. 1975) granting a pension to Mrs. Julia Jones Duncan, widow of Bvt. Maj. Gen. Samuel A. Duncan;

A bill (S. 2645) granting a pension to Jane H. Vandever; and

A bill (S. 2832) for the relief of Daniel T. Tollett.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10040) granting an increase of pension to George W. Ferree, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. ANDREWS, Mr. CROWTHER, and Mr. BAKER of Kansas managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 6845) granting an increase of pension to Maj. John H. Gearkee; and

A bill (H. R. 9785) granting a pension to Rebecca A. Kirkpatrick.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions:

A bill (S. 3603) to extend the time for the completion of the St. Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba Railway Company through the White Earth, Leech Lake, Chippewa, and Fond du Lac Indian reservations, in the State of Minnesota;

A bill (H. R. 5764) granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth D. Marthon;

A joint resolution (S. R. 121) to amend an act granting to the Duluth and Winnipeg Railroad Company a right of way through the Chippewa and White Earth Indian reservations, in the State of Minnesota; and

A joint resolution (S. R. 204) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to transport contributions for the relief of the suffering poor of India.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. VILAS. Is not the bill to be taken up with the idea that the bankruptcy bill shall not be displaced? If the motion is to be made with the view of displacing the bankruptcy bill, I desire to call for the yeas and nays upon it.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Not at all. I will amend my motion by providing that the appropriation bill shall not displace the bankruptcy bill.

Mr. VILAS. I suggest, then, that instead of being in the form of a motion, there be unanimous consent asked that the bankruptcy bill be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I have no objection to placing it in that form.

Mr. VILAS. And that the appropriation bill be taken up only upon such an arrangement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from South Dakota?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 10002) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I ask that the formal reading be dispensed with and that the amendments of the committee be disposed of as they are reached.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that course will be taken.

Mr. VEST. I prefer myself that the bill shall be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being interposed, the bill will be read.

Mr. PLATT. What was the objection of the Senator from Missouri? I want to understand about it before the reading is commenced.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota asked that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that each amendment be acted upon as it was reached in the reading. The Senator from Missouri objected, desiring that the bill shall be read through consecutively before action upon the amendments.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill, and read to line 23, on page 14.

Mr. GORMAN. I ask the attention of the Senator in charge of the bill. The bill is being read through on account of the fact that quite a number of Senators desired that that course should be pursued because they have not had an opportunity to familiarize themselves with its details. I suggest to the Senator that he permit a motion for an executive session, and by to-morrow morning we can dispense with the formal reading of the bill, and go on and consider it as appropriation bills are usually considered. That will give to some Senators who have not had it, an opportunity to read the bill during the night; and, with Senators' consent, I will make that request.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that it be taken up to-morrow morning immediately after the routine morning business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BLACKBURN in the chair). The Senator from South Dakota asks unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that it be taken up to-morrow morning immediately after the conclusion of the routine morning business. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

UNIFORM SYSTEM OF BANKRUPTCY.

Mr. GORMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to have the bankruptcy bill laid before the Senate before that is done. I suppose in the regular order the Senator will not object to having the bankruptcy bill laid before the Senate.

Mr. GORMAN. No; not at all. I understand that is the order.

Mr. HOAR. Let that be done before the executive session is ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is so understood.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8110) to establish a uniform law on the subject of bankruptcies throughout the United States.

Mr. HOAR. Why should not the Senate now proceed with that bill a little while, instead of going into executive session?

Mr. GORMAN. I only made the motion at the request of some Senators who desire a short executive session.

Mr. HOAR. Then I give notice that after the executive session I shall ask the Senate to proceed with the consideration of the bankruptcy bill.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. GORMAN. I renew my motion for an executive session.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After eighteen minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

UNIFORM SYSTEM OF BANKRUPTCY.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8110) to establish a uniform law on the subject of bankruptcies throughout the United States.

Mr. VEST. I will ask the Senate to consider a little local measure, which will only take a few moments, without displacing the regular order.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will pardon me, I should like to take the floor on the regular order, and then I will yield without proceeding at present.

Mr. VEST. Certainly, as a matter of course.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri asks unanimous consent for the present consideration——

Mr. VEST. I yield the floor to the Senator from Massachusetts, so that he can take it upon the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understood the Senator from Massachusetts to yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. HOAR. If I am recognized and have the floor, I yield to the Senator, if that is the understanding of the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts is entitled to the floor on the regular order.

KANSAS CITY INTERSTATE NATIONAL BANK.

Mr. VEST. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (S. 3680) to provide for the removal of the Interstate National Bank of Kansas City from Kansas City, Kans., to Kansas City, Mo.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Finance with an amendment, to strike out section 4, in the following words:

SEC. 4. That this act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CAPT. WILLIAM N. TISDALL, UNITED STATES ARMY.

Mr. HAWLEY. With the consent of the Senator from Massachusetts, I ask the Senate to take up the bill (S. 1427) to provide for promoting Capt. William N. Tisdall, United States Army, now on the retired list, to the rank of major. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BATE], when the bill came up the other day requested a little delay. I understand he withdraws any objection.

Mr. BATE. I objected yesterday evening, Mr. President, but I have no objection to present now. I understand the bill passed through our committee unanimously, and as I say, I do not object to its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

UNIFORM SYSTEM OF BANKRUPTCY.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8110) to establish a uniform law on the subject of bankruptcies throughout the United States.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I do not wish to be counted among the number of those Senators who have defeated great measures of legislation by elaborate speeches in their favor. I assume that this body, consisting of experienced statesmen and business men, and so largely of experienced lawyers, understands pretty thoroughly the history of bankruptcy legislation in this country, and the detail of the legislation which we have had in the three bankruptcy laws which have been enacted and repealed in the past. So I wish, in a sort of informal and business way, to take ten or fifteen minutes in simply stating one or two points of this matter which I think ought to be understood and recorded.

The estimates which are generally made are that there are 350,000 bankrupts in this country. A very careful and thorough examination made by the publisher of the great business magazine known as Bradstreet's made the number about 300,000 several years ago. There must be certainly an addition of 50,000 more. I have no doubt myself that that is an underestimate, and that there must be at least a half million of these persons. They are people who have generally been men of activity, energy, and credit. Otherwise they would not, as a rule, be debtors. The great cities on this continent are upon rivers, and the great rivers of this continent are very largely boundary lines of States Accordingly, these debts, so far as they are contracted by merchants and manufacturers, are apt to be owed by men living in the neighborhood of great cities, or in great cities, to persons who live over their State lines. The great manufacturing and mercantile business of this country and the cotton-raising business of this country depend upon distant parts of the continent for their market and distant parts of the continent for their material. So the number of these bankrupts who can not be discharged from their debts by State laws is very great, and it will be remembered that the State law can not provide for the discharge of a debt between citizens of the same State unless it was contracted after the enactment of the law in reference thereto.

Now, there are three classes of opinion in this country on this subject. First, there is the opinion that there ought to be a law providing for two things: First, the discharge of all the debtors who have committed no crime or fraud and who can not pay their debts, in order that this great mass of American citizens may be restored to citizenship. A bankrupt goes through his life unable to do anything in a natural way for himself or his family and "drags at each remove a lengthening chain" until he goes to his grave. He is compelled to resort to petty shifts and subterfuges, doing business in another man's name, and fraudulent concealment of his interest in what the other man allows him to do in his name.

I think there should be a bankrupt law discharging these people where there is no case of actual and clear fraud, and that it should provide for the equal distribution of a bankrupt's estate among all his creditors without favoritism or preference, unless debts for the actual necessaries of life or to laborers or personal servants for actual wages are preferred to a limited extent.

I do not think any bankruptcy law that does not provide for the rights of creditors also in the case of an attempt to defraud them or in the case of an attempt to grasp the whole estate for one favorite creditor is in spirit constitutional. The word "bankruptcy" used in the Constitution had at the time of the adoption of the Constitution a technical meaning. It meant the distribution of the estate of a fraudulent debtor at the application of the creditors. An insolvent law was a totally different thing.

Mr. STEWART. I think there ought to be a full Senate to hear the statement of the Senator from Massachusetts. I suggest the want of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aldrich,	Call,	McBride,	Sherman,
Allen,	Chandler,	Morgan,	Shoup,
Bacon,	Chilton,	Morrill,	Smith,
Baker,	Dubois,	Nelson,	Stewart,
Bate,	Elkins,	Pasco,	Tillman,
Berry,	Frye,	Perkins,	Turpie,
Blackburn,	Gallinger,	Pettigrew,	Vest,
Blanchard,	Hawley,	Platt,	Vilas,
Brown,	Hoar,	Proctor,	Walthall,
Burrows,	Jones, Ark.	Pugh,	Wetmore.
Butler,	Lindsay,	Quay,
Caffery,	Lodge,	Sewell,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-six Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. HOAR. I do not think it was ever intended by the framers of the Constitution, or by the generation that adopted it, that a pure insolvent law without a provision for a distribution on the application of creditors should be enacted. Bankruptcy meant a measure taken on the application of creditors, and nothing else. An insolvent law in legal treatises of that time is a separate and independent measure, treated on under different chapters in the old law books. But very naturally and properly the two things were united, and the insolvent law became an incident of our bankruptcy system. As time went on and a more humane and generous estimate of the relation of debtor and creditor prevailed, very naturally, also, the insolvency application became the principal, and the bankruptcy, the application by the creditors, became, if not the incident, at least the less important feature.

But still it is very difficult, in my judgment, to uphold the constitutionality of a pure voluntary system of insolvency which entirely excludes the bankruptcy proceeding which was contemplated by the Constitution. However, I do not propose to discuss or enlarge upon that consideration, because, practically, I do not think there is any likelihood that a majority of the Senate will be found favoring either of those things without the other. I do not care to waste time, therefore, in that discussion.

Now, the States have at present no sufficient remedy; first, for the reason I have stated already, that they can not take care of debtors owing debts to citizens of other States. In point of fact, there are only thirteen States having voluntary and involuntary bankruptcy laws. So that in thirty-two States of this Union the poor debtor has no hope, even if all his creditors dwell within the borders of his own State. Then there are ten States, in addition, which have the voluntary insolvent laws, where the debtor can get relief from the debts contracted within his own State with citizens of his own State, if those debts were contracted after the passage of the law. Then there are five States of these which require the assent of a certain proportion of creditors, always, I believe, at least a majority in number and value. In some States I think it is two-thirds; it is one or the other. That is not material, however. So that in those five States the debtor is dependent upon the will of the creditor, even in the limited number of cases where he can get relief at all.

Mr. TURPIE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. HOAR. Certainly.

Mr. TURPIE. I should like to call the attention of the honorable Senator to the words in the Constitution, "uniform laws on the subject of bankruptcies," and especially to the word "subject." I refer the honorable Senator to the English law upon that subject before the adoption of the Constitution.

Mr. HOAR. I can not hear the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. TURPIE. There were, then, two classes of courts formed by the act of Parliament—one the insolvent court and one the bankruptcy court; one which authorized a voluntary surrender of assets and one which contemplated an involuntary surrender of assets. I think it was to combine both into one act of legislation that the phrase in the Constitution is so written. It was not written "uniform law on bankruptcies," but "uniform law on the subject of bankruptcies," thus expressly combining the English insolvency proceeding and the bankruptcy proceeding, and the English courts on both those subjects as well as parliamentary action, so as to include both voluntary and involuntary.

Mr. HOAR. That reenforces, it seems to me, the suggestion which I just made. But I merely made it in passing to show my own view, not intending to predicate any argument now or later in this debate upon that proposition. I only said that the word "bankruptcy" contemplated at the time of the adoption of the Constitution a different thing from insolvency, administered in different courts, in the history of English legislation, and treated of differently in the books.

Mr. TURPIE. Yes, sir; but if the honorable Senator will allow me, the word "bankruptcy" does not give and would not alone indicate what the "subject of bankruptcies" conveys.

Mr. HOAR. That suggestion is a very pertinent one, unquestionably, but I am now coming to another proposition. I wish to hurry this along, so as at this late hour of the afternoon to get rid of what I desired to say in the beginning.

Mr. President, the first class of opinion of which I have spoken is entertained by a class of people who want to unite both, of which I am one. There is another class of persons who want voluntary bankruptcy, but who are very unwilling to have any provision for involuntary bankruptcy unless in case of actual fraud, either in an attempt to cover up and conceal the property of the debtor from the creditor, so that the debtor may keep it himself, or in an attempt to give a preference to a favored creditor, so that the mass of the creditors shall not be taken care of and shall not have their share. That class of persons, who exist in the country and are represented in the Senate, are very unwilling, indeed, to have any provision whatever which will effect the distribution of an estate for the mere reason that the debtor can not pay his debts and is hopelessly insolvent. If he wishes to stagger along, never getting a discharge, with the hope that something will turn up, or for any reason known to himself, they do not desire to interfere with him.

Their reason, however, they would not state in that way, and the reason which they would state—and undoubtedly it is a reason of the very greatest force—is that there are many instances of energetic, honest, capable, and brave men who get into some temporary business difficulty, so that they can not meet their obligations in the course of business, which is the general definition of insolvency, and if they are forced into bankruptcy their whole property is taken from them, their business is gone, the good will is gone, their relations in life which they have established are all destroyed, and very often hope is destroyed, too; that it is not reasonable that such men should not have their chance to go on for months and perhaps sometimes for years; that it is not reasonable that any one creditor should have the power to hang over their heads the threat to put them into bankruptcy from malice or cupidity.

I am very much impressed, speaking for one, with the wisdom and humanity and honesty of that opinion, and I think that this bill if it pass ought to contain in it provisions carefully drawn in the spirit of compromise and in the spirit of an honest endeavor to reconcile different opinions which will take care of that case.

I think the House bill, which is generally known as the Torrey bill, contains such provisions as ought and are likely to meet the reasonable desire of gentlemen impressed by this opinion. If they do not, I hope that in the course of this discussion ground will be found, with the aid of other Senators interested in the matter, to accomplish that purpose to the satisfaction of the people of the country and the satisfaction of the Senate. It would be a great pity if the half million of bankrupts were to go on in sorrow and in despair for the rest of their lives because we have not skill enough to frame a measure which will accomplish the result which every humane man thinks desirable.

Now, the third class of opinion does not want any bankruptcy legislation at all. It does not want these men relieved. It does not want estates of debtors honestly divided among creditors. It wants the possibility of fraud, and the possibility of preference to continue so far, at any rate, as it is to be affected by the interposition of national authority and the exercise of the constitutional power, which it is our right and which Mr. Webster claimed it was our constitutional duty to exercise.

There are undoubtedly reasons, honest and weighty, in favor of that proposition, and it is not for me to undertake to answer them before I hear them, if they are to appear here.

There are persons outside of this Chamber who have been active, earnest, efficient, formidable, and successful for many years in hindering bankruptcy legislation, who do it for a reason that they themselves avow and act upon. I have a fair right to state it, because they state it themselves. It is that they have business arrangements in some cases, firms that have credits by the million, by the tens of million, over the country who have arrangements with debtors, traders and small manufacturers especially, by which they give them credit on the condition that if they ever get into failing circumstances they shall be preferred by way of mortgage or absolute conveyance of the whole property of the debtor. They say very frankly, "We do not want a bankruptcy act, because when you go into bankruptcy we want your property for ourselves."

Sometimes they are creditors of the class that I have stated, doing business all over the country. At other times they are local bankers, lending money on those terms; and the banker says—to quote a phrase which was used in my hearing not long ago:

> The question is to be between the banker who lives in the neighborhood and the goods man who lives in some other State, and we would rather have it ourselves.

Now, that proposition is one which, it seems to me, will not bear a great deal of discussion. I do not think it is likely to find support in the mind of any member of this body. These men not only lend the money, or set up the debtor in business by the capital that they furnish or the goods they supply him, but the fact that they have done so gives the debtor the very credit that has enabled him to get loans of money or advances of goods elsewhere. The local banker is written to—a man in Alaska. I will not take the name of any existing State or Territory which is likely to be very much affected by the pending bill. The local banker lends him some money. Then a man in New York or Connecticut writes to that banker and wants to know if the man's credit is good. "Oh, excellent." He sends him his goods. Then, the man's business being unsuccessful, the very goods which have been supplied to that man on a credit which the creditor in the neighborhood has furnished him are taken and sold, and the whole proceeds of them go to the man on whose recommendation the distant creditor has made to him the sale.

Now, it seems to me that that reason will not stand fire or bear the light. The idea of keeping these 500,000 poor men in the toils and in the chains forever in order that this class of creditors may get not the lion's share, but the hyena's share, it strikes me is not one which if acted upon would be very creditable to the legislation of a humane, Christian, honorable, or just nation.

Mr. President, this bill, in the course of many years that this matter has been under consideration in Congress, has been constantly modified and ameliorated for the benefit of the debtor. In the first place, there is a very careful provision, such as is not found in the legislation of any single State—if it is, in only one or two at any rate; I have not got the statistics on that point here—that the expenses of the referee and trustee shall never exceed a very small percentage on the assets. There is no eating up, as we have had in the experience in the past, of a bankruptcy estate, so that it goes to lawyers and assignees and referees and court officials.

Mr. PEFFER. And registers.

Mr. HOAR. And registers. In the next place, the debtor gets his discharge; but if he has been honest and fair, without any regard to the assent of any creditor. If he does not pay one cent and owe a million dollars, he is discharged from the million dollars. No proportion of his debts is required to be paid, and no assent of any proportion of creditors.

The scheme of the bill I will now state. I speak now not of the proposed amendment to the bill, but of the original House bill, which is technically before the Senate. The original bankruptcy jurisdiction is conferred upon the district courts of the United States and of the Territories, the supreme court of the District of Columbia, and the United States court of the Indian Territory.

They appoint assistant judicial officers, called referees, in such numbers as may prove desirable in order to secure a prompt administration, and in such localities as may prove desirable in order to bring the proceeding to the door of the debtor and the door of his neighborhood creditors as far as practicable, so that traveling long distances and over great spaces to the United States court is to be avoided as far as possible.

The compensation of the referee is a ten-dollar filing fee in each case and 1 per cent commission on amounts paid in dividends from each estate administered before him.

Then the bankruptcy proceeding may be taken by appeal to the court of appeals. Under a proposed amendment no question is to be carried to the Supreme Court of the United States except such questions as would go up by reason of being what is called Federal questions from a State court under like circumstances—that is, where it is claimed that some State statute is invalid by reason of its being opposed to a law, treaty, or the Constitution of the United States and the decision is in favor of its validity, or where some authority or title is claimed by the Constitution or laws of the United States and the decision is against the title or authority.

That is the substance of the bill. It is the same as in the cases of State courts, except that on application to the Supreme Court the court may grant a certiorari to bring up the decision of any court of appeals in any circuit where such bringing up is necessary to secure uniformity of decision throughout the country. That does exist in cases of all other questions which are in the court of appeals, and it ought especially to exist in bankruptcy proceedings, because the mandate of the Constitution is express that the system of bankruptcy throughout the United States shall be uniform.

Now, all persons or partnerships who owe debts may become voluntary bankrupts on filing their own petitions, except corporations, who are authorized to take the benefit of the act voluntarily, but may be adjudged involuntary bankrupts on the petition of creditors.

The question whether a railroad corporation shall be the subject of bankruptcy in this country is one which has been often raised, and that is left to the general provision of the law saying that corporations may be put into bankruptcy. For myself, and speaking for one, not for the committee, not for the framers of this bill, not for anybody else, I do not believe that if the question were an original one a railroad corporation ought ever to be made the subject of bankruptcy.

The railroad corporation is in all States a corporation which is required to have a particular nature and character. Special provisions are made for the paying in of the stock, for the voting, for proxies, for securing a sufficient capital; and the right of eminent domain is delegated to them. They go across the country, going where they choose, crossing highways, going along highways, and they discharge for the people the great public function of providing public ways—one of the three great functions of the sovereign—and the great public function of carrying freight and passengers.

I do not conceive that such a franchise as that ought ever to be sold to the highest bidder, to be bought by an individual, to be acquired by speculators or by persons who are not controlled in their action in the organization and management of the corporation and ownership of the property without the special consent of the State legislature in each particular case.

I do not think we can constitutionally, as a matter of original principle, provide that a State power of eminent domain granted by the State to a corporation of its own construction can be taken from it by United States authority and set up for sale and given to the highest bidder or wielded under our authority. I do not think that it is either expedient or ought to be held lawful that these corporations can be put into bankruptcy without having sold what is ordinarily their chief and most valuable property, the franchise which they have got from the public.

So if the question had come to me, if I had had the honor to be on the bench, I should have held that a railroad corporation, if insolvent, must have its assets distributed under special provisions of the authority that created it.

But the practice has been otherwise. The Supreme Court of the United States have recently used language, without, I think, very much discussion of the question, which implies that they think otherwise, and I suppose it will be held otherwise in the country. But I have sought, or at least the framers of the bill have sought, and I entirely agree with them, to leave this question to the court. I say framers of the bill. It has come down very much modified and changed, partly in committee, partly out of it, from a former Congress. The framers, I say, have left that question to the exposition of the court, with the bill providing generally that corporations may be put in insolvency on involuntary proceedings, and there it stands. I thought it was proper to make this statement.

Now, farmers and wage earners, like all other classes of the community, of course, may avail themselves of the voluntary proceedings provided for by the bill. The involuntary proceedings, so far as they are provided for in the bill, can only be taken against persons who are found to be actually insolvent, except where actual fraud has been committed in the first place. So they can not be taken against anybody, whatever acts of bankruptcy he has committed, as a threat or to get power over him. They can not be used as a threat or menace against anybody who is not an actual insolvent. In the next place——

Mr. STEWART. How is that question to be determined in the initiation of the proceedings?

Mr. HOAR. It is determined by the court in the first instance, with power of appeal to a jury in every case.

Mr. STEWART. Before any proceedings?

Mr. HOAR. Before any proceedings can be had.

Next, where the man, in the first place—and that applies all through—is actually found insolvent by a jury, and he must have committed an act of actual fraud by either being insolvent, and in contemplation of insolvency having conveyed his property out of his hands to defeat, delay, or hinder creditors, or given a preference to one creditor against the others.

In each of those cases, according to the bill as it came from the House, and as it will stand unless this particular provision may be modified to suit all parties in the Senate, three or four unsecured creditors, having together claims amounting to $500 or over, may file a petition, and if there are less than twelve creditors in all, then any one creditor having a claim of that amount may file a petition, and the defendant may have a jury trial if he sees fit.

In case a final adjudication is secured against the defendant, a trustee shall be appointed, corresponding to the old officer called an assignee, to whom the title of all the property held by the debtor at the date of the adjudication, except such as is exempted, passes.

Now, the statute recognizes and gives effect to the exemption laws of all the States. The circuit court, in Judge Miller's time, when he gave the opinion, have held that that is not an objection; it does not prevent a system of bankruptcy being a uniform system of bankruptcy within the meaning of the Constitution; that it only attaches to and sequesters and distributes the property of the debtor which is liable to his debts wherever it may be found. If there be property—although the State law creates the exemption—exempted from such liability, exempting that property does not prevent the system from being uniform in the constitutional sense. The bankrupt gets his discharge, as I have said, without reference to the consent of anybody, and without reference to the payment of any amount, unless he has committed an offense by giving preference after the passage of the act for the purpose of defeating its operation within one year, which has not been surrendered. If he has given such a preference, and it has been surrendered, that does not interfere, and in ordinary cases, of course, such preference would be set aside by the law. So that if it were established, it would hardly be a practical objection to the bankrupt getting his discharge.

Another provision relates to obtaining property upon credit by false pretenses, which is made a criminal offense in most of the States, or making a fraudulent transfer of his property, which has not been restored, or fraudulently, and in contemplation of bankruptcy, destroying his books of account, or failing to keep proper books of account with fraudulent purpose.

The last provision, I wish to say here, will probably, if the bill shall pass, receive some special attention in the Senate, and very likely some modification of that provision may be thought, on discussion, desirable. It is not of the essence of the bill at all, but that is the way it came from the House of Representatives.

The bankrupt gets a discharge from all his debts except taxes, judgments rendered against him in court, for willful and malicious injuries to the person or property of another, or debts which he does not put in his schedule, and fraudulently omits from his schedule, or such as were created by fraud, embezzlement, or defalcation while acting as a public officer or serving in a fiduciary capacity.

The creditors choose the trustee of the bankrupt. The compensation of the trustee is, first, a filing fee of $5 in all cases; second, 5 per cent commission on the first $5,000 actually paid over in dividends to the creditors, net and not gross; 2 per cent on the second $5,000, and 1 per cent of all amounts so actually paid on dividends over $10,000.

Mr. President, we had great complaints of the administration of the old bankrupt law in some parts of the South immediately after the war, especially in the State of Louisiana. Those complaints were just. The facts on which they were founded were a scandal on the administration of justice; and I am bound to say publicly what I have often said in private, that there was a great and a most reprehensible carelessness in the appointing power of this country of United States judicial officers in the district courts during and immediately succeeding the Administration of President Lincoln. We ought in the disturbed and distracted condition of that country to have sent down there, or selected there from their own material rather than send down at all, men who would have been great and shining models of the judicial character.

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. HOAR. Pretty soon; when I have got through with this point.

They should have been men who would have represented to the people the authority and the justice of the United States by characters which would have been revered and honored. That was not done. Five judges of the courts of the United States were driven from office during that period by threats of impeachment, which they dreaded.

Mr. STEWART. If the Senator will allow me, there was no bankrupt law in force during President Lincoln's time.

Mr. HOAR. The bankrupt law was enforced by the judges immediately after the war, and by judges who were appointed in his time. I do not want to name them, as everybody knows them.

Mr. STEWART. It was long after that.

Mr. HOAR. Everybody knows them, and I do not think, so long as Louisiana is represented in the Senate of the United States, that I need go very far to find witnesses of the substantial truth of what I am saying. I have had occasion to know something about it in various ways. I presume now, as the Senators from Louisiana are both present, I should not err if I were to say that amongst hundreds and hundreds of bankruptcy cases in that State there was not a single one in which a dollar was paid to a creditor. If I exaggerate, I should like to be contradicted and set right.

Mr. CAFFERY. I did not hear the Senator's statement.

Mr. HOAR. I said that I believed that after the war amongst hundreds and hundreds of bankruptcy cases in the State of Louisiana there was not a single case in which a dollar was paid to a creditor.

Mr. CAFFERY. I think the Senator is probably correct in that statement.

Mr. HOAR. That I supposed. I thought I knew something about it when I stated it. The bankrupt law was passed in 1867.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. HOAR. Yes.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I know also that the administration of the national bankrupt law in Louisiana after the war was a disgrace to those who participated in it.

Mr. HOAR. That is just what I said, except that I stated it a little stronger than the honorable Senator has done. I said, instead of sending down to those communities or selecting in those communities men who would represent by their dignity, purity, and authority the character of the United States, we had down there judges, five of whom were driven from office by threats of impeachment, and I regard that history as the scandal, not in the least of those Southern communities, but as the scandal of justice and the authority of the United States. I called the attention of the Senate and of the people of the United States to that fact on a very impressive occasion in this Chamber on an impeachment trial, when I think my honorable friend from Nevada was probably one of the judges of the court.

Mr. STEWART. No.

Mr. HOAR. I was not sure whether he was then in the Senate or not.

Mr. President, this bill has gone to the extreme in the other direction. There never was a bankrupt law, I believe, either in existence or proposed, on the face of the earth which so strictly, carefully, scrupulously, economically guarded and pressed down the possibility of extravagant expenditures in administration, or which provided so low a compensation for the officers, the referee, and the trustee who are provided for by it.

There is one point that we can not guard absolutely, and if any Senator can find an amendment guarding it, I for one will thank him. I have not found myself able to devise a provision by which, if there were lawsuits brought against an estate, where strangers in the transaction are on the other side, it is made impossible to have extravagant fees or large expenditures in the matter of counsel. Experience has shown that the courts are not as strict in those matters as they should be. Of course, the trustee can have no personal interest in it without being subject to prosecution and punishment as an embezzler, and the referee can have no more personal interest in it than can the judge. But if any human being can contrive a way by which these estates can get, in case of litigation, the assistance of eminent and suitable counsel, which they need, and still have any security other than the honor of the counsel themselves, the character of the parties, and the fidelity of the trustee to his estate, the person chosen by the creditors, removable by them—and that, of course, is a great security—I shall be glad to support any amendment in that direction.

There are some matters of mechanism. The bill takes up a good many pages in what, after all, is easily understood, but is necessary to be set out for the safety of the transaction. I believe, however, that I can honestly and fairly and reasonably say that there never existed on the face of the earth, that there never was proposed to a legislative body, State or national, here or elsewhere, a bankruptcy bill so considerate and humane to the debtor and so careful to preserve the just interests of the creditor against embezzlement, waste, or any other description of fraud.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I desire to make some remarks on this subject, but it is too late to-night, and there are not enough Senators here. The Senate is very thin.

Mr. WALTHALL. If it will be agreeable to the Senator, I will move an adjournment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PASCO in the chair). Does the Senator from Nevada yield for that purpose?

Mr. STEWART. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. WALTHALL. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 18 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, February 17, 1897, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, February 16, 1897.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Before the Journal is approved, I want to call the attention of the House to a ruling which was made at last evening's session. I read from the RECORD:

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina moves that the House do now adjourn. Under the rule it requires a majority of those present to second the motion. As many as are in favor of seconding the motion that the House do now adjourn will stand until counted. [A pause.] No one rising to second the motion to adjourn, the motion is out of order.

I want to inquire of the Chair if that ruling is embodied in the Journal; and if not, why not; and also to inquire what is the authority for the ruling? I ask for information.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from South Carolina will turn to the rule under which the call of the House was proceeding he will find that it states that in order to make a motion to adjourn in order at such a time it must be seconded by a majority of those present.

Mr. TALBERT. That is what I am trying to find out—the authority for the ruling.

Mr. PAYNE. Well, it is in the rules of the House and in the particular rule under which we were proceeding at the time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair finds it in the Journal.

Mr. RICHARDSON (to Mr. TALBERT). Read the rule.

Mr. TALBERT. I do not think it is in the rule under which we were proceeding.

Mr. HENDERSON. But the Speaker says it is reported in the Journal.

The SPEAKER. This proceeding is irregular. We can not review a decision at this time. If the Journal states what actually occurred, it is correct.

Mr. PAYNE. If the gentleman will refer to the RECORD, he will find that the rule was read, and, as I am informed, is printed in the RECORD this morning.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the Journal will be considered as approved.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. TALBERT. I simply wanted to call the attention of the House to that ruling, which seemed to be irregular.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman will turn to his copy of the rules of the House and read the last clause but one of the fourth paragraph of Rule XV, he will find the provision to which reference was made by the gentleman from New York and on which the ruling was based.

Mr. TALBERT. I will state that the roll call had not been completed.

The SPEAKER. Then the gentleman interrupted the roll call by a motion to adjourn?

Mr. PAYNE. I think, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman is mistaken. It had been completed, but a quorum had not been obtained.

Mr. TALBERT. No, it had not been obtained.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sees nothing in the ruling but what was justified by the rule of the House.

Mr. TALBERT. I only wanted the House to understand the matter fully.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2037) to provide times and places for holding terms of United States courts in Utah.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9643) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 9961) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, had asked for a conference with the House on the bill and amendments, and had appointed Mr. CULLOM, Mr. QUAY, and Mr. CALL as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 1862) to amend the act creating the circuit court of appeals in regard to fees and costs, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 2317) to increase the pension of Levi T. E. Johnson;

A bill (H. R. 446) to increase the pension of Julia H. H. Crosby;

A bill (H. R. 3715) for the relief of Capt. W. J. Kountz; and

A bill (H. R. 853) providing for the erection of a light-house at Orient Point, Long Island, New York.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendment bills of the following titles in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (H. R. 1104) granting a pension to Isaac N. Williams;

A bill (H. R. 5764) granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth D. Marthon;

A bill (H. R. 3108) to grant a pension to Jessie Durnell, late second-class pilot on gunboat Lexington;

A bill (H. R. 8388) for the relief of William G. Buck;

A bill (H. R. 5880) granting an increase of pension to Greenville Puckett;

A bill (H. R. 5981) granting a pension to Elihu Jones;

A bill (H. R. 6789) granting a pension and for the relief of Dr. Harrison Wagner;

A bill (H. R. 1311) granting a pension to Charles W. Sentman;

A bill (H. R. 10040) granting an increase of pension to George W. Ferree; and

A bill (H. R. 8898) to increase the pension of Elizabeth Wellons.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 3591) to increase the pension of Daniel Phillips, of Company D, Thirteenth Regiment Wisconsin Infantry;

A bill (S. 3670) to increase the pension of Mrs. Elizabeth S. Roberts, widow of the late Gen. Benjamin S. Roberts, United States Army;

A bill (S. 3628) to provide for the revision and codification of the criminal and penal laws of the United States;

A bill (S. 3538) to amend section 8 of the act of Congress entitled "An act to establish a court of appeals for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved February 9, 1893;

A bill (S. 3307) declaring the Potomac Flats a public park, under the name of the Riverside Park;

A bill (S. 114) for the relief of Anna W. Osborne;

A bill (S. 567) for the relief of the Continental Fire Insurance Company and others;

A bill (S. 1972) to provide for the carrying out of the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of John Campbell;

A bill (S. 2986) authorizing the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to accept the bequest of the late Peter Von Essen for the use of the public white schools of that portion of said District formerly known as Georgetown;

A bill (S. 315) for the relief of Thomas Antisell; and

A bill (S. 3651) to provide for an investigation of the obstruction of the navigable waters of Florida, Louisiana, and other South Atlantic and Gulf States by the aquatic plant known as the water hyacinth, and for other purposes.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following Senate bills were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A bill (S. 3591) to increase the pension of Daniel Phillips, of Company D, Thirteenth Regiment Wisconsin Infantry—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (S. 3628) to provide for the revision and codification of the criminal and penal laws of the United States—to the Committee on Revision of the Laws.

A joint resolution (S. R. 121) to amend an act granting to the Duluth and Winnipeg Railroad Company a right of way through the Chippewa and White Earth Indian reservations, in the State of Minnesota.

VETO MESSAGE—NANCY G. ALLABACH.

Mr. KERR. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a privileged report from the Committee on Invalid Pensions on the veto message of the President of the United States with reference to Senate bill No. 894, granting a pension to Nancy G. Allabach.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the message of the President of the United States, returning without approval the bill S. 894, entitled "An act granting a pension to Nancy G. Allabach," having carefully and fully considered the same, respectfully adopt the report of the Senate Committee on Pensions, and earnestly recommend the passage of the bill, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding:

"The Committee on Pensions, to whom the bill (S. 894) granting a pension to Nancy G. Allabach was recommitted, together with the objections of the President thereto, beg leave to report:

"The committee have reconsidered said bill, and considered the objections of the President thereto, and recommend its passage, notwithstanding his objections.

"The facts of the case, as found by the committee, are that Peter H. Allabach was a soldier in the Mexican war, and participated in the battles of Palo Alto, Resaca, and the military operations on the line of the Rio Grande. He conducted himself with conspicuous gallantry. He married the proposed beneficiary of this bill on the 30th of September, 1851. She is now 67 years of age, and unable to earn her own support.

"During the late civil war he was colonel of the One hundred and thirteenth Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers, and commanded a brigade in one or more severe battles. His conduct won the approbation of Gen. W. S. Hancock, Gen. A. A. Humphrey, and Gen. Henry S. Briggs, his immediate commanders. The letters of General Hancock, General Humphrey, and General Briggs are made part of this report.

"After the close of the war of the rebellion Colonel Allabach returned to and engaged in the pursuits of civil life. He died in this city on the 11th of February, 1892.

"This bill proposes to pay to Mrs. Nancy G. Allabach a pension of $30 per month, which is the pension allowed by the general law to disabled officers of the rank Colonel Allabach held in the service of the United States. All the facts before the committee prove that Colonel Allabach was an officer of great merit, and rendered most valuable services to the country. His conduct as a citizen was exemplary, and he left his widow, the beneficiary of the bill before the committee, without other means of support than the small pension allowed by the general law. Upon these facts the committee reported the bill, 'An act granting a pension to Nancy G. Allabach,' to the Senate, and recommended its passage. It passed both the Senate and House of Representatives, was laid before the President, was disapproved by him, and was returned to the Senate with his objections, and recommitted to the Committee on Pensions for reconsideration.

"Your committee recognizes the constitutional right and the duty of the President to refuse to sign any bill which has passed both Houses of Congress which he does not approve. 'If he approve he shall sign it, but if not, he shall return it with his objections to that House in which it shall have originated.'

"Your committee would give emphasis to that provision of the Constitution which makes the President a sharer with Congress in responsibility to the country for all legislation.

"Recognizing this imperative obligation imposed upon the President by the Constitution, your committee proceed to a respectful consideration of the objections of the President to this bill.

"The President, in his message containing his objection to this bill, correctly recites some of the facts which led your committee to recommend its passage, but he does not allude to the eminent and distinguished services rendered by the husband of the beneficiary in the war with Mexico and in the late civil war, in which the integrity of the Union as well as the peace of the continent and the existence of popular constitutional government was involved. He says truly that 'Colonel Allabach did not at any time apply for a pension,' to which it may well be answered that no services rendered to the country, however brilliant or useful, are pensionable.

"General pension laws are passed to make provision for the unfortunate; but the brave and patriotic soldier, who on many occasions imperiled his life in defense of his country or for the maintenance of its just authority, may well have hoped that, though he passed through the perils of the battlefield without personal harm, those who control the Treasury of a grateful country would, when appealed to directly, make provision for the dependent, loved wife whom he left poor and can no longer support or protect.

"It is further stated by the President as a ground of objection to this bill (and the committee quote his language):

"I do not see how the same relief as is contained in this bill can be denied to many thousand widows who, in a similar situation, are now on the pension rolls under general laws.

"Your committee beg to say that if, upon all the facts of this case, Mrs. Allabach is entitled to the relief afforded to her by this bill, it is no objection to its passage that it does not afford equal or ample relief to the many thousands of widows who are on the pension rolls under general laws. If the bill, upon its own facts, is just and proper, it will only be a precedent for like just and proper special legislation.

"Your committee admit without hesitation that the general pension laws are liberal, and make provision for the large class of soldiers and those who are or were dependent upon them; but the committee would regret that a precedent should be established by Executive action which would, in effect, operate to deprive both Houses of Congress of the right, in the exercise of their discretion, to make provision for special cases of exceptional merit."

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Mr. Speaker, I would ask to have read in this connection the veto message of the President of the United States.

The veto message was read, as follows:

To the Senate:

I herewith return without my approval Senate bill numbered 894, entitled "An act granting a pension to Nancy G. Allabach."

This bill provides for the payment of a pension of $30 a month to the beneficiary named as the widow of Peter H. Allabach.

This soldier served for nine months in the Army during the war of the rebellion, having also served in the war with Mexico.

He was mustered out of his last service on the 23d day of May, 1863, and died on the 11th of February, 1892.

During his life he made no application for pension on account of disabilities. It is not now claimed that he was in the least disabled as an incident of his military service, nor is it alleged that his death, which occurred nearly twenty-nine years after his discharge from the Army, was in any degree related to such service.

His widow was pensioned after his death under the statute allowing pensions to widows of soldiers of the Mexican war, without reference to the cause of the death of their husbands. Her case is also, indirectly, one of those provided for by the general act passed in 1890, commonly called the dependent pension law.

It is proposed, however, by the special act under consideration, to give this widow a pension of $30 a month without the least suggestion of the death or disability of her husband having been caused by his military service, and solely, as far as is discoverable, upon the ground that she is poor and needs the money.

This condition is precisely covered by existing general laws; and if a precedent is to be established by the special legislation proposed, I do not see how the same relief as is contained in this bill can be denied to the many thousand widows, who, in a similar situation, are now on the pension rolls under general laws.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, April 21, 1896.

Mr. KERR. Mr. Speaker, this bill grants a pension of $30 per month to Nancy G. Allabach, as the widow of Col. Peter H. Allabach. It passed both Houses and was vetoed by the President. It was then passed over the veto by the Senate. The report of the Senate Pensions Committee was written by Senator PALMER, and it sets forth with precision the meritorious service of Colonel Allabach, and combats with reasons which seem conclusive to my judgment the grounds upon which the President predicates his veto.

Colonel Allabach served two years in the Mexican war and nine months in the war of the rebellion. In the Mexican service he was in the battles of Palo Alto and Resaca, and he participated in all the military operations along the Rio Grande.

His service in the war of the rebellion was at a most critical period of that great struggle, and was conspicuous for courage and gallantry. In the battles of Fredericksburg and Chancellorsville he commanded a brigade. In the battle of Fredericksburg he led his brigade in that terrific but impotent charge against the stone wall. For it he received the highest encomiums from his superior officers, Generals Briggs and Humphrey. To sum it all up, he served his country in two wars, and, in all, for a period of thirty-three months.

Now, then, a word about this veto. The President leaves out of consideration altogether the soldier's service. Whether it is long or short, characterized by courage or cowardice, whether in garrison duty, away from danger, or upon the bloody field, is not an important factor in his calculation.

Here is the vice of his logic, and upon it turns his objections to this and all other bills of its character. As it happened, Colonel Allabach did not apply for a pension in his lifetime, and there is no evidence that he died from army disabilities. Neither did Grant nor McClellan nor a hundred more distinguished soldiers whose widows we have pensioned. The ground of these pensions is the service of the husband, a little more distinguished than the ordinary, and the poverty of the widow. Both exist in this case.

The House and the Senate, better acquainted with the patriotic sentiment of the country, nearer, Mr. Speaker, the great American heart, sought to rescue this old woman, 67 years old, a war widow, from the agony of poverty or the humiliation of subsisting upon private charity. The President, exercising a constitutional power, interposed his objection. Let us, exercising an equal power, continue the good work we have begun and pass the bill, the veto to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, of course I recognize that it is futile for anyone to attempt to stay the mad career—and I measure my words, Mr. Speaker—to stay this House in its mad career regarding pensions. This pension, according to the report made (and I assume that the committee have made as good a report as possible), commends itself to neither the judgment nor the equity of this House. The services claimed to have been rendered by this gentleman were not in the faintest degree, by any reference, either long or distinguished. The late rebellion, as you well know, covered a period of four years of very bitter and sanguine war. Yet this gentleman's service extended over a period, according to the claim of the committee, of but nine months.

It is claimed that he was a soldier in the Mexican war. There are many remaining who were soldiers in the Mexican war. It is claimed that he served with distinguished gallantry in the late war, and that he participated at most in but one battle, and yet the committee have disdained to inform this Congress what that battle may have been.

It seems almost useless, Mr. Speaker, to waste my breath or the time of Congress in endeavoring to stop its mad career, but I say again, that there is nothing in this soldier's service which appeals to the judgment of this House to furnish a reason why it should grant this woman a pension above the amount given by law to three or four or five or six hundred thousand other widows throughout the length and breadth of this land.

Of course our friends on this side of the House, some of them, vote against the action of the President, as I have heard it intimated, because they oppose the President on some other proposition. Our friends upon the Republican side of the House override the veto in all pension cases because they believe in doing what they claim to be an act of justice to the long-suffering widows of the soldiers of the late war. While but $30 a month is involved in this case, and while there may have been many precedents set heretofore, still it never is too late for a legislative body, even in its dying hours, to express one sentiment of reason. For the many acts we have done here we shall receive the condemnation of the people. Can we not afford to leave one shining example that may be pointed out hereafter to our credit?

The gentleman who defends this claim likens this widow to the widow of General Grant, and to the widows of some other distinguished officers whom the mass of our people believe were great instrumental factors in saving this nation from destruction. Compare those cases with that of the widow of a gentleman who served for nine months during the late war, with distinguished gallantry, in one battle, which the committee evidently can not now discover or have forgotten!

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House on reconsideration agree to pass the bill, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding? On this, under the Constitution, the yeas and nays are ordered. Those who favor passing the bill, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding, will, when their names are called, say "aye;" those opposed, "no." The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 115, nays 79, not voting 161; as follows:

UNITED STATES COURTS OF UTAH.

Mr. BRODERICK. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a conference report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 2367) to provide times and places for holding terms of United States courts in Utah, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House and agree to the same.

CASE BRODERICK,
CHAS. G. BURTON,
J. W. BAILEY,
Managers on the part of the House.

GEO. F. HOAR,
FRANK J. CANNON,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the statement.

Mr. BRODERICK. That is all there is of it. The papers are in the Senate, and the report has been accepted by the Senate and the bill passed.

The SPEAKER. But there should be a statement, under the rules of the House, by the House conferees.

Mr. BRODERICK. The report was sent up. That is all the report that is made.

The SPEAKER. There should be a statement besides the conference report.

Mr. BRODERICK. The statement is that the Senate conferees receded, and that is all the statement that was necessary.

The SPEAKER. This is the conference report, and our rules require a statement.

Mr. BRODERICK. Senator HOAR superintended the matter, and said that was all that was necessary.

The SPEAKER. But this is a House rule. The Chair does not know whether it is a Senate rule or not; but the House rule is that in addition to the conference report there shall be a statement made by the House conferees in writing.

Mr. BRODERICK. If recommitted, perhaps the statement can be made.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can withdraw the conference report and afterwards submit it with a statement.

Mr. BRODERICK. I withdraw the report.

LUCY ALEXANDER PAYNE.

Mr. COFFIN. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill S. 1501, an act granting an increase of pension to Lucy Alexander Payne, widow of Capt. John Scott Payne, Fifth United States Cavalry, having met, after a full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendment.

CHARLES E. COFFIN,
J. C. C. BLACK,
WM. BAKER,
Managers on the part of the House.

W. N. ROACH,
H. C. HANSBROUGH,
W. A. PEFFER.
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. There is no statement by the conferees.

Mr. BLUE. Does a statement accompany that report?

Mr. COFFIN. There is no statement by the conferees.

The SPEAKE There is no written statement.

Mr. BLUE. n I object.

Mr. COFFIN. Will there have to be a written statement?

The SPEAKER. There has to be a written statement under the rules of the House. The gentleman withdraws the report.

ARTESIAN WATERS OF A PORTION OF THE DAKOTAS.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following report from the Committee on Printing.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent for the consideration of the report which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 2,000 additional copies of an extract from the Seventeenth Annual Report of the United States Geological Survey entitled "Preliminary report on artesian waters of a portion of the Dakotas," for distribution by the Geological Survey.

The report (by Mr. PERKINS) was read, as follows:

Your Committee on Printing, having had under consideration Senate concurrent resolution No. 55, to provide for the printing of 2,000 additional copies of an extract from the Seventeenth Annual Report of the United States Geological Survey entitled "Preliminary report on artesian waters of a portion of the Dakotas," for distribution by the Geological Survey, recommend that the same be agreed to.

The Public Printer estimates the cost of the work called for under this resolution at $465.

The SPEAKER. The question is on unanimous consent. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. PERKINS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the concurrent resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

CAPT. ALEXANDER M'DONALD.

Mr. WOODMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 5099) to correct and amend the military record of Capt. Alexander McDonald, of Company I, Seventeenth Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry.

The bill was read at length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. TALBERT. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

IMPROVEMENT OF GOVERNMENT RESERVATION, FORT SMITH, ARK.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2923) for the better improvement of the Government reservation at the city of Fort Smith, in the State of Arkansas, and for other purposes. The bill has heretofore been read twice in the House, and I have an amendment that I desire to propose, coming in at line 9, on page 2.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the bill must be read.

Mr. LITTLE. What I want to ask is simply for the bill to be read to where the amendment will come in, or read the entire bill, if gentlemen desire it to be read.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Let us have the bill read.

Mr. PAYNE. I understand the gentleman proposes to ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill as amended. I suggest that the bill be read as proposed to be amended.

Mr. LITTLE. That was what I was trying to have done.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill as the gentleman proposes to have it amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Rogers and Parker avenues, as the same appear on the map and plat of the reserve addition of the city of Fort Smith, Ark., be extended in a northwesterly direction and on a straight line to the right of way of the St. Louis and San Francisco Railway Company; and that Second street, as the same appears on the map and plat of the reserve addition of the city of Fort Smith, Ark., be extended on a straight line from Garrison avenue in a southwesterly direction to the right of way of the St. Louis and San Francisco Railway Company; and that Third street, as the same appears on the map and plat of the reserve addition of said city of Fort Smith, be extended in a straight line from Garrison avenue to the southwesterly line of Parker avenue; that the block of ground included within the boundaries of Rogers and Parker avenues and Second and Third streets, as thus extended by this act, it being a rectangular block 300 feet by 290 feet 2½ inches, and upon which block is located the public buildings, known as the United States jail and hospital, belonging to the United States, be, and the same is hereby, reserved to the United States.

That such part of said ground as shall be occupied for said streets and alleys is hereby donated to the said city of Fort Smith for the purpose of being dedicated to public use.

That said city of Fort Smith is hereby authorized and empowered to remove the old fort walls and buildings attached thereto, and to dispose of the same for its own use.

That the Secretary of the Interior shall cause said lands to be surveyed into lots and blocks, according to the plans and surveys of said city, and shall file a plat showing such survey in his office, and he shall cause the portions thereof not specifically reserved herein to be sold at public auction to the highest bidder, upon such terms and under such regulations as he may direct; and upon the full payment of the purchase money, execute proper conveyances to the purchaser or purchasers thereof.

The funds arising from the sale of said lots shall be kept separate, and so much thereof as is necessary is hereby appropriated for the erection of an iron fence or stone fence around the lot reserved for the jail and hospital, and for the grading and paving of the sidewalks around the same with stone flagging or some other suitable material, and pay the expense thereof out of the fund; and the remainder, if any, to be turned into the Treasury to the credit of the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I observe that the amendment turns over all the proceeds for the purpose of building a fence around the jail and hospital and paving the streets around the jail, something that the United States does in no other city. I do not know why it should be done for this city.

Mr. LITTLE. When this old wall is torn down it will leave the jail without any surrounding fence. The objection to the bill heretofore, as I understood, was that it donated certain lots of land to the city, and, for the purpose of meeting that objection, the bill has been changed so that it simply authorizes the erection of this fence around the jail and the flagging on the sidewalk around the jail block.

Mr. PAYNE. Does this jail belong to the city, or is it a county jail?

Mr. LITTLE. It is a Federal jail. That is why I put in this provision. It is quite a costly building, and the bill as originally drawn practically donated these lots to the city on condition that the city should make certain improvements around the Government property. It was thought, however, by some gentlemen here that the value of the lots would far exceed the cost of the improvements, and I am willing, if the gentleman prefers, that the provision for the paving of the sidewalks may be stricken out, leaving simply the provision for the building of the fence.

Mr. PAYNE. I think the gentleman had better strike it all out, and if we are going to build a fence there, let us appropriate a specific sum for that purpose.

Mr. LITTLE. Well, if the gentleman prefers it that way, I will accept the amendment, but it would be much better for the Government's property to have these improvements made at once.

Mr. PAYNE. Now, if the gentleman will amend his bill so as to direct that the proceeds of this sale shall be turned into the Treasury, I shall not object to its consideration.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that if the Government has any land, or any claim, left in Arkansas, we ought to turn it over immediately to the State or to the city. If there is anything left, I think Arkansas ought to have it. [Laughter.]

Mr. LITTLE. Arkansas is asking nothing in this case except the removal of an antiquated wall which has been there for fifty years, which blockades travel, and is an obstacle to good sanitary arrangements. Its removal has been recommended by all the court officials as well as by the city officials.

Mr. LOUD. About every week since I have been in Congress some gentleman from Arkansas has been asking for a United States reservation, or something of that kind. [Laughter.]

Mr. LITTLE. This "gentleman from Arkansas" has been asking for this bill quite persistently.

Mr. LOUD. And others.

Mr. LITTLE. No; not any donation.

Mr. LOUD. I think it would be much cheaper for us to turn over every claim the Government has in Arkansas to the State.

Mr. LITTLE. I will vote for that. [Laughter.]

Mr. PAYNE. If that had been done twenty years ago, it might have been the best course, but now it is too late. I have suggested an amendment to the bill, which I ask the Clerk to report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the last paragraph of the amendment by striking out lines 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, and 21, being the last paragraph, and insert the following:

"The fund arising from the sale of said lots shall be turned into the Treasury to the credit of the United States."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill as amended.

Mr. RINAKER. Mr. Speaker, does that take out the provision for the paving?

Mr. LITTLE. It takes out the entire matter of improvements.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. LITTLE, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

HOUSE BILLS WITH SENATE AMENDMENTS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House bills of the following titles, with amendments of the Senate thereto; which were severally read, and the Senate amendments concurred in:

A bill (H. R. 1104) granting a pension to Isaac M. Williams;

A bill (H. R. 1311) granting an increase of pension to Charles W. Sentman;

A bill (H. R. 5764) granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth D. Marthon;

A bill (H. R. 6789) granting a pension and for the relief of Dr. Harrison Wagner;

A bill (H. R. 8388) for the relief of William G. Buck;

A bill (H. R. 10040) granting a pension to George W. Ferree;

A bill (H. R. 5981) granting a pension to Elihu Jones; and

A bill (H. R. 5880) granting an increase of pension to Greenville Puckett.

ELIZABETH WELLANDS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a bill (H. R. 8898) to increase the pension of Elizabeth Wellands, with an amendment of the Senate thereto.

The bill was read.

The Senate amendment was read, as follows:

Line 5, after the words "widow of," insert "William S. Wellands."

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I move to concur in the Senate amendment. Its effect is merely to better identify the beneficiary.

The amendment was concurred in.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LOUD. If that completes the business on the Speaker's table, I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of committees for business in the morning hour, and the Clerk will proceed with the call.

The Committee on Patents was called.

INFRINGEMENT OF LETTERS PATENT.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. Speaker, I am instructed by the Committee on Patents to call up for consideration at this time the bill (H. R. 10202) defining the jurisdiction of United States circuit courts in cases brought for the infringement of letters patent.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in suits brought for the infringement of letters patent the circuit courts of the United States shall have jurisdiction, in law or in equity, in the district of which the defendant is an inhabitant, or in any district in which the defendant, whether a person, partnership, or corporation, shall have committed acts of infringement and have a regular and established place of business. If such suit is brought in a district of which the defendant is not an inhabitant, but in which such defendant has a regular and established place of business, service of process, summons, or subpœna upon the defendant may be made by service upon the agent or agents engaged in conducting such business in the district in which suit is brought.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, is that bill reported by the Committee on Patents?

Mr. MITCHELL. It is. I would like to have the report read as a part of my remarks.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Missouri that the bill is reported from the Committee on Patents.

Mr. DOCKERY. I would respectfully suggest to the Chair that the bill should have been considered by the Committee on the Judiciary. Evidently, from its reading, that committee would have had jurisdiction of it.

The SPEAKER. It is reported, however, by the Committee on Patents.

Mr. DOCKERY. Manifestly there was an improper reference of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not examined the bill with reference to that fact, but, if the reference is improper, this is not the time to correct it.

Mr. DOCKERY. That may be true under the rule.

But a further query. I would like to ask whether or not this is called up by the direction of the committee?

The SPEAKER. The Chair would ask the gentleman from New York whether this is called up by direction of the Committee on Patents in the morning hour?

Mr. MITCHELL. I was directed at the first opportunity, on the call of committees, to bring the bill up for consideration. It is a bill relating specifically to the patent law.

I ask to have the report read as a part of my remarks.

The report (by Mr. MITCHELL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10202) defining the jurisdiction of the United States circuit courts in cases brought for the infringement of letters patent, have carefully considered the same and report it favorably.

This bill seeks to define the jurisdiction of the courts in patent suits and to remove the uncertainty which now arises as to such jurisdiction by reason of the conflicting decisions of the various circuit courts. It further facilitates the bringing of suits in the place of business of the parties interested. It is in the interest of all and against the interest of none.

The committee therefore recommend its passage.

Mr. MITCHELL. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr LACEY] such time as he may desire.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I introduced this bill at the suggestion of a number of gentlemen who live in the Northwest, and who have interest in patent rights that are frequently infringed in distant localities, and yet the sales of the patented articles so infringed are largely, or mainly, made in the vicinity where the owners of the patent happen to be located. For instance, the manufactory may be established at some dista t point and the office where the goods are sold is opened in Chicago or in St. Louis or some other distant city. They have a permanent place of business at either city, and yet no relief can be had in the courts where the infringement is mainly carried on.

The main purpose of the bill is to give original jurisdiction to the court where a permanent agency transacting the business is located, and that business is engaged in the infringement of the patent rights of some one who has such rights anywhere in the United States.

Jurisdiction would be had thus in Chicago, St. Louis, or any Western city if the manufacturer is established there, or if there is a permanent agency there, but not otherwise. It provides that the court shall have jurisdiction in the district of which the defendant is an inhabitant, and that is the existing law now, or—

In any district in which the defendant, whether a person, partnership, or corporation, shall have committed acts of infringement and have a regular and established place of business.

That is all there is of it. Isolated cases of infringement would not confer this jurisdiction, but only where a permanent agency is established.

I yield back the remainder of the time to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. Speaker, the necessity for this law grows out of the acts of 1887 and 1888 which amended the judiciary act. Conflicting decisions have even arisen in the different districts in the same States as to the construction of these acts of 1887 and 1888, and there is great uncertainty throughout the country as to whether or not the act of 1887 as amended by the act of 1888 applied to patent cases at all.

The bill is intended to remove this uncertainty and to define the exact jurisdiction of the circuit courts in these matters.

The committee have been extremely careful in the investigation of the matter before reporting the bill.

As the bill was referred to me, I wrote to a great many patent lawyers in different parts of the country, in order to get their views and objections, if any, and I find that they are all unanimously in favor of the bill as it is now reported, and state that it would tend not only to define the jurisdiction of the circuit courts not now defined, but also limit that jurisdiction and so clearly define it that in the future there will be no question with regard to the application of the acts of 1887 and 1888.

Mr. PAYNE. I should like to ask the gentleman what conflicting decisions there are that are to be remedied by this bill?

Mr. MITCHELL. We have in New York the case of Halstead vs. Manning, Bowman & Co., which was decided April 13, 1888 (34 Fed. Rep., 565), in which Judge Wallace renders a decision that prior to the act of 1887 the defendant could have been sued there "if found." In other words, that the foreign corporation could have been sued "if found" within the jurisdiction, but the defendant can no longer be sued outside of the district of which he is an inhabitant. Then we find, for instance, the case of Smith vs. The Sargent Manufacturing Company, May 18, 1895, where Judge Wheeler holds that the acts of 1887 and 1888 do not apply to suits for infringement of patent, and such suits may be brought wherever service can be had.

We also have in the district of Massachusetts decisions by Judge Colt in several cases holding that the act of 1888 applies to patent cases and that a foreign corporation can not be sued is his district, and we have in the districts of Ohio and California decisions exactly to the contrary, namely, that in patent cases it is no objection to the jurisdiction that one of the defendants is a citizen of another State.

The following tables of cases show the conflict of decisions in detail:

Circuit courts holding that the laws of 1887, as amended by the laws of 1888 (giving jurisdiction to United States circuit courts), apply to patent cases.

FIRST CIRCUIT.

District of Massachusetts:
National Typewriter Company vs. Pope Manufacturing Company. July 5, 1893. 56 Fed. Rep., 849. Colt, circuit judge.
Holds: Under recent decisions of the Supreme Court, a foreign corporation can not be sued for infringement of patent in this district.
Donnelly vs. United States Cordage Company. March 16, 1895. 66 Fed. Rep., 613. Colt, judge.
Follows Shaw vs. Mining Company.
Gorham Manufacturing Company vs. Watson. May 20, 1896. 74 Fed. Rep., 418. Colt, circuit judge.
Follows Donnelly vs. United States Cordage Company, supra.

SECOND CIRCUIT.

Southern district of New York:
Halstead vs. Manning, Bowman & Co. April 13, 1888. 34 Fed. Rep., 565. Wallace, circuit judge.
Prior to act of 1887 the defendant could have been sued here, if "found," but * * * defendant can no longer be sued outside the district of which he is an inhabitant.
Northern district of New York:
Adriane Platt & Co. vs. McCormick Harvesting Manufacturing Company. October 13, 1892. 55 Fed. Rep., 287. Wallace, circuit judge.
Follows ruling Shaw vs. Mining Company, 145 U. S., 444.

SIXTH CIRCUIT.

Southern district of Ohio:
Miller Magee Company et al. vs. Carpenter. February 29, 1888. 34 Fed. Rep., 433. Jackson, judge.
Holds: Neither Revised Statutes United States, section 711 nor section 699, was repealed by act of 1875 nor by act of 1887, which only amends former acts.

SEVENTH CIRCUIT.

District of Illinois:
Gormully & Jeffery Manufacturing Company vs. Pope Manufacturing Company. May 14, 1888. 34 Fed. Rep., 818. Blodgett, judge.
Holds: No jurisdiction in patent case for infringement by Illinois corporation against Connecticut corporation doing business in Illinois.
Preston vs. Fire Extinguisher Company. November 5, 1888. 36 Fed. Rep., 721. Blodgett, judge.
Holds: New York corporation doing business in Illinois can not be sued in Illinois.
Bicycle Stepladder Company vs. Gordon. September 11, 1893. 57 Fed. Rep., 529. Jenkins, circuit judge.
Follows ruling in Shaw vs. Mining Company, 145 U. S., 446.

EIGHTH CIRCUIT.

Eastern district of Missouri:
Reinstadler vs. Reeves. December 30, 1887. 33 Fed. Rep., 306. Thayer, judge.
Holds: Bill to restrain infringements in Missouri against a citizen of Indiana can not be maintained.
Southern district of Iowa:
McBride vs. Grand de Tour Plow Company. October 18, 1889. 40 Fed. Rep., 162. Shiras, judge.
Holds: Had the defendant company (Illinois corporation), when it was first sued by Iowa complainant, raised the question of jurisdiction, "it may be its contention would have been sustained."

NINTH CIRCUIT.

Northern district of California:
Cramer vs. Singer Manufacturing Company. November 27, 1893. 59 Fed. Rep., 74. McKenna, circuit judge.
Quotes act of 1888 and follows Shaw vs. Mining Company, supra.

Circuit courts holding that the laws of 1887, as amended by laws of 1888 (giving jurisdiction to United States circuit courts), do not apply to patent cases.

SECOND CIRCUIT.

Southern district of New York:
Smith vs. Sargent Manufacturing Company. May 18, 1895. 67 Fed. Rep., 801. Wheeler, district judge.
Holds: That acts of 1887 and 1888 do not apply to suits for infringement of patents, and such suits may be brought wherever personal service can be had; and quotes In re Hohorst, 150 U. S., 653.
National Button Works vs. Wade. February 1, 1896. 72 Fed. Rep., 208. Lacombe, circuit judge.
Refers to act of 1887 and to In re Hohorst, 14 Superior Court, 221; 150 U. S., 653; and doubts whether distinction raised In re Hohorst can be sustained in view of later decision of United States court In re Keasbey vs. Matheson.
(Contra. Townsend, district judge, January 23, 1895.)

SIXTH CIRCUIT.

Southern district of Ohio:
Noonan vs. Chester Park Athletic Club. June 23, 1896. 73 Fed. Rep., 334. Sage, district judge.
Holds: In patent cases it is no objection to the jurisdiction that one of the defendants is a citizen of another State and district than that in which suit is brought, citing In re Hohorst and In re Keasbey.

NINTH CIRCUIT.

Northern district of California:
Earl vs. Southern Pacific Company. August 17, 1896. 75 Fed. Rep., 609. Morrow, district judge.
Acts of 1887-88 do not apply to patent suits, quoting In re Hohorst and In re Keasbey vs. Matheson.

Mr. PAYNE. That would be covered entirely by a law providing that suits might be brought wherever the defendant could be found or wherever he has a residence. In order to get rid of these conflicting decisions it would not be necessary to go further than that, but, as I understand the bill, it not only provides for that, but also that a suit may be brought in any jurisdiction where the defendant has an established place of business, by leaving the subpœna of the court at his place of business.

Mr. LACEY. Not unless the acts of infringement were also committed in that jurisdiction.

Mr. PAYNE. If these two things concur?

Mr. LACEY. Yes.

Mr. PAYNE. Of course that part of it is not necessary in order to avoid the conflicting decisions of the courts, but there seems to be some other object to be obtained by extending it to that class of cases. Now, if my colleague will allow me, I am not able to see why cases of infringement of patents should be taken out of the law and a special rule adopted as to them. I do not see but what the remedy that is good for one citizen in a particular class of cases should be good for all citizens in all classes of cases, so far as jurisdiction and the commencement of the action are concerned. If this bill simply went to the extent of providing that in all cases the courts might obtain jurisdiction by a personal service of the process of the court within the Territory, or in cases of attachment or cases of that kind, in the Territory where the person resided or was an inhabitant, I should not object to it, but the idea of going still further than that and giving the court jurisdiction where a man has a place of business at which it is claimed that he had sold some patented article which infringed the rights of some patentee, it seems to me is going too far and making an exception in patent cases that does not obtain in any other case, and to which it is not proposed to extend it in any other case of the violation of private rights. It seems to me that it is going too far.

Mr. MITCHELL. In answer to the remarks of my learned colleague from New York, I would state that I think he will find, on a careful examination of this bill as it is reported, that it does not extend, but on the contrary that it defines, the jurisdiction of the courts, and places all in the same category and clears an omission in the act of 1887-88.

Mr. PAYNE. Does the gentleman claim that under the present law an action could be brought where the defendant simply had a principal place of business and the act of infringement was committed in the same jurisdiction? Does the gentleman claim that an action would lie or could be brought there against the defendant without personal service of the process upon him within that jurisdiction?

Mr. MITCHELL. I do not think the gentleman clearly understands the effect of this bill. It says:

That in suits brought for the infringement of letters patent the circuit courts of the United States shall have jurisdiction, in law or in equity, in the district of which the defendant is an inhabitant, or in any district in which the defendant, whether a person, partnership, or corporation, shall have committed acts of infringement and have a regular and established place of business.

And further provided—

If such suit is brought in a district of which defendant is not an inhabitant, but in which such defendant has a regular and established place of business, service of process, summons, or subpœna upon the defendant may be made by service upon the agent or agents engaged in conducting such business in the district in which suit is brought.

Mr. PAYNE. They could not now commence an action within the jurisdiction named under the last clause.

Mr. MITCHELL. There was an amendment which was suggested, that the word "and," in line 8, should be stricken out and the word "or" substituted for it. We are not in favor of that, because then the reading of this would be that the defendant could be sued either where he committed the act of infringement or where he had a place of business.

Mr. PAYNE. I understand that the two things must concur now.

Mr. MITCHELL. So that in this case you have the party who is charged with committing the wrong sued in the district in which he has committed the act of infringement, and in which he has a place of business. Under the line of decisions which permit his being sued anywhere "if found," this act makes it easier for the defendant, and really limits to that extent the jurisdiction of the court; for instance, Halstead vs. Manning, Bowman & Co., Adriane Platt & Co. vs. McCormick Harvesting Company, supra.

Mr. PAYNE. In a decision up to date is it not held that he would not be amenable to the jurisdiction of a court in a territory in which he had a principal office and had committed an infringement of patent?

Mr. MITCHELL. Judge Wallace has held in this decision that the defendant may be sued wherever he may be found.

Mr. PAYNE. Certainly; that is a different thing. That is the personal service on him. You are extending it in this case.

Mr. MITCHELL. Well, I do not see that there is an extension of the provisions of the law. The trouble has arisen in this matter that under the act of 1888 some of the courts were uncertain whether or not the law did or did not apply to patent cases, and therefore this special bill relating to patents solely has been brought up because of the indefiniteness and uncertainty arising from different constructions of the act of 1888 as applied to patent cases.

Mr. PAYNE. Why, if you do not mean anything, why not have it wherever a man be found, by serving personal process upon him or in the territory where he resides. You go beyond that, and extend it to territory wherever he is found, not an inhabitant or a resident, but where he has a business office, and has committed, through agents or otherwise, an infringement.

Mr. MITCHELL. At the request of the gentleman from Iowa, I will yield to my friend from Iowa.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I understand the bill does mean something. It means that where there is an established place of business and an infringement——

Mr. PAYNE. I agree with you about that.

Mr. LACEY. Jurisdiction may be had there. That is one of the purposes of the bill. There is no question about that, and there ought to be a law of that character. We have now a law by which, if an insurance company shall have an agency and transact business in some other State, jurisdiction may be had in regard to business growing out of the transactions of that agency; and so as to carriers performing service in any State and having permanent place of business there, they may be sued there. There is no reason why as broad a jurisdiction should not be had in cases of patents, if infringers open up a permanent place of business—commence their business at that place. Why not give the court jurisdiction to try that case where the individual resides, where the witnesses are? Should not the local court have control of the matter, with the strong arm of the law on the one hand and the restraining power of a court of equity on the other? Because this necessity arose we have this bill. Very frequently an infringing agency is the principal place of business. When the party defendant who nominally infringes the patent lives in one place, but the real place where the business is carried on is at another, at present the place of the defendant's residence alone gives jurisdiction. Business is going West, and a little plant on the seaboard often grows into a tremendous institution when it goes to Chicago and the great interior places where the population resides; and to deprive the courts of that community of jurisdiction would work hardship by reason of the expense that it would cause of having to take depositions or transport witnesses a thousand miles in the trial of a case. Why not have the trial where the transaction occurs? The jurisdiction under this bill only applies to the permanent place of business, or where the business is in existence.

Mr. DALZELL. Why not have a man punishable at the place where he commits the wrong?

Mr. LACEY. Why not?

Mr. DALZELL. The same principle applies, precisely.

Mr. LACEY. The principle is the same. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman from Iowa has withdrawn the principal argument raised by my colleague from New York, and also in the report, that this does not extend the present law, but was simply a little innocent bill, seeking to give right effect to a decision of a court. My friend from Iowa puts this on a higher ground, that this is a great contest of localities, the growing West against the East.

Mr. DALZELL. The "effete East."

Mr. PAYNE. Which is gradually becoming so and dying out, and all that sort of thing. The West is really the equal of the East in this matter.

Mr. DALZELL. You do not controvert that.

Mr. PAYNE. How can I controvert anything said by my friend from Iowa, after he has laid it down in the manner he has. I remember a contest in this House a few years ago, which was also a contest of the West against the East, in reference to patent matters; and there the West was trying to deprive the owner of the patent of any remedy whatever. I think the provision was that, unless the amount of damages awarded should exceed $25 in each case, the unfortunate individual who owned the patent was to be mulcted in costs, so that in most cases the costs would probably be equal to or greater than the amount of damages. It appeared to be held then—I suppose it was a sort of wild Western idea—that a man who owned a patent was a kind of robber who was inflicting injury on his neighbors in the West, collecting money that he ought not to have, and that he ought to be deprived of all legal remedy.

Mr. DALZELL. Does the gentleman recollect whether our friend from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] had any part in that movement?

Mr. PAYNE. I think my friend [Mr. HENDERSON] was right in with those who took that ground. [Laughter.]

Mr. HENDERSON. Surely the statute of limitation runs on that. [Laughter.]

Mr. PAYNE. Now, I welcome this bill as evidence of a change of heart. I am glad to see that it recognizes the right of property in patents, and while I think the bill travels, perhaps, a little out of the way and puts the owner of a patent in a little better position than the owner of any other kind of property, yet, when I observe the change that has come over the spirit of our Western friends in this regard, on the whole I welcome this bill, and the last exception of the gentleman from Iowa, showing that this is a sectional matter, induces me to vote against my own section and in favor of his. [Laughter.]

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. Speaker, I am very glad that I withdrew the demand for the previous question. I now ask for the previous question, and I also ask leave to print further remarks in relation to the cases which I have here.

The previous question was ordered.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. LACEY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The call of committees was completed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I am requested to ask unanimous consent of the House to consider the bill which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not recognize the gentleman for that purpose. [Laughter.] The gentleman from New York [Mr. DANIELS] is recognized.

DIGEST OF ELECTION CASES.

Mr. DANIELS. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Elections No. 1 have unanimously adopted the resolution which I send to the desk and recommend its adoption by the House. I have here and will send to the desk what is substantially a repetition of it, a resolution to be adopted by the House providing for the publication of a digest of the election cases heard and decided in the Fifty-third and Fifty-fourth Congresses. It is estimated that about two fair-sized volumes will be required to contain all the cases. Some very important questions have been disposed of from time to time by the House in these cases, and such a digest can not fail to be of great value hereafter in the determination of election cases where similar principles will be involved, as they necessarily must be in such contests. I now send to the desk the resolution which I propose to have adopted by the House to carry into effect the resolution of the Committee on Elections.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the resolution by the Committee on Elections No. 1 for digesting the election cases heard and decided by the House of Representatives of the Fifty-third and Fifty-fourth Congresses, and reported by the Election Committees to the House of Representatives, be, and the same is hereby, adopted.

Mr. DANIELS. Now, I ask the Clerk to read the resolution therein referred to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That there be made, printed, and bound, a digest of the election cases heard and decided by the Fifty-third and Fifty-fourth Congresses of the United States, consisting of a concise statement of each case, the report made by the Committee on Elections thereon, and the final action of the House thereon, together with an accurate and complete index of the same, to be prepared by William A. Martin, clerk to the Committee on Elections No. 1, for which, and for the necessary preparation and superintendence thereof, there shall be paid said William A. Martin, by the Clerk of the House, out of the contingent fund, the sum of $2,000; said sum to be paid when the manuscript of the work shall have been delivered to the Public Printer, who shall furnish for the use of the House the usual number, viz, 1,607 copies for each of the above-named Congresses.

This resolution was adopted by the Committee on Elections No. 1, and its adoption by the House was unanimously recommended.

CHARLES DANIELS, Chairman.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, I think that would be a complete waste of the public money.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I suggest to the gentleman from New York that his resolution would not accomplish the object anyway. It is a simple House resolution, and the House alone can not order printing to exceed $500 in cost, so that the resolution, if passed, would be void.

Mr. BAILEY. And if the work were done it would be worse than void.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of these resolutions?

Mr. BAILEY. I object.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

At the request of Mr. ANDREWS, to Mr. HAINER of Nebraska, on account of sickness.

At the request of Mr. MOODY, to Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts, on account of sickness.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now take a recess until 8 o'clock this evening, to meet then under the special order.

Mr. MILNES. Mr. Speaker, I suppose the motion to take a recess is with the idea of having a pension session this evening.

Mr. PAYNE. Yes.

Mr. MILNES. Well, I believe it will be entirely impossible to do anything this evening. We accomplished nothing last evening. I move, therefore, that the House do now adjourn.

The question being taken on the motion to adjourn, the Speaker declared that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. MILNES. I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 51, noes 72.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, pending the motion for a recess, I ask unanimous consent that the business under special order for this evening commence now and run until 5 o'clock p. m., and that the order for the evening session be vacated.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

[Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the unfinished business.

HANNAH E. RODGERS.

The first unfinished business was the bill (H. R. 1832) granting a pension to Hannah E. Rodgers.

Mr. CROWTHER. I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice, retaining its place on the Calendar.

The SPEAKER. In the absence of objection, that order will be made.

There was no objection.

ELLEN DAY.

The next unfinished business was the bill (H. R. 6803) granting a pension to Ellen Day, stepmother of Albert L. Day.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER. This is a bill laid aside on a previous day upon a demand for the engrossed copy of the bill. The engrossed bill has now been read. The question is on its passage.

The bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. BROMWELL, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CAROLINE WILKINSON.

The next unfinished business was the bill (H. R. 1513) granting a pension to Caroline Wilkinson.

The bill was read.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. I ask that this bill be laid aside.

There being no objection, it was so ordered.

RACHEL WADDELL.

The next unfinished business was the bill (H. R. 9683) granting a pension to Rachel Waddell, of Newport, Tenn.

The bill, together with the amendments reported by the Committee of the Whole, was read.

Mr. MILNES. This bill belongs to the same class as the one just laid aside. I ask that this also be laid aside.

Mr. ANDERSON. I object.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Then I move that the bill be laid aside.

The motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM N. WELLS.

The next unfinished business was the bill (H. R. 6268) to increase the pension of William N. Wells.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER. This is an engrossed bill which has been read. The question is on its passage.

The bill was passed.

JOHN J. CROSS.

The next unfinished business was the bill (H. R. 2321) to increase the pension of John J. Cross.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER. This is an engrossed bill which has been read. The question is now on its passage.

The bill was passed.

MARY L. TWEDDLE.

The next unfinished business was the bill (H. R. 5793) granting a pension to Mary L. Tweddle.

The bill was read.

Mr. TALBERT. I ask for the reading of the report.

The report was read.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Speaker, as has been shown by the reading of the report, the husband of this woman was not considered as having any pensionable rate at the Pension Bureau. Then, again, this woman married after the act of June 29, 1890, which specially provided that no marriage after that act should entitle the widow to a pension. It seems, therefore, that the passage of this bill would be in direct violation of specific and definite law. The question is whether this House will abide by the law in this case or override it. I move that the bill be laid on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

ANTON ERNST.

The next unfinished business was the bill (H. R. 8075) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Anton Ernst.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering this bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time.

The question being taken on the passage of the bill, there were, on a division (called for by Mr. TALBERT)—ayes 50, noes 2.

Mr. TALBERT. No quorum.

The SPEAKER proceeded to count the House.

Mr. TALBERT (before the result of the count was announced). Mr. Speaker, I have no disposition to block business. If the gentleman in charge of this bill will allow it to be passed over without prejudice, I am perfectly willing. This is not a meritorious bill.

The SPEAKER. There is a quorum present. The ayes have it; and the bill is passed.

HARRIET M. KNOWLTON.

The next unfinished business was the bill (S. 719) to restore a pension to Harriet M. Knowlton.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER. This is a Senate bill, and the question is on ordering it to a third reading.

Mr. ERDMAN. I ask for the reading of the report.

The report was read.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is now on the passage of the bill.

Mr. TALBERT. I move that the bill be laid on the table. One similar to this—the case of a remarried widow—was laid on the table.

The question being taken on the motion to lay the bill on the table, it was rejected; there being—ayes 27, noes 49.

The bill was then passed.

PETER ANDERSON.

The next unfinished business was the bill (H. R. 2035) granting an increase of pension to Peter Anderson, of Strong City, Kans.

The bill, with the amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole House, was read.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the amendment to the title of this bill, as recommended by the committee, will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill and joint resolution of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 10278) to reorganize the judicial districts of Arkansas, and for other purposes; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 252) authorizing the Secretary of War to deliver to the mayor of Buffalo tents, in loan, for the convenience of the Grand Army of the Republic at its annual encampment, to be held this year at that city.

The message also announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3614) to aid in the improvement of the navigable channel of the South Pass by closing the existing crevasse in Pass a Loutre, in the Mississippi River, asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. CAFFERY, Mr. NELSON, and Mr. VEST as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the President of the United States having returned to the Senate, in compliance with its request, the bill (S. 3328) to amend an act entitled "An act to repeal the timber-culture laws, and for other purposes," the Senate had proceeded to reconsider said bill, and had resolved that it had disagreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to said bill, asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. PETTIGREW, Mr. BERRY, and Mr. CARTER as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

WASHINGTON BAKER.

The next unfinished business was the bill (H. R. 4517) granting a pension to Washington Baker, reported from the Committee of the Whole with amendments.

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the report in that case be read.

The report was again read.

The amendments were concurred in, and the bill as amended ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

JOHN M. LAUGHLIN.

The next unfinished business was the bill (H. R. 7688) for the relief of John M. Laughlin, reported from the Committee of the Whole with an amendment.

The amendment was read and agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

HENRY O. HYRE.

The next unfinished business was the bill (H. R. 7079) to increase the pension of Henry O. Hyre, reported from the Committee of the Whole with an amendment.

The amendment was read and agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

SOLOMON KLINE.

The next unfinished business was the bill (H. R. 7073) to increase the pension of Solomon Kline, reported from the Committee of the Whole with an amendment.

Mr. ERDMAN. I ask for the reading of the report in that case.

The report was again read.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to, and the bill as amended ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM C. ESTILL.

The next business reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 6497) granting a pension to William C. Estill, with the recommendation that the bill do lie on the table.

The question was taken; and the recommendation of the committee was concurred in.

The bill was accordingly laid on the table.

GEORGE F. MILLER.

The next unfinished business was the bill (H. R. 2153) to amend the military record of George F. Miller, reported from the Committee of the Whole with an amendment.

Mr. TALBERT. I would ask to have the report in that case read.

The report was read at length.

Mr. TALBERT. I move that that bill lie on the table.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TALBERT) there were—ayes 9, noes 50.

Mr. TALBERT. No quorum.

The SPEAKER (having counted the House). One hundred and seventy-four members are present; not a quorum.

Mr. TALBERT. I am not trying to block legislation. If the committee will withdraw the bill, I will withdraw the point.

The SPEAKER. It is not possible for the gentleman to withdraw it after the count.

Mr. TALBERT. I am only desirous of getting rid of these outrageous bills——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is not in order.

Under the rules, the previous question will be considered as ordered, and the yeas and nays will be taken. The Clerk will call the roll.

The Chair will state that members who are present and desire to vote either for or against the proposition will be so recorded. Those who desire to be simply recorded as present will so respond. The doors will now be closed, and the Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. TALBERT. I wish to submit a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TALBERT. I would like to ask if the vote is not now to be taken on the motion to lay on the table?

The SPEAKER. That is the question.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 51, nays 143, not voting 161; as follows:

YEAS—51.

Abbott,	Crisp,	Little,	Pendleton,

So the motion that the bill lie on the table was rejected.

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

Until further notice:

Mr. MCCALL of Massachusetts with Mr. JONES.

For the remainder of this day:

Mr. HULING of West Virginia with Mr. MOSES.

The following members were recorded as present:

Messrs. BAKER of Kansas, BELKNAP, BOATNER, BRODERICK, COFFIN, COOPER of Florida, DENNY, FOWLER, HANLY, HEMENWAY, JOHNSON of Indiana, JOHNSON of North Dakota, KEM, KENDALL, LAWSON, LEIGHTY, LOUD, MCCALL of Massachusetts, MCCALL of Tennessee, MINOR of Wisconsin, PRICE, SMITH of Illinois, MILLER of West Virginia, SPARKMAN, and WASHINGTON.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Speaker, I demand the reading of the engrossed copy of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina demands the reading of the engrossed copy. The bill will have to be laid aside, and the Clerk will report the next bill.

NATHAN MITCHELL.

The next business considered was the bill (H. R. 5612) granting a pension to Nathan Mitchell.

The bill was read.

Mr. TALBERT. Let us have the report read.

The report (by Mr. HARDY) was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. LOUD. I should like to ask if this is one of those bills to pension a teamster. That is what it seems to be.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Oh, no; I beg the gentleman's pardon——

Mr. LOUD. Well, perhaps there is even some question about his having been a teamster. I will admit that.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. He accompanied General Taylor's army from Corpus Christi to the Rio Grande, I will say to the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD].

Mr. LOUD. Of course the records show that this man never had any service, and all that the report claims is that he had charge of a body of teamsters, and some individual states that he served in a battle somewhere, but he does not seem to know where. That is about the substance of the report, is it not?

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. The report sets forth his service as given by General Prevost, and also other affidavits which are on file. There is a letter of F. V. Britton, late an officer of the United States Army, dated Rancho, near Corpus Christi, Tex., January 7, 1859, in which he certifies that Mr. Mitchell was reported to him (Britton) at Fort Brown as having been placed in command of all unattached teamsters, convalescents, etc., for service in the defense of the fort, and that he (Mitchell) served faithfully in battle, as well as in every other situation his duties to the Government placed him.

Gen. D. E. Twiggs, late of the Army, also certifies, under date of December 18, 1858, to the fact of claimant's participation in the defense of Fort Brown. There is other evidence of the service.

While I can not recall all the affidavits on file, yet I know that the examination was full and satisfactory to the committee, and his war record was clearly made out.

Mr. LOUD. Does it not seem very strange to the gentleman who is chairman of a committee that deals with these cases, that there should be no record of a man who, it is claimed, was regularly enlisted and regularly discharged? Is not that assuming that there is no record of such an event, and that we must come here and present to Congress simply the affidavit of some individual whom nobody knows anything about to testify to the service?

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. It may appear strange to the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD]——

Mr. LOUD. Well, yes, it does.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. NOONAN] introduced this bill. Perhaps he is more conversant with the facts than I am.

Mr. NOONAN. The bill, as presented, is, in my judgment, a meritorious one. I think the report of the committee can be verified and has been verified in many ways. This man is entitled to the pension that he asks. He really acted as an officer in that campaign. The gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD] asks why the records do not show that. Now, I have no personal experience in the matter; but I am told by those who were there that in the time of the Mexican war, and especially on the frontier of Texas, they were not always so particular about the keeping of records. He was at Fort Brown as a clerk in the first instance, and afterwards was designated to perform duty as a ranger, which he did. All those who are familiar with the condition of affairs there at that time verify what I have stated about the difficulty of obtaining precise records. I think gentlemen are hypercritical when they ask that these things be verified at this late day. It is true that he was not upon the muster roll; but he was designated to perform this duty and did perform it as directed by his superior officer, and his action was considered meritorious at that time by the officer in command. I think the House, in its discretion, which we are compelled to exercise in cases of this character, ought to grant what is asked for in this case. It is only $8 a month. The man is now nearly blind, and he performed the duty to which he was assigned by his superior. The man was a soldier and is entitled to this relief.

Mr. LOUD. I have not yielded the floor. I find in the report that in the spring of 1846 this man accompanied General Taylor's army from Corpus Christi, Tex., to the Rio Grande, in the capacity of forage master. Subsequently—and this is the only specially meritorious service that I find referred to in the report—it is stated that he had command of a lot of teamsters somewhere when the Mexican war was going on. Anybody who knows anything about the records of Government service knows that where a man was properly enlisted and properly discharged there must be a record of that event.

Now, even the War Department states emphatically that there is no record as to this man's service. The gentleman assumes to say that is not very strange, because that was a long time ago; yet permit me to say to-day that there is a most perfect record of any man who ever was legitimately in the service during the Revolutionary war. It is true that many cases are presented to Congress where men were called out for five or ten days in some imaginary emergency and that there is no record of their service; but I say it is a matter of impossibility, which the gentleman himself must well know, to erase by time any of the official records of the War Department. I do not know but what this is about as good a case as the average. I think, perhaps, it has a little more merit in the sympathetic line, because the gentleman is old; but that is the only merit—that this man wants it, and is old.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the gentleman from California would not desire to mislead the House.

Mr. LOUD. No; I want to be perfectly frank and take the evidence we have.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Still I am inclined to think that the selection by the gentleman of that portion of the report which he has read might mislead the House. It is true the beneficiary was connected with the Quartermaster's Department as forage master, but in the report, and but a few lines below, it makes a statement that he was mustered into the service as a private.

Mr. LOUD. But you can not prove that. That is simply a statement of your committee. You offer no evidence to prove that; and I say if he was mustered into the service, that it is impossible that the records of the War Department should not show that fact.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. If the gentleman will pardon me, I was about to show him how much proof was on file in regard to that statement.

Mr. LOUD. That is what I want.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER (reading):

He was mustered into the service as private of Capt. Sam H. Walker's company of scouts.

That company was ordered out on the bombardment of Fort Brown and entered into that eight days' engagement. Now, that statement of the committee and the report of the committee as made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HARDY] are based upon the facts set forth in the letters of F. V. Britton, an officer of the United States Army, and are based upon his statement of the fact that that soldier was there.

Mr. LOUD. Do you know this officer?

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. I do not know him.

Mr. LOUD. That is simply a statement of some individual that you know nothing about.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Not at all.

Mr. LOUD. And you place against the most perfect records of the War Department simply the unsubstantiated statement of a person whom you do not know and have no knowledge of his existence.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. This is a declaration that he was an enlisted man. It does say he was mustered into the service at that special time and did perform service for his Government at the bombardment of that fort.

Mr. LOUD. That is, this eight days?

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. That eight days' engagement.

Mr. LOUD. That would not entitle him to a pension in any event.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. I beg leave to state that he did more and longer service than that in that company of scouts.

Mr. NOONAN. Mr. Speaker, I am not familiar with the rules that prevailed at that time or the regulations of the War Department; but I do know, from my association with this man and those who acted with him, that he was a soldier and acted in that capacity. There was at that time an exigent necessity for some man to take command of these troops. This man was specially called upon, and this man did serve and receive the commendation of his officers. Every man who discharges duty of that kind in such an emergency is entitled to consideration when he applies for a pension.

Mr. LOUD. Where are those commendations? They do not seem to appear here.

Mr. NOONAN. The report is probably not as full as it might have been; but I know the man. He is an old, substantial citizen and was a soldier at that time. He discharged many arduous duties on that frontier. Now he is totally blind and he ought to have this pension. To refuse him $8 a month I think is getting hypercritical upon the question of pensions. I know him personally, and saw him.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. I desire to say to the gentleman from California that this statement is backed up by Gen. D. E. Twiggs.

Mr. LOUD. Who is he?

Mr. NOONAN. The gentleman, if he is familiar with the military records of the country, ought to know General Twiggs. At one time he commanded that department.

Mr. LOUD. I know, but he died a great many years ago, if I remember correctly.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. And his statement was made a great many years ago.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. NOONAN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MRS. JULIA JONES DUNCAN.

The next unfinished business was the bill (S. 1975) granting a pension to Mrs. Julia Jones Duncan, reported from the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Speaker, if the report in that case is not very long, I desire to have it read.

The report was read.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

WESLEY A. PLETCHER.

The next unfinished business was the bill (H. R. 5183) granting an increase of pension to Wesley A. Pletcher, reported from the Committee of the Whole with an amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

ALBERT BROWN.

The next unfinished business was the bill (H. R. 7647) granting a pension of $30 per month to Albert Brown, reported from the Committee of the Whole with amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

MRS. HELEN A. DE RUSSY.

The next unfinished business was the bill (H. R. 6159) to increase the pension of Mrs. Helen A. De Russy, reported from the Committee of the Whole with amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The question being taken on ordering the bill to be read a third time, the Speaker pro tempore declared that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. MILNES. I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 44, noes 2.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

GROTIUS N. UDELL.

The next unfinished business was the bill (H. R. 3605) granting a pension to Grotius N. Udell, reported from the Committee of the Whole with amendments.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Grotius N. Udell, late of Company B, Sixth Regiment Iowa Infantry, and pay him a pension of $50 per month from and after the passage of this act, in lieu of the pension he is now receiving, for total inability to perform manual labor.

Mr. ERDMAN. I call for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. ANDREWS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3605) granting a pension to Grotius M. Udell, late a private in Company D, Sixth Iowa Volunteer Infantry, having carefully examined all the facts and circumstances in evidence, submit the following report:

Soldier served from July 17, 1860, until January 5, 1863. He filed claim and was pensioned from January 6, 1863, at $8 per month, for seven gunshot wounds in right shoulder, right lung and arm, and results. His pension was increased to $18 per month from April 15, 1874, and increased to $24 a month from March 3, 1883, and increased to $36 a month commencing September 7, 1892. His claim for $50 a month was rejected January 25, 1895, for failure to show a degree of disability which would entitle him to $50 a month.

The evidence shows that the injuries from which the claimant suffers were received at the battle of Shiloh, April 6, 1862.

Drs. John W. Webb, A. W. Coleman, and W. A. Boyden, reputable citizens and excellent physicians of Denver, Colo., testify that claimant is totally disabled and helpless, and that he requires the constant attention of one person; and the board of examining surgeons, under date of September 7, 1892, say, after describing the wounds: "The claimant is so disabled from his three gunshot wounds and other injuries described as to be incapacitated for any manual labor. He requires the aid of another person in feeding and dressing himself. He requires frequent and periodical, though not regular and constant, aid and attendance of another person, and we recommend a rating of $50 intermediate between first and second grade."

In view of all the facts we believe him entitled to a pension of $50 per month. We therefore recommend that the bill be amended by inserting the word "private" between the words "late" and "of," in line 6, and by striking out the words "from and after the passage of this act," in line 8, and by striking out all words after the word "receiving," in the ninth line of said bill, and as so amended that the bill do pass.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendments.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask to move that this bill be amended so as to grant a pension of $72 per month instead of $50 per month. Since the bill was reported by the committee this man has been stricken with paralysis so that his body and limbs are paralyzed and he requires the care and attendance of some person all the time. I have here two affidavits which substantiate these facts. Therefore I move that the bill be amended by striking out the word "fifty," in the seventh line, and inserting "seventy-two" in lieu thereof.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the word "fifty," in line 7, and insert in lieu thereof the words "seventy-two."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I would like very much, before the vote is taken, to hear the affidavits read.

The affidavits were read, as follows:

STATE OF COLORADO, County of Arapahoe, ss:

On this, 10th day of February, 1897, personally appeared before me, R. Lee Bert, clerk and recorder within and for the county and State aforesaid, Joseph Anderson, a resident of Denver, in the county and State aforesaid, who, being duly sworn according to law, declares in relation to Grotius N. Udell, late first sergeant Company D, Sixth Regiment Iowa Infantry, as follows: I have been a regular practicing physician and surgeon during the past forty-four years, a larger portion of which time has been passed in practicing medicine and surgery in the vicinity of Denver, Colo., where I am now a regular practitioner in good standing. I was first called to make a professional examination of the claimant, Grotius N. Udell, on the 15th day of February, 1895, at Denver, Colo. I found a scar between the third and fourth ribs, front, and one back, just at the lower point of the scapula, on right side, with emphysema of right lung. I also found a scar between seventh and ninth ribs, right side, back of the million line, with point of exit, from the appearance, just below the ninth rib on left side, about one-quarter inch from spinal column, said scars said to have been caused by gunshot wounds received at the battle of Shiloh, Tenn. I also found partial paralysis of right arm, with considerable atrophy of the same; also partial paralysis of both legs, being unable to dress or undress himself, or to cut his food, the aforesaid paralysis being the result of said injuries, there being no other apparent cause. I also found two scars in the right nates, only flesh, the bone not being injured. I attended him professionally until on or about the 8th day of November, 1896. I was called and found the patient suffering from total paralysis of body and limbs, with brain badly affected, and totally helpless. He was unable to move, could swallow with extreme difficulty, and scarcely able to articulate. His condition has somewhat improved, but he is still unable to care for himself in any way, and at times his mind wanders and his brain becomes clouded. He requires the constant attendance of other persons, being wholly confined to his bed, except at brief intervals, when he is removed therefrom for sanitary purposes. I have attended him constantly since his last attack, and can say professionally that his case, that has been fully explained, is one that has required my constant attention, and one which seems to me to indicate that the patient will never again be able to use his limbs without the aid of crutches or other assistance, if at all. My post-office address is 3147 Race street, and I have no interest direct or indirect in this claim, nor am I in any way related to the claimant.

JOSEPH ANDERSON, M. D.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this day, and I certify that the affiant was fully acquainted with the contents of the foregoing declaration before he executed the same, and that I have no interest direct or indirect in the prosecution of this claim.

[SEAL.]

R. LEE BERT,
County Clerk.
By M. HEWITT, Deputy.

STATE OF COLORADO, County of Arapahoe ss:

In the matter of claim for special pension for Grotius N. Udell, late first sergeant Company D, Sixth Regiment Iowa Infantry, on this 10th day of February, 1897, personally appeared before me, R. L. Bert, clerk and recorder within and for the county and State aforesaid, H. H. Hamer, aged 56 years, a resident of Denver, in the county and State aforesaid, a person whom I certify to be reputable and entitled to credit, who, being duly sworn according to law, declares as follows, to wit: I am a constant daily attendant and nurse to Grotius N. Udell, who was formerly a soldier in the war of the rebellion. He had a stroke of paralysis on or about the 8th day of November, 1896, at which time I was present and assisted in caring for him, I at that time being employed by him to attend to his horse, cow, and chickens; he was perfectly helpless and could not move hand or foot, and unconscious; a physician was called, Dr. Joseph Anderson, under whose care he has since been, sometimes being assisted by another physician, an uncle of the patient; at no time since has he been able to help himself at all, and at times is out of his head; whenever he is moved it is necessary to use the force of another person, as the patient is wholly and entirely helpless, and can not aid himself in any manner. I have been relieved a portion of the time at night by the assistance of another man sent for that purpose by some of the societies to which the patient belongs. I have also been materially assisted by the wife and mother of the patient, as it would be almost impossible for one person to attend him alone. My post-office address is 2150 State street, Denver, Colo., and I am in no way related to claimant, and not interested in his claim in any way.

H. H. HAMER.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this day, and I certify that the affiant was fully acquainted with the contents of the foregoing declaration before he executed the same, and that I have no interest, direct or indirect, in the prosecution of this claim.

[SEAL.]

R. L. BERT,
County Clerk.
By J. S. HUGHES,
Deputy.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Under this state of facts this man would be entitled by the general law to a pension of $72 per month, and inasmuch as these increased disabilities have arisen from injuries received during the war and have culminated in paralysis since the report of the committee has been filed, I ask that the amendment be adopted.

Mr. LOUD. If there is any evidence which this applicant can produce to substantiate this state of facts set forth by the gentleman here, why can he not get $72 a month from the Pension Office?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I think he could, but the difficulty is the long delay. This man received seven gunshot wounds, and the office is allowing him at present $36 a month for disability incurred in the service; but where paralysis of both limbs has set in, so that the man needs the constant care and attendance of another person, it seems to me that the case is clear for a pension of $72 a month. This applicant had his claim here, it was reported upon by the committee, and now, since the report of the committee was made, this increased disability has occurred.

Mr. LOUD. I did not pay very close attention to the reading of the affidavits. Do these physicians certify that the paralysis is the result of disability incurred in the service?

Mr. SHAFROTH. There can be no doubt about it from the affidavits.

Mr. LOUD. Oh, there might be. Men are sometimes paralyzed who never were in the service.

Mr. SHAFROTH. There might be, but in this case there seems to be none.

The amendment of Mr. SHAFROTH was agreed to.

The amendments recommended by the committee were then adopted.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

ELIZA CRAIG HECKMAN.

The next unfinished business was the bill (S. 1816) granting a pension to Eliza Craig Heckman, widow of Brig. Gen. Charles A. Heckman, reported from the Committee of the Whole.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

BENJAMIN F. YOUNG.

The next unfinished business was the bill (H. R. 2395) granting a pension to Benjamin F. Young, late private of Company G, First Regiment Ohio Volunteer Cavalry.

The bill, with the amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole, was read.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

CATHARINE HARRIS.

The next unfinished business was the bill (H. R. 6922) to pension Catharine Harris.

The bill, with the amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole House, was read.

Mr. ERDMAN. I call for the reading of the report.

The report was read.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

EDWARD VUNK.

The next unfinished business was the bill (H. R. 3842) to increase the pension of Edward Vunk.

The bill, with the amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole House, was read.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

ZOLMAN TYRRELL.

The next unfinished business was the bill (H. R. 4539) granting a pension to Zolman Tyrrell, late Company A, First New York Engineers.

The bill, with the amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole House, was read.

Mr. ERDMAN. I call for the reading of the report.

The report was read.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

CAROLINE A. GROSHON.

The next unfinished business was the bill (H. R. 7489) granting a pension to Caroline A. Groshon.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The recommendation of the Committee of the Whole House is that this bill be recommitted to the Committee on Pensions. The question is on agreeing to that report.

The report was agreed to.

WILLIAM SHEPPARD.

The next unfinished business was the bill (H. R. 3402) granting a pension to William Sheppard, late of Company A, Sixteenth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry.

The bill, with the amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole House, was read.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

LYDIA W. HOLLIDAY.

The next unfinished business was the bill (H. R. 7432) for the relief of Lydia W. Holliday, of Wheeling, Ohio County, W. Va.

The bill, with the amendment reported by the Committee of the Whole House, was read.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the absence of objection, the proposed amendment to the title will be considered as agreed to.

There was no objection.

JOSEPH S. BUNKER.

The next unfinished business was the bill (H. R. 649) granting a pension to Joseph S. Bunker.

The bill, with the amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole House, was read.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

DANIEL T. TOLLETT.

The next unfinished business was the bill (S. 2832) for the relief of Daniel T. Tollett.

The bill, having been read, was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The next unfinished business was the bill (H. R. 7501) for the relief of Daniel T. Tollett.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The recommendation of the Committee of the Whole House is that this bill lie upon the table. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

CORYDON WINKLER.

The next unfinished business was the bill (H. R. 2974) to correct the military record of Corydon Winkler, late private Eighth Company, First Battalion, First Ohio Sharpshooters.

The bill, with the amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole House, was read.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

JAMES W. DUNN.

The next unfinished business was the bill (S. 321) granting a pension to James W. Dunn.

The bill, with the amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole House, was read.

Mr. ERDMAN. I ask for the reading of the report.

The report was read.

Mr. ERDMAN. I want to call the attention of the House to this extended report. It is drawn in accordance with the principle enunciated years ago and adopted by the committee, that "it is better not to know so many things than to know so many things that are not true." One short paragraph upon a bill granting a pension like this!

The question being taken, the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed; there being—ayes 56, noes 14.

JANE H. VANDEVER.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, does that complete the unfinished business?

The SPEAKER. It does.

Mr. HENDERSON. If I may be permitted, I should like to make a brief statement, and to ask unanimous consent for the consideration of a bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, when the war broke out William Vandever was a member of this body, representing the district I now represent. He resigned his seat in Congress and went to the front, serving until 1865, when he returned a brevet major-general. Subsequently he represented the Los Angeles district in this body for four years. He died, leaving a widow, who is now about 75 years of age, with one daughter, who as a stenographer and clerk, supported her mother. In October this daughter died. Senator ALLISON, who became General Vandever's successor in Congress, presented and secured the passage of a bill granting to the widow of the general $50 per month. That bill has been favorably reported by the House Committee on Pensions, but the amount cut down to $30. I would be glad to see it put back to $50, but will not persist. But I will ask unanimous consent that this woman, without a dollar to support her, with no child or relative to help her, may have this favorable consideration of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill, after which the Chair will submit the request for unanimous consent.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (S. 2645) granting a pension to Jane H. Vandever.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Jane H. Vandever, widow of Gen. William Vandever, late of Ninth Regiment Iowa Infantry, and late brigadier-general United States Volunteers, at the rate of $30 a month.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I thank the House very much for the courtesy.

Now I will ask unanimous consent—I will not make the motion unless it is agreeable to the House—but I ask unanimous consent to make this amount $50 per month. If the Chair will kindly submit that request to the body, I shall be very much gratified. That is the same amount that is fixed in the Senate bill.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that I can not anticipate the reason why the gentleman should not make the motion himself; and in this connection I would be glad to make a suggestion—a word or two—in regard to this whole question.

I would not make the motion myself because I oppose the system of granting large pensions. But here is another illustration of either favoritism or persistency. A few days ago I called the attention of the House to the action of the Committee on Pensions, or Invalid Pensions—I do not now recall which, and I do not desire to make any invidious distinction—I called the attention of the House to the case of the widow of General Stoneman, where a bill was reported carrying $30 per month, the widow of a most gallant and meritorious officer, from the standpoint on which you pension the widows of officers—a full general officer. Here comes the case of the widow of General Vandever, a sometime member of this body, having resigned his seat here to go into the service. It comes from the Committee on Invalid Pensions with the recommendation of $30 per month. And yet, permit me to say that this House to-day has passed three or four or five pension bills where I could not see for my part any more special merit than is involved in this case, and allowed $50 a month in each case.

If there be a representative of the Pension or Invalid Pension Committee present, it seems to me that this is a moment, sir, for him to rise and explain to the House what method of procedure they do pursue in that body. If there are reasons why this woman should not have a pension, if there is anything in her life or the record of General Vandever that would debar her from receiving the amount you give to others, the House should be in possession of the information. And the gentleman from Iowa ought not to ask unanimous consent, but to make a motion. He is an advocate of pensions of this character. I am not. If the House is to act on these pension cases, let us endeavor to pursue a course of equity, and along the line that if we are to give a pension of $50 a month to the widow of one brigadier-general or major-general, we should give it to all similarly situated, unless good reason is shown to the contrary.

I hope the gentleman will make the motion and not ask unanimous consent.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Speaker, responding to the suggestion just offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD], I desire to submit a few words in reference to the rate of pension allowed on private bills coming from the Committee on Invalid Pensions. I understand the nature of this case. I understand the nature of the case of the widow of General Stoneman, to which he refers. I understand many other cases of a similar character that have been under consideration before the committee.

Some of the members of the committee believe that it is proper to recommend pensions ranging from $50 to $75 or even $100 per month in these cases, while others believe that the thirty-dollar pension, as indicated by the general law, should be the rule observed so long as that general law is in force.

Many of these cases have been referred to me as a subcommitteeman for the bills originating in the territory embraced by the States of California, Utah, Idaho, Wyoming, Colorado, and Nebraska. I believed and still believe that these bills should be held within the range of the provisions of the general law, and that outside of these provisions we have no just anchorage for our deliberations.

Very much of the time of the House is worse than wasted in the discussions arising here day after day, but rather than deny these bills a place on the general Calendar, I have reported them to the committee at $30 per month, even in those cases where widows were already receiving that rate directly through the Pension Office. I considered it fair and proper to the Members and Senators in the States named that they should have an opportunity before the House for presenting their cases as they might see proper, and leave the House to decide on the amount. I did not consider it fair that I, a subcommitteeman, should deny consideration of these bills when others were receiving larger ratings than I thought proper. Accordingly, I favored the placing of the bills on the Calendar for such action as the House might deem proper.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I would ask my friend from Nebraska [Mr. ANDREWS] if the widow of General Stoneman received $30 or $50?

Mr. ANDREWS. The report from the committee was for $30 a month, and the bill was so passed in the House. It has gone to conference, and I understand that the conferees have not yet reported on that question.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I myself have not favored giving the large pensions which have been frequently reported to the House. My friend from California [Mr. LOUD] misstates my position when he classes me as one of those favoring large pensions.

Mr. LOUD. Well, I will use the word "liberal." I do not wish to say anything offensive.

Mr. HENDERSON. Yes, I believe in liberal pensions, but I do not believe in fancy pensions or unjust discriminations. Now, I made this request because I had understood that a great many similar bills had been passed at $50 per month where the claimant had not as much reason for asking it as Mrs. Vandever has. In addition to what I have stated, Mrs. Vandever was one of a band of women who, from 1861 to 1865, stood on the banks of the Mississippi to receive the wounded and furloughed men brought home from the front, taking them to churches and hotels, where they were fed, clothed, and bedded; and while her husband was fighting at the front she was fighting in the rear, looking after those who came home wounded. I myself received her warm grasp when, coming home from Donelson, we crossed the Mississippi at Dubuque. I speak of her with feeling, for I believe she was braver and more noble and deserving even than General Vandever himself. When I asked unanimous consent I stated the situation, and I only ask for unanimous consent now to make it $50 because I would not take advantage of the courtesy of the House, after it has given me unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill.

Mr. CROWTHER. I should like to ask my friend a question. He says he is in favor of equitable pensions. I will ask him if he did not vote for a pension for the widow of General Gibson a few days ago at $100 a month?

Mr. HENDERSON. I do not remember casting any such vote. I have voted against some of these larger pension bills myself during this session. I submit the request for unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that $50 be substituted for $30.

Mr. HENDERSON. Yes, as in the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER. Perhaps the way to get it would be to vote down the amendment.

Mr. HENDERSON. I should like to put it in the form of unanimous consent. I want to treat the House fairly.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as disagreed to. Is there objection?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I object.

Mr. HENDERSON. Then, Mr. Speaker, let it go at thirty.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment recommended by the committee.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. STEELE. Let us have a division on that.

The SPEAKER. A division is demanded.

Mr. MILNES. Mr. Speaker, I do not think the House knows what it is voting on.

The SPEAKER. As the bill has passed the Senate it grants a pension of $50 per month. The House committee recommend that the word "fifty" be stricken out and the word "thirty" be substituted. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 31, noes 62.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HENDERSON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

Mr. HENDERSON. I want to thank this House as I never did before for this action.

GEORGE W. FERREE.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Speaker, a short time ago a message was received from the Senate announcing that it had passed the bill (H. R. 10040) granting an increase of pension to George W. Ferree with an amendment. I failed to catch the number of the bill when it was reported by the Senate clerk. A motion was made by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. BLUE] to concur in that amendment, and the motion was agreed to. I desire now to move to reconsider the vote whereby the House concurred in the Senate amendment to the bill H. R. 10040. My purpose is to move that a committee of conference be appointed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman moves to reconsider the vote whereby the House concurred in the Senate amendment.

Mr. STEELE. Let us know what the amendment was.

Mr. ANDREWS. I will state that the bill passed the House at $30 per month. This soldier was totally disabled as the result of disease contracted in the service. The Senate amended the bill to $20 per month. I am satisfied that the case clearly warrants a fifty-dollar rating. The House passed it at $30 a month. My desire is to secure, if possible, concurrence in the House bill.

The question was taken on the motion to reconsider; and it was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on concurring.

Mr. ANDREWS. I move that the House nonconcur in the Senate amendment and request a conference.

The SPEAKER. The original motion was a motion to concur. If the House votes in the negative, that will be nonconcurrence, and will reach the same point.

The question was taken on concurring in the Senate amendment, and the motion was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska moves that the House ask for a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will appoint as conferees Mr. ANDREWS, Mr. CROWTHER, and Mr. BAKER of Kansas. [Cries of "Regular order!"] The Chair does not know who calls for the regular order.

PATRICK HANLEY.

Mr. COOK of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 8706) to correct the military record of Patrick Hanley.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion standing against Patrick Hanley, late a private in Company H, Twenty-eighth Regiment Wisconsin Infantry Volunteers, and to issue to him an honorable discharge, to date December 19, 1862.

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Speaker, let us hear the report in this case.

The report (by Mr. BISHOP) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8706) to correct the military record of Patrick Hanley, having considered the same, would respectfully report such bill back to the House with the recommendation that the same do pass.

The facts upon which your committee rely for the clemency sought to be extended by this bill are briefly as follows: The soldier ran away from home and enlisted, without bounty, in Company H, Twenty-eighth Wisconsin, on the 20th day of August, 1862. He was then about 17 years old. He remained with his company in camp within his own State until December 19, 1862, when he obtained leave to visit his home, and while absent on such leave his regiment was ordered to the front, leaving the soldier behind. When he learned that the regiment had left, he followed them to Chicago. When he arrived there, the regiment had left. Not being able to learn of its whereabouts, he enlisted in the Mercantile Battery, but was rejected on account of physical defects.

On the 10th day of June, 1863, he again tendered his services to his country, and was assigned to the Navy, where he served faithfully for the full term of his enlistment, and was honorably discharged. Had he been accepted when he enlisted in the Mercantile Battery, the soldier could have been relieved under the general law.

It is apparent the soldier never did intend to desert, and although he had to enter the service against the wishes of his parents, when he was fairly in the service and beyond the influence of his parents he served faithfully during his full term.

The total bounty paid him for his entire enlistment was $25.

The record of such soldier, Army and Navy, is hereto attached and made a part hereof.

DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY, Washington, D. C., May 7, 1896.

SIR: Referring to your letter of the 6th instant to the honorable Secretary of the Navy, I have the honor to state that one Patrick Hanley enlisted in the Navy at Chicago, Ill., June 15, 1863, as seaman for one year. Served on board of the Covington, Fairy, and hospital Pinckney, and was discharged June 25, 1864.

Respectfully,

F. M. RAMSAY,
Chief of Bureau.

Hon. S. A. COOK,
House of Representatives.

RECORD AND PENSION OFFICE, WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington City, April 17, 1896.

SIR: * * * It is shown by the records that Patrick Hanley was enrolled August 20, 1862, and was mustered into service October 14, 1862, in Company H, Twenty-eighth Wisconsin Infantry, to serve three years. He appears to have served faithfully to December 19, 1862, when he deserted. He never returned thereafter, although his company remained in service to August 31, 1865. No evidence has been found showing he was a minor at the date of his enlistment or was enlisted without the consent of his parents, or that he was released or discharged from such service by the order or decree of any court of competent jurisdiction on habeas corpus or other proper judicial proceedings.

It does not appear from the files of this office that an application for removal of the charge of desertion has been presented to this Department, and in the absence of testimony the status of the soldier can not be determined under the provisions of the act of Congress approved March 2, 1889, the only law now in force governing the removal of charges of desertion.

Very respectfully,

F. C. AINSWORTH,
Colonel, United States Army, Chief Record and Pension Office.

Hon. S. A. COOK,
House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Speaker, I do not care to enter objection to the consideration of this bill, for I objected a while ago and then agreed to withdraw it, but I am opposed to its passage. It seems to me that the time has passed, or at least ought to have passed, when deserters shall come to this House to have charges of desertion removed. It does seem to me they have had ample opportunity to do that in thirty-odd years. Take the legislation that has been passed by Congress in regard to the removal of the charge of desertion. Take the general laws, I mean, that have been passed. In the first place, after the war there was a general amnesty proclamation, issued by President Lincoln at the close of the war, allowing all deserters in such a time to come in and have the charge of desertion removed. As a matter of course, a great many of them availed themselves of that opportunity; and it was right that they should do so. It was an opportunity extended to them that ought to have been extended, because numbers had the charge of desertion entered against them who did not deserve to have such a stigma attached to their names.

I do not recollect the date of a number of the acts passed by Congress opening the door again to these men who had deserted their colors. I think there was a bill passed in 1882, or thereabouts, extending an invitation again to all soldiers who had deserted their flag and whose military record needed correction to come forward and avail themselves of that opportunity and have the privilege of having the charge of desertion removed from their record. Then, possibly, something was done in 1884. When that bill was passed, there was a proviso attached saying that all who did not avail themselves of the provisions of the act within five years after its passage should be forever debarred of the privilege. Then, I believe, in 1886 or 1887 there was another bill passed, after that time had elapsed. Many availed themselves of that opportunity.

The last act passed, according to my recollection, was in 1889, again opening the doors and inviting those men in to have the charge of desertion removed, and attached to that act was a proviso that to all who did not avail themselves of that act within three years the door would again be barred. That was the last act passed by Congress on that subject, if my memory serves me aright.

These are the reasons why the time should cease, when there should be some statute of limitations for these outrageous claims, giving an opportunity to have the charge of desertion removed from men who were not true to their flag, cowards who turned their backs on the field of battle. I am opposed to the passing of any such bill. For these reasons I hope this bill will not pass this House.

Some gentlemen have said to me, "Why not object?" I do not like that way of fighting. I dislike to exercise the authority given one man in that way. I believe that if these bills must come in we should have an opportunity to discuss them. I do not like to take advantage of a man who has introduced a bill by objecting. I do not like to object; but if I can not prevent their passage in any other way, I shall have to do that. I hope this House will set a precedent and show by their votes that there shall not be introduced or considered in this House such outrageous claims. I hope the House will act promptly for once in its life in regard to such measures, and that this bill will be killed. I have great respect for the gentleman who introduced the bill. He has talked with me about it time and again. I have looked over the report of the committee; but I am unwilling as a member of this House to cast my vote at this time to remove a charge of desertion against a soldier unless it is a case with mitigating circumstances, unless it is an exceptional case, and if it can be shown that this is an exceptional case, why, then, possibly it ought to pass.

Mr. WILSON of Ohio. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. TALBERT. Certainly.

Mr. WILSON of Ohio. I want to refer the gentleman to page 814 of the laws, where the law is named, approved March 2, 1895, whereby the authorization to remove the charge of desertion was extended, and it is now in existence.

Mr. TALBERT. In 1895?

Mr. WILSON of Ohio. Yes, sir. You evidently have not kept up with the legislation on this subject.

Mr. TALBERT. Possibly not. I stated that the act of 1889 was the last, if my memory serves me right. I am like the preacher who sometimes made mistakes. He was asked by a young lawyer if he always corrected them. He said, no, not always; sometimes he did and sometimes he did not. For instance, he said, when he was preaching once, he intended to say that Og was King of Bashan, but by a slip of the tongue he said that "hog was king of bacon," but he did not correct it because it was true. [Laughter.] So, in another case, when he intended to say that the devil was the father of all liars, he happened to say that "the devil was the father of all lawyers," but he let that stand also, because it was correct in a sense. [Laughter.] So, Mr. Speaker, I may be mistaken about the legislation on this subject, but I understand that the act of 1895, to which the gentleman refers, only allowed these claimants to go to the Pension Bureau, not to come here. However that may be, still I have made no mistake, and I am still opposed to these bills removing charges of desertion from the records of men who ran away from their duty. And now, if nobody has anything more to say or wants to ask me to correct any other mistakes, I move that the bill lie on the table.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. TALBERT, the Speaker declared that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. TALBERT. I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 30, noes 80.

So the motion was rejected.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

EMMA WEIR CASEY.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill No. 2729, granting a pension to Emma Weir Casey.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the general pension laws, the name of Emma Weir Casey, widow of the late Brig. Gen. Thomas Lincoln Casey, Chief of Engineers, United States Army, at the rate of $75 a month.

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Under the order adopted this afternoon, must the House adjourn at 5 o'clock?

Mr. PAYNE. I do not think, Mr. Speaker, that the order requires the House to adjourn at that hour. It simply provides, according to my recollection, that this order of business shall continue until that hour.

Mr. ERDMAN. Then, Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order until that time arrives, which I believe is to go into Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BLUE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object to the bill presented by the gentleman from Alabama, I will say to him that unless the amount of that pension is reduced to $50, I will object.

Mr. ERDMAN. I withdraw the demand.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question being taken, the Speaker declared that the ayes seemed to have it.

A division was called for.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 57, noes 41.

So the motion to adjourn was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Pending the adjournment, by unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. THOMAS, for ten days, on account of important business.

To Mr. BAKER of Maryland, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

To Mr. WELLINGTON, for two days, on account of important business.

To Mr. LEISENRING, for one day, on account of important business.

To Mr. BARTHOLDT, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

LEAVE TO WITHDRAW PAPERS.

Pending the adjournment, Mr. SNOVER, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the House the papers in the case of J. Seymour Taylor, on condition that copies of the originals be left in the files of the House.

The House then (at 4 o'clock and 53 minutes p. m.) adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination and survey of Biscayne Bay, Florida—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination and survey of Arkansas River, Arkansas—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of War, inclosing a letter from the Chief of Engineers, transmitting a compilation of the general laws relating to the maintenance, preservation, and protection of the navigable waters of the United States, with a draft of a proposed act embodying such revision and enlargement of said laws as will be advantageous to the public interest—to the Committee on Revision of the Laws, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. HULL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 10304) to repeal chapter 1061, Fiftieth Congress, approved October 1, 1888, being an act to grant right of way through the military reservation at Fort Morgan to the Birmingham, Mobile and Navy Cove Harbor Railway Company, and for other purposes, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2951); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. KLEBERG, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 10213) selling to the State of Kansas part of the abandoned Fort Hays Military Reservation in said State, for the purpose of establishing western branches of the Kansas Agricultural College and of the Kansas State Normal College thereon, and for a public park, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2962); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. MEIKLEJOHN, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 10314) to amend an act entitled "An act to repeal the timber-culture laws, and for other purposes," reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2963); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. SHERMAN, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 6656) to authorize the Montgomery, Hayneville, and Camden Railroad Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Alabama River between Lower Peachtree and Prairie Bluff, Ala., reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2964); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

By Mr. LESTER, from the Committee on War Claims: The bill (H. R. 523) for the relief of Charles V. Neidlinger. (Report No. 2948.)

By Mr. DANIELS, from the Committee on Elections No. 1: The bill (H. R. 4114) for the relief of W. E. Judkins, executor of Lewis McKenzie. (Report No. 2949.)

By Mr. RICHARDSON, from the Committee on the District of Columbia: The bill (H. R. 10321) authorizing the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to accept the bequest of the late Peter Von Essen for the use of the public white schools of that portion of said District formerly known as Georgetown. Reported as a substitute for H. R. 8098. (Report No. 2950.)

By Mr. PARKER, from the Committee on Military Affairs: The bill (H. R. 6797) to remove the charge of desertion against Levi Maxted, Lawrence, Kans. (Report No. 2952.)

By Mr. WOOD, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions:

The bill (H. R. 9021) to increase the pension of George Gaylord. (Report No. 2953.)

The bill (H. R. 1947) to grant a pension to Margaret Wolverton, child of Jacob Wolverton, Company K, Seventy-seventh Illinois Volunteer Infantry. (Report No. 2954.)

The bill (H. R. 9796) granting a pension to Turner J. Bowling. (Report No. 2955.)

By Mr. BAKER of Kansas, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions:

The bill (H. R. 10227) granting a pension to Milton Iserman, of Thirty-third New Jersey Volunteers (unassigned). (Report No. 2956.)

The bill (H. R. 2223) to pension Hiram C. Rogers, of Allerton, Iowa. (Report No. 2957.)

By Mr. SULLOWAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions: The bill (H. R. 10137) granting a pension to Miss Delphine P. Baker for expenses incurred during the late war and for services performed in originating and founding the National Home for Disabled Soldiers and Sailors of the Army and Navy of the United States. (Report No. 2958.)

By Mr. KIRKPATRICK, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions: The bill (H. R. 3795) granting a pension to Mary Cochrane. (Report No. 2959.)

By Mr. GRAFF, from the Committee on Claims: The bill (H. R. 7343) for the relief of the estate of William P. Burrough. (Report No. 2960.)

By Mr. MINOR of Wisconsin, from the Committee on Claims: The bill (H. R. 6386) for the relief of the heirs at law of Edward N. Oldmixon. (Report No. 2961.)

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of the following bills; which were referred as follows:

Evidence to accompany H. R. 1793, for the relief of Michael Bassett—Committee on Military Affairs discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Evidence to accompany H. R. 4952, for the relief of Jubal Grant—Committee on Military Affairs discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, February 17, 1897.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on motion of Mr. SHERMAN, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

PROPOSED SITE FOR HALL OF RECORDS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, pursuant to the act of Congress approved June 11, 1896, a report upon the suitableness of the public reservation at the intersection of Ohio and Louisiana avenues with Tenth and Twelfth streets, in the city of Washington, as a site for the proposed hall of records, and stating that the reservation mentioned is conveniently located for the construction of such a building, but that he is not prepared to make a final report upon the subject at this time, etc.; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

GEORGETOWN BARGE, DOCK, ELEVATOR, AND RAILWAY COMPANY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the annual report of the Georgetown Barge, Dock, Elevator, and Railway Company for the year ended December 31, 1896; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The VICE-PRESIDENT announced his signature to the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions; which had previously been signed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives:

A bill (S. 3603) to extend the time for the completion of the St. Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba Railway Company through the White Earth, Leech Lake, Chippewa, and Fond du Lac Indian reservations, in the State of Minnesota;

A bill (H. R. 5764) granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth D. Marthon;

A joint resolution (S. R. 121) to amend an act granting to the Duluth and Winnipeg Railroad Company a right of way through the Chippewa and White Earth Indian reservations, in the State of Minnesota; and

A joint resolution (S. R. 204) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to transport contributions for the relief of the suffering poor of India.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills, received yesterday from the House of Representatives, were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (H. R. 6845) granting an increase of pension to Maj. John H. Georkee; and

A bill (H. R. 9785) granting a pension to Rebecca A. Kirkpatrick.

CREDENTIALS.

Mr. PROCTOR presented the credentials of JUSTIN SMITH MORRILL, chosen by the legislature of Vermont a Senator from that State for the term beginning March 4, 1897; which were read, and ordered to be filed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented a petition of the legislative assembly of the Territory of Arizona, praying that relief be granted the Supai tribe of Indians in the northern part of Coconino County, Ariz., on account of the almost entire destruction of their crops during the months of July and August, 1896; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY, Phœnix, February 11, 1897.

SIR: Herewith I have the honor to transmit a certified copy of council memorial No. 1, of the Nineteenth legislative assembly of Arizona.

Respectfully,

CHARLES M. BRUCE,
Secretary of Arizona.

The PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE,
Washington, D. C.

TERRITORY OF ARIZONA, Office of the Secretary.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Territory of Arizona, ss:

I, Charles M. Bruce, secretary of the Territory of Arizona, do hereby certify that the annexed is a true and complete transcript of the council memorial No. 1, of the Nineteenth legislative assembly of Arizona, which was filed in this office the 10th day of February, A. D. 1897, at 2.30 o'clock p. m., as provided by law.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed my official seal.

Done at the city of Phœnix, the capital, this 11th day of February, A. D. 1897.

CHARLES M. BRUCE,
Secretary of the Territory of Arizona.

Memorial.

To the honorable members of the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the legislative assembly of the Territory of Arizona, respectfully represent:

That the Supai tribe of Indians, consisting of about 300 souls, in the northern part of Coconino County, Ariz., are in need of assistance by reason of the almost entire destruction of their crops last July and August.

That these Supais are virtuous and industrious, but need help now to tide them over their misfortunes, as a starving time is inevitable in the spring.

Therefore your memorialists earnestly request that immediate steps be taken to provide for these people in their present emergency and for the five years which the game law contemplates. We think that 70,000 pounds of dressed beef and 40,000 pounds of flour would tide over the present emergency and save these people from disease and death.

Resolved, That the secretary of the Territory be, and is hereby, directed to forward copies of this memorial, under seal of the Territory, to the Honorable President of the Senate and the Honorable Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, to be by them laid before their respective bodies; and

Be it further resolved, That the secretary of the Territory is hereby directed to forward an enrolled copy of this memorial, duly attested under his hand and seal, to the Hon. N. O. MURPHY, Delegate to Congress for Arizona Territory.

FRED G. HUGHES,
President of the Council.
D. G. CHALMERS,
Speaker of the House.

Approved February 10, 1897.

B. J. FRANKLIN, Governor.

Mr. SHERMAN presented a petition of the Cincinnati (Ohio) Furniture Exchange, praying for the passage of the so-called Torrey bankruptcy bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Cincinnati, Savannah, Madison, Port Clinton, Brilliant, Cleveland, Wooster, Sandusky, Brownhelm, Bellevue, Plymouth, Oberlin, McComb, Eaton, and Washington Court-House, all in the State of Ohio, and a petition of sundry citizens of Lexington, Mo., praying for the passage of the antiscalping railroad ticket bill; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. BURROWS. I present resolutions of the Detroit (Mich.) Credit Men's Association, in the nature of a memorial, praying for the passage of the so-called Torrey bankruptcy bill, and also giving the action of that organization. I will not ask to have the resolutions read, but I move that they lie on the table and be printed as a document.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FRYE presented a petition of the board of managers of the National Temperance Society and Publication House, of New York City, praying for the ratification of the pending arbitration treaty with Great Britain; which was ordered to lie on the table.

FOURTH LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF WYOMING.

[Enrolled joint resolution No. 3, house of representatives, State of Wyoming.]

A joint resolution in relation to the recognition of the Republic of Cuba by the United States Government.

Whereas the people of the State of Wyoming are in full sympathy with the efforts of the people of any community to establish a form of free government for the regulation of their own affairs; and

Whereas the people of this State have viewed with deep interest the struggle for independence now being carried on by the inhabitants of the Island of Cuba; and

Whereas we believe that the interests of humanity require friendly and encouraging action on the part of the Government of the United States: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the Fourth legislature of the State of Wyoming, That the Hon. CLARENCE D. CLARK and the Hon. FRANCIS E. WARREN, Senators in Congress from this State, and the Hon. FRANK W. MONDELL, Representative in Congress from this State, and each of them, be, and they are hereby, requested by voice and vote to aid in the passage of any resolution which will tend to secure to the people of Cuba belligerent rights as revolutionists or their independence as a republic.

GEORGE E. ABBOTT,
President of the Senate.
A. D. KELLEY,
Speaker of the House.

Approved, January 27, A. D. 1897.

WM. A. RICHARDS, Governor.

Mr. WARREN presented a petition of the legislature of Wyoming praying for the ratification of the treaty between the United States and the Shoshone and Arapahoe tribes of Indians; which was ordered to lie on the table, and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE OF WYOMING,
Office of the Secretary of State.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, State of Wyoming, ss:

I, Charles W. Burdick, secretary of state of the State of Wyoming, do hereby certify that the annexed is a full, true, and correct copy of enrolled joint resolution No. 5, house of representatives, State of Wyoming, passed by the Fourth legislature of the State of Wyoming.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State of Wyoming.

[Enrolled joint resolution No. 5, house of representatives, State of Wyoming.]

Joint memorial to Congress.

Your memorialists, the Fourth legislature of the State of Wyoming, respectfully represent:

That they believe it would be of great benefit to the people of the United States, as well as the people of Wyoming, if the treaty recently made between the United States and the Shoshone and Arapahoe tribes of Indians, whereby said tribes agreed, in consideration of the sum of $60,000, to cede to the United States Government a tract of land 10 miles square, situated in the northeast corner of the Wind River or Shoshone Indian Reservation, upon which are the famous Big Horn Medical Springs, were ratified, for the following reasons:

First. Owing to a tribal superstition, said springs are never used or frequented by the Indians.

Second. Being on the reservation, no adequate accommodation can be furnished the people who flock there for relief.

Third. If the tract is ceded to the Government, ample accommodations for invalids and visitors will be at once provided, a railroad will certainly be built, and their cession to the United States would result in a great good to afflicted people everywhere.

Fourth. The springs cover a large tract of land and are possessed of the most marvelous curative properties of any waters of the known world. Though remote from railroad transportation, they were visited by nearly 400 afflicted people the past summer, all of whom were either cured or greatly benefited; and, without other accommodation than that furnished by tents, at this time no less than 60 people are there, bearing the storms of winter, bathing in the waters.

Therefore your memorialists would most respectfully urge Congress to give the matter of the ratification of said treaty and the appropriation therefor immediate and favorable consideration, to the end that afflicted humanity everywhere may have the benefit of this wonderful provision of nature to cure their ills and heal their diseases; and your memorialists will ever pray, etc.

Resolved, That an authenticated copy of this memorial be forwarded by the secretary of state to each Senator and to the Representative in Congress from this State; and they are hereby respectfully requested to bring the matter to the attention of Congress and to use every honorable means to secure favorable action thereon.

GEORGE E. ABBOTT,
President of the Senate.
A. D. KELLEY,
Speaker of the House.

Approved February 8, A. D. 1897.

WM. A. RICHARDS.

Mr. WARREN presented a petition of the legislature of Wyoming, praying that all unoccupied public lands within the State of Wyoming be ceded to the control of that State; which was referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FOURTH LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF WYOMING.

[Enrolled joint resolution, No. 1, senate, State of Wyoming.]

Joint resolution and memorial to the Congress of the United States, praying for the ceding of all unoccupied public lands within the State of Wyoming to the control of the State.

Your memorialists, the Fourth legislature of the State of Wyoming, would most respectfully represent:

That all of the lands within the boundaries of the State of Wyoming are what is known as "arid" lands; the reclamation and settlement of these lands must be accomplished under different conditions from those confronting the settler in the humid portions of this country; that none of the lands now the property of the State can be sold for less than $10 per acre, which is the minimum price allowed by the terms of the act of admission and the State constitution, thus causing unfair competition with United States lands, which are sold to settlers under the provisions of the several acts of Congress at prices ranging from 50 cents to $2.50 per acre.

Experience has demonstrated that the present land system is not suited to the conditions which prevail in this State, and as a result many obstacles are interposed to the development of the country.

The reclamation of the agricultural lands imposes upon the settler and upon the State labor and expense not incurred in the humid portions of the country; ditches must be constructed and the lands prepared for the application of water before there is any return to the farmer; in addition to this great labor and expense, it is necessary for the State to exercise a supervision over them in order that just distribution of water may be made to those entitled to it.

Thus far the State has borne the entire expense of the investigation of its agricultural resources and the supervision of the public waters.

The efficiency of this work had been greatly impaired by reason of the inability of the State to assist in any way in the reclamation and settlement of the desirable lands or to restrict the diversion of water on less desirable.

The importance of the pastoral interests of this State makes it desirable that provision be made for the utilization of the grazing land in connection with the contiguous irrigable areas. These grazing lands comprise the greater part of the territorial extent.

None of the present land laws make adequate provision for securing possession or management of these lands. In our judgment it is impossible for Congress to pass a general law which will operate with equal justice and success on the arid belt as a whole. Conditions differ in different sections of the United States, and the people of each section are best calculated to determine the system best suited to their needs. We believe that by giving to the State full control over all classes of land the best results can be obtained.

If the State controlled the lands, it would be possible to connect water rights with land titles of all irrigable lands; that this is desirable is admitted by all familiar with the subject.

The results already achieved are a sufficient guaranty of what can be accomplished under more favorable conditions. Even with the imperfect means at hand, the value of lands has not only been enhanced, but their productive capacity has been correspondingly augmented. Such results are of interest and value to the whole nation, and in our opinion entitle the State to generous recognition.

The water laws of this State have been highly recommended. The State constitution and statutes contain provisions requiring the inauguration of the most systematic and complete supervision of its public waters yet undertaken by any Commonwealth in this country.

It is only, however, by uniting the control of both water and land under one authority that our irrigation system can have the fullest measure of stability and success.

We believe that the control of this subject can wisely and safely be intrusted to the State, since the practical knowledge is almost wholly confined to those engaged in the work. By endowing the State with means and placing upon it the responsibility for the development of our resources, a great impulse will be given to the diffusion of intelligence on the subject and to local pride in the success of the undertaking. It will put the solution of this problem in the hands of the people best informed as to its details and most interested in its success.

Because of the facts hereinbefore detailed, your memorialists respectfully pray that Congress will, by suitable legislation, grant to the State of Wyoming the unoccupied and unappropriated public lands within said State.

Resolved, That the secretary of state be, and he is hereby, respectfully requested, on the approval of this memorial, to forward a duly authenticated copy thereof to the Senators and Representatives in Congress from this State, in order that the same may be brought to the attention of Congress.

GEORGE E. ABBOTT,
President of the Senate.
A. D. KELLEY,
Speaker of the House.

Mr. WARREN presented a petition of the legislature of Wyoming, praying that the State of Wyoming be included in the examination and classification of mineral lands within the railroad land grants; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE OF WYOMING,
Office of the Secretary of State.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, State of Wyoming, ss:

I, Charles W. Burdick, secretary of state of the State of Wyoming, do hereby certify that the annexed is a full, true, and correct copy of joint resolution No. 1, house of representatives, passed by the Fourth legislature of the State of Wyoming.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State of Wyoming.

FOURTH LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF WYOMING.

Enrolled joint resolution No. 1, House of Representatives, State of Wyoming.

Be it resolved by the senate and house of representatives of the State of Wyoming, That the Congress of the United States be memorialized as follows:

Whereas there is now pending before the Congress of the United States a measure known as the "California mineral-lands bill," which has for its object the examination and classification of mineral lands within the railroad land grants in the State of California and, as amended in the Senate, to include like lands in the State of Oregon; and

Whereas the State of Wyoming is situated under like circumstances, having large areas of mountainous lands within the Union Pacific Railroad land grant known to be mineral in character, and is entitled to the same consideration:

Be it therefore resolved, That we are desirous of securing legislation of like character for the State of Wyoming, and we hereby instruct our Senators and request our Representative in Congress to use all honorable means to secure the passage of the California mineral-lands bill, so amended as to include the State of Wyoming within its operations; and

Be it further resolved, That his excellency the governor of the State of Wyoming be, and he is hereby, requested to transmit to each of our Senators and to our Representative in Congress, to the President of the United States, and to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States a copy of these resolutions.

GEORGE E. ABBOTT,
President of the Senate.
A. D. KELLEY,
Speaker of the House.

Mr. HOAR presented a petition of the Drysalters Club of Boston, Mass., praying for the passage of the so-called Torrey bankruptcy bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Natick, Mass., praying for the enactment of legislation prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors in all buildings owned or controlled by the United States Government; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also presented a petition of 33 members of the Christian Endeavor Society of the First Congregational Church, of Millbury, Mass., praying for the enactment of legislation prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors in the Capitol building; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of the Congregational Church, of Natick, Mass., praying for the enactment of legislation raising the age of consent to 21 years; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. GALLINGER presented a petition of the Woman's Club of Concord, N. H., praying for the ratification of the pending arbitration treaty with Great Britain; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the Baptist Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor of Hampton Falls, N. H., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in the Capitol building; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of Division No. 335, Order of Railway Conductors, of Concord, N. H., praying for the passage of the antiscalping railroad ticket bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. BAKER presented petitions of the Commercial Club of Newton; of sundry citizens of Leavenworth, Geneseo, Coffeyville, Salina, Arkansas City, Paola, and Wichita, all in the State of Kansas, praying for the passage of the antiscalping railroad ticket bill; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. THURSTON presented a petition of sundry citizens of Lincoln, Nebr., praying for the enactment of legislation regulating fraternal beneficiary societies, orders, and associations; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Auburn, Nebr., praying for the passage of the antiscalping railroad ticket bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. VEST presented a petition of sundry citizens of West Plain, Mo., praying for the enactment of legislation prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors in the Capitol building; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented sundry petitions of citizens of Chamois, Independence, and St. Joseph, all in the State of Missouri, praying for the passage of the antiscalping railroad ticket bill; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MANTLE presented the petition of S. A. Robertson, publisher of the Sentinel, of Boulder, Mont., praying for the passage of House bill No. 4566, to amend the postal laws relating to second-class mail matter; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. HAWLEY presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of New Haven County, Conn., praying for the enactment of legislation to protect the first day of the week as a day of rest in the District of Columbia; to prohibit interstate gambling by telegraph, telephone, or otherwise, and to raise the age of consent to 18 years in the District of Columbia and the Territories; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. CULLOM presented the petition of Rev. James Rowe, of Chicago, Ill., praying for the enactment of legislation prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors in the Capitol building; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a memorial of the business men of Rockford, Ill., remonstrating against the passage of the antiscalping railroad ticket bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented the petition of William O. Davis, publisher of the Pantograph, of Bloomington, Ill., praying for the passage of the so-called Loud bill, to amend the postal laws relating to second-class mail matter; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented a petition of the senate of the State of Illinois and a petition of the city council of Denver, Colo., praying for the enactment of legislation reclassifying railway postal clerks and prescribing their salaries; which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented the petition of Rev. Joseph L. Colton, of Mount Carmel, Ill., and a petition of the Union League Club, of Chicago, Ill., praying for the ratification of the pending arbitration treaty with Great Britain; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented eighteen petitions signed by sundry citizens of Illinois, praying for the passage of the antiscalping railroad ticket bill; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. ALLEN presented a petition of sundry citizens of Omaha, Nebr., praying for the passage of the antiscalping railroad ticket bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. BATE. I present "An appeal of the Cherokees, Creeks, Seminoles, Choctaws, and Chickasaws," in the nature of a memorial, remonstrating against the adoption of the proposed amendment to the Indian appropriation bill "coercing agreements which they are ready to make without coercion," and praying Congress not to press at this time "such an extreme and unnecessary measure." It is an important paper and is very short. I ask that it be printed in the RECORD, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

There being no objection, the memorial was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AN APPEAL OF THE CHEROKEES, CREEKS, SEMINOLES, CHOCTAWS, AND CHICKASAWS.

To the Senate of the United States:

We represent 70,000 faithful, law-abiding, liberty-loving people who have, perhaps, too blindly trusted in their treaties as sacred and incapable of being violated.

The act of June 10, 1896, declared for the first time that it was the duty of the United States to establish a government in our country. It was the first declaration of a definite policy.

Upon this declaration by Congress each of our five nations immediately authorized negotiations on the lines indicated by Congress, as soon as their legislatures met, as by law provided, beginning in August and ending in November, 1896. Could you have acted sooner?

The Dawes Commission was absolutely engrossed with the settlement of very many thousands of citizenship cases up to December 14, and left for Washington December 19, promising to return immediately after their Christmas holiday.

Our commissions were authorized, ready, and willing to treat, and of this the United States Commission was fully advised (see Senate Ex. Docs. 94, 111, 112, etc.); but these important matters could not possibly be closed up in six days.

It is now proposed (on the erroneous theory that we are not sincere in our purpose to treat) to put drastic legislation on an appropriation act (Indian, page 57), destroying our judiciary, paralyzing our executive departments, emasculating our legislative bodies, partitioning and administering our great estates without our consent, without proper safeguards, and regardless of vested rights, as a measure of coercing agreements we are ready to make without coercion.

We earnestly appeal to your high sense of justice and to your magnanimity against this extreme measure.

First. Because it is unnecessary. The record proves this (Senate Ex. Docs.

94, 111, 112), but, in addition, we here register our solemn declaration that our people are ready and earnestly intend treating on the lines heretofore indicated by Congress; that they have not had sufficient opportunity of negotiating after resolving upon this course last fall.

Second. This measure is unjust, because it puts our people under extreme duress and ruinous conditions, as a manifest and declared preliminary to a proposed negotiation.

We feel that "consent" under such conditions is no consent at all, but the submission of the weak to the impatient violence of the strong, that will give our people a false idea of the great Republic and its citizenship.

It is beneath the dignity of the United States to strike our people to the earth while inviting negotiation. We can not believe that the advocates of this measure would feel justified in pressing it if they should examine the correspondence submitted and realize the sincerity of our purpose to negotiate.

We earnestly trust that this solemn declaration, made on behalf of the sincerity of our people, will suffice to induce the Congress not to press at this time such an extreme and unnecessary measure.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. STEWART, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon December 21, 1896, intended to be proposed to the general deficiency appropriation bill, reported it with an amendment, and moved that it be printed and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Appropriations; which was agreed to.

Mr. ALLEN, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3510) for the relief of Verona E. Pollock, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the Committee on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4058) to set apart a portion of certain lands in the State of Washington, now known as the Pacific Forest Reserve, as a public park, to be known as the Washington National Park, reported it without amendment.

Mr. BURROWS, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. WILSON on the 16th instant, intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be printed, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Appropriations; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. HILL on the 3d instant, intended to be proposed to the general deficiency appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. GEAR on the 3d instant, intended to be proposed to the general deficiency appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed; which was agreed to.

He also, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by himself on the 1st instant, intended to be proposed to the Post-Office appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. CARTER, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the Post-Office appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by himself on the 9th instant, intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, reported it with an amendment, and moved that it be printed, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations; which was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER, from the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10167) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in response to resolution of the Senate of December 21, 1896, a report of the Auditor of the War Department relative to the settlement of claims on account of the loss of the steamer Osceola, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations; which was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1353) for the relief of the administrator of George McAlpin, deceased, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. HOAR on the 11th instant, intended to be proposed to the general deficiency appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. BACON, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 610) for the relief of John F. McRae, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. MARTIN, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by himself on the 15th instant, intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. CHANDLER, from the Committee on the Census, to whom the subject was referred, reported a bill (S. 3703) to provide for the twelfth and subsequent censuses; which was read twice by its title.

He also, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by himself on the 9th instant, intended to be proposed to the general deficiency appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. GEAR, from the Committee on Pacific Railroads, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by himself on the 16th instant, intended to be proposed to the general deficiency appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be printed, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Appropriations; which was agreed to.

DETAIL OF ARMY OFFICER.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am directed by the Committee on Foreign Relations to report a joint resolution to enable the Secretary of War to detail an officer of the United States Army to accept a position under the Government of the Greater Republic of Central America. If there be no objection, I ask for its immediate consideration.

The joint resolution (S. R. 205) enabling the Secretary of War to detail an officer of the United States Army to accept a position under the Government of the Greater Republic of Central America was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to detail an officer of the United States Army, not above the rank of captain, who shall be permitted to accept from the Government of the Greater Republic of Central America the position of instructor in a military school in said Republic and the emoluments pertaining thereto.

By unanimous consent, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FALLEN TIMBER ON HOMESTEAD ENTRIES.

Mr. PASCO. I am directed by the Committeeon Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9494) concerning certain homestead lands in Florida, to report it without amendment and submit a written report thereon. The bill has passed the other House, and the relief, in order to be effective, should be given immediately. The bill is a short one, and I ask for its immediate consideration, if there be no objection.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to grant to all persons actually occupying homesteads in good faith in any of the counties of Alachua, Lafayette, Levy, Suwanee, Bradford, Baker, and Columbia, in Florida, at the time of the storm on or about September 29, 1896, the right to sell or otherwise dispose of the fallen timber on their homestead entries felled by the storm, and to devote the proceeds of such sale or barter to the improvement of their homesteads or support of themselves or their families.

Mr. HAWLEY. I suggest to the Senator from Florida a minor criticism upon the bill. The intent of it is to permit certain persons owning homestead rights to take the timber that was thrown down by the cyclone for their own use. That is all quite right.

Mr. PASCO. That is the purpose of the bill.

Mr. HAWLEY. There is no objection in the world to that; but as to the latter part of the bill, which provides that they shall devote the proceeds of such sale to the improvement of their homesteads, etc., I suggest that what they will do with the money is a matter within their own discretion. I have no objection to the bill, but I call attention to this peculiar provision.

Mr. PASCO. That is probably a just criticism of the bill, but it came from the other House in that shape, and I hope the Senator will not delay its passage by amendment.

Mr. HAWLEY. I make no objection to the bill, but why not let a man spend the money in the way he pleases?

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN J. GUERIN.

Mr. BACON. I am instructed by the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8197) for the relief of John J. Guerin, to report it back favorably without amendment, and to ask the immediate consideration by the Senate of the same.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to amend the record in the case of Corpl. John Grant, discharged as corporal of the Marine Corps at Portsmouth, N. H., December 26, 1888, and to grant him an honorable discharge in his rightful name, John J. Guerin.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM GEMMILL.

Mr. TELLER. I am directed by the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8250) for the relief of William Gemmill, to report it without amendment.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I desire to ask the immediate consideration of the bill just reported.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to pay to William Gemmill, of Yankton, S. Dak., $75, in full payment for quartering and boarding United States soldiers during a terrific and protracted snowstorm in the month of April, 1873.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES H. SENTZ.

Mr. BURROWS, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1060) to pay the claim of James H. Sentz, reported the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the bill (S. 1060) entitled "A bill to pay the claim of James H. Sentz," now pending in the Senate, together with all the accompanying papers, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims, in pursuance of the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States," approved March 3, 1887. And the said court shall proceed with the same in accordance with the provisions of such act, and report to the Senate in accordance therewith.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. PERKINS introduced a bill (S. 3704) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to secure payment of certain State bonds and stocks owned by the United States and held under authority of the act of Congress of August 15, 1894, relating to the custody of the Indian trust fund; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. FRYE introduced a bill (S. 3705) for the relief of John Mooney, alias Peter McCabe; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. LINDSAY introduced a bill (S. 3706) granting a pension to Mrs. Anna B. Lewis; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BROWN introduced a bill (S. 3707) granting a pension to Catherine A. Bradley; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. CAMERON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the District appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. HOAR submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. THURSTON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. LINDSAY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HANSBROUGH submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HAWLEY submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to the fortifications appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MILLS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BURROWS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the District of Columbia appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. VILAS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PETTIGREW submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BAKER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

JAMES P. HURLEY.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask for the adoption of the following order:

Ordered, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, directed to withdraw from the files of the Senate all papers in connection with Senate bill No. 3586, granting a pension to James P. Hurley, and forward them to him at his home, No. 11 Sprague street, Charlestown, Mass.

Mr. COCKRELL. That does not include the files of the Pension Office?

Mr. GALLINGER. Not at all; simply his private papers.

The order was agreed to.

PROTECTION OF FUR SEALS.

Mr. PETTIGREW submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, requested to furnish for the information of the Senate a copy of the reply, if any has been made, to the letter addressed by Mr. Gresham to Sir Julian Pauncefote, dated "Department of State, January 21, 1895" (it appears as No. 128, Senate Executive Document No. 67, Fifty-third Congress, third session, pages 160-161), calling the attention of the British Government to the utter failure of the negotiations of the Paris Tribunal to protect the fur-seal herd of Alaska, and requesting a revision of the same.

THE YELLOWSTONE PARK.

Mr. VEST submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Be it resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior is requested to communicate to the Senate whether any action has been taken, or is contemplated, to grant to any person or persons the privilege of erecting a steam plant, elevator, or other appliances on the Yellowstone Canyon, in the Yellowstone Park, for the purpose of conveying persons from the top of the canyon to the bottom. And the Secretary of the Interior is further requested to withhold any action in the premises until it can be determined by Congress as to the propriety of the granting any such privilege.

BILL BECOME A LAW.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the bill (S. 3313) for the relief of John N. Quackenbush, late a commander in the United States Navy, having been presented to the President Feb. 4, 1897, and not having been returned by him to the House of Congress in which it originated within the ten days prescribed by the Constitution, has become a law without his approval.

REMOVALS FROM OFFICE FOR ALLEGED POLITICAL REASONS.

Mr. LODGE. If the morning business is concluded——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning business has not been concluded. The Chair lays before the Senate, as a part of the morning business, the resolution of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN], coming over from a previous day. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. ALLEN on the 13th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the United States Civil Service Commissioners be, and they are hereby, directed to inform the Senate if Mary A. Dalton, William Holmes, Mary Flynn, John Zeller, and Dr. M. S. White, or any of them, have been discharged from the Bureau of Animal Industry at South Omaha, in the State of Nebraska, from positions held under the classified service of the Government; and if so, when, and for what reasons; and if they, or any of them, have asked or petitioned the Civil Service Commissioners for an investigation of the charges made against them, and if said request or petition has been denied by the Civil Service Commissioners; and if so, for what reason or reasons the same has been denied; and that the said Civil Service Commissioners be, and they are hereby, directed to accompany their answer to this resolution with full and complete copies of all affidavits, letters, statements, testimony, depositions, reports of examiners, and all other papers or documents in their possession and in any manner bearing on the subject-matter of this resolution.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President——

Mr. LODGE. I ask the Senator from Nebraska if he will not be willing to allow the resolution to go over until to-morrow without prejudice? I gave notice that I would call up the immigration bill this morning, on which the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GIBSON] desires to address the Senate; and the time for the vote being fixed at 4 o'clock, I do not wish to trespass on his time.

Mr. ALLEN. I should be glad to accommodate the Senator from Massachusetts, but I will consume but a few moments, and I prefer to go on at this time.

On the 15th of this month I introduced the resolution which is now before the Senate, requiring the Civil Service Commissioners to inform the Senate "if Mary A. Dalton, William Holmes, Mary Flynn, John Zeller, and Dr. M. S. White, or any of them, have been discharged from the Bureau of Animal Industry at South Omaha, in the State of Nebraska, from positions held under the classified service of the Government; and if so, when, and for what reasons," and calling upon the Civil Service Commissioners for all correspondence, affidavits, and documents in their office pertaining to these persons.

In December last I received information from reliable sources in Nebraska that these persons had been summarily dismissed from the minor positions they held in the Bureau of Animal Industry, and claiming that they had filed the necessary papers with the Civil Service Commissioners for an investigation of the cause of their removal or dismissal. They appealed to the Commissioners to know the nature of the charges made against them. No response was made to their request; in fact, the receipt of their letters was not acknowledged by the Commissioners, as they inform me. I have been furnished with evidence in the form of letters from reliable persons as to some of the alleged causes of the dismissal of these parties, and they are so absolutely puerile, so absolutely devoid of all reason, that I believe it my duty to call the attention of the Senate and the country to them.

On receiving information of the dismissal of these persons, I addressed a letter to the Civil Service Commissioners, asking if requests had been filed with them for an investigation of the charges. After waiting something like thirty-three days, they answered my letter in a communication to be found on page 1792 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of the current month, in which, after calling my attention to a rule which prescribes that persons shall not be dismissed the service for political reasons, they are kind enough to say:

> In view of the statement of the Secretary of Agriculture and the evidence which he submits, the Commission feels that, with its limited force and the pressure of work, it can not at this time make an investigation of its own into the matter.

They refer in this letter to the fact that the Secretary of Agriculture had furnished evidence that these persons had neglected their duty; but in what respect they do not say. It is evident that when the Commissioners received my letter in the middle of December last they sent it to the Secretary of Agriculture and gave him time to send some person to South Omaha to find or formulate evidence to support the charge of neglect of duty, and they were not kind or courteous enough to reply to my communication, although our offices are not a mile apart, until after a report had been made by the person sent to investigate the charges and after my communication had called their attention to the matter in a way they did not dare neglect it any longer.

I have nothing to say one way or the other respecting that small conception of official responsibility, and official courtesy, and official duty, and official propriety, for that matter, which would prompt officers of the dignity of the Civil Service Commissioners to send my correspondence to the Secretary of Agriculture, or to any other source, without my knowledge and without my consent. It may be that this dignified body—the Civil Service Commission—who are regulating the official roll of this nation, regard that as a proper act to do; but I regard it as a violation of the decencies and proprieties of official life, and I desire to place myself upon record as making that statement.

For what cause were these persons discharged, Mr. President? I call attention of the Senate particularly to some of the beauties of civil-service reform, this panacea for all official evils. Speaking of these ladies, Miss Dalton and Miss Flynn, Dr. White, the superintendent, who himself fell a victim to the system, says in his letter to me of January 16, 1897:

> The two girls discharged were my most faithful assistants. Their offense was having Mr. Bryan's picture in their windows.

That was the only charge made against these girls. Their competency was not questioned; their fitness was not questioned; it was not questioned that the ladies were not discharging their duties during the requisite number of hours, and faithfully. Nothing was said against their character, because they are women of pure character. The only offense they had committed against the Administration and against the Secretary of Agriculture consisted in placing Mr. Bryan's picture in their windows. I suppose that if the placing of these pictures in the windows did not obstruct their vision and did not in any manner impede them in the faithful discharge of their duties, it was a mere matter of choice with them. But, says Dr. White:

> Six other of my assistants had McKinley pictures in their windows, but they are all O. K.

They were not discharged. Two of these women out of the eight were admirers of Mr. Bryan. They were ladies who live in the State in which he lives; they were proud of the State, and proud of its greatness, and proud of the great man it had produced; and with all the enthusiasm and love that women have for the community in which they live, in an unguarded moment, and without consulting the Secretary of Agriculture, they placed the picture of this great man in their windows. But six other women in that department had the picture of Mr. McKinley in their windows, and they were not reprimanded nor discharged for it. There is no pretense, there is no claim, that Miss Dalton and Miss Flynn committed any other offense than in placing these pictures in the windows of the offices where they were at work.

Mr. Zeller's offense consisted in the following fact—and I read from a letter addressed to me by J. C. Dahlman, chairman of the Democratic State central committee, and Lee Herdman, secretary, of February 8, 1897:

> We charge and can show it to be an actual fact that the person in charge at South Omaha, under whose orders Zeller was working, instructed him to quit work and attend the said Democratic county central committee meeting in the interest of the bolting Democrats who were seeking to control said central committee meeting, and that, by the orders of said person in charge of said department at South Omaha, another man was put in the place of said Zeller during his absence. Said Zeller was given a proxy by those who represent Morton in this State, and practically compelled by them to vote according to their dictates. This is now charged against him as neglect of duty.

It seems from the correspondence that Mr. Zeller was an advocate of the free and unlimited coinage of silver at the ratio of 16 to 1. In other words, he was a Bryan supporter. As an American citizen, he had a right to support whoever he might see proper for President. But those over him in office compelled him to take a proxy and go to a meeting of the Democratic county central committee for the purpose of disintegrating and destroying it, and, by that means, giving aid and comfort to the bolting Democrats; and when he returned from the meeting and resumed his duties and began the exercise of his right of citizenship in thinking and acting and voting for himself, he fell under the ax of the headsman. That is the only offense he committed.

Mr. Holmes seems to have fallen a general victim. No specific charge was made against him, and I infer that he was discharged simply because he sympathized with those who were discharged.

Dr. White was discharged because his son, a young man attending school at Lincoln, a distance of 60 miles from Omaha, where the discharged persons were engaged in labor, saw fit to go upon the stump and make a few speeches in Mr. Bryan's interest. The doctor said nothing and did nothing to incur the enmity of any person; but because he failed to restrain his son, a man grown, or practically grown, and prevent him from making speeches advocating the election of Bryan to the Presidency, he also fell a victim to civil-service reform.

Mr. President, I call particular attention to the language used by the Civil Service Commissioners, because I blame them more than any other persons. They have been using this law, which was passed by Congress for a beneficial purpose, for the most infamous purposes for which any law can be used. Here comes the ordinary excuse when a man does not want to do anything: "We feel that we have not the force at our disposal nor the time to make an investigation of our own." It was an open insult; it was designed to be an insult. It was no more than to say: "Notwithstanding these persons have been dismissed unlawfully and in violation of civil-service rules; notwithstanding it is apparent to us that they were discharged for political sympathy or political action, yet we are so dominated by the Administration, or by one of the Departments, that we will not even give them a hearing and an opportunity to be heard in their defense."

I shall not detain the Senate any length of time, Mr. President, in discussing this matter, but I must be permitted to call the attention of the country once more, if I can, to the fact that the civil-service law is a fraud, a snare, and a delusion. More persons fall victims to this so-called law than through any other cause or by any other means. Good but unsuspecting people all over the country believe that we should have a civil service that will recognize men and women on account of their merit, but they do not know that this law is violated every day—violated in hundreds and thousands of instances of this kind—where the poor, helpless victims are hundreds of miles from this capital, where there is no practical appeal to the Commissioners, or to any court, for an investigation of the charges made against them.

The Secretary of Agriculture comes from my State; he is a distinguished citizen of my State, and I am loath to believe that he knows of this. I would not make the charge that he does. I prefer to believe that he knows nothing about it; that some subordinate in the Agricultural Department is responsible for the discharge of these persons.

I hope, Mr. President, in conclusion, that the Senate will adopt this resolution, and, if it be true that these young ladies have been discharged for no greater offense than having Mr. Bryan's picture in their windows, Mr. Zeller for no other offense than exercising his right of citizenship, and Dr. White for no greater offense than his son's making political speeches 60 miles from him, let the country understand the facts and let the Senate understand the facts and the people determine the right.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is upon agreeing to the resolution submitted by the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. HILL. I ask to have the resolution read.

The Secretary again read the resolution.

Mr. HILL. The resolution is rather unusual in its character, and pretty broad and comprehensive, but, nevertheless, I do not see any objection to it.

The resolution was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had proceeded as the Constitution provides, to reconsider the bill (S. 894) entitled "An act granting a pension to Nancy G. Allabach," returned by the President of the United States to the Senate, in which it originated, and passed by the Senate on a reconsideration of the same; and it was Resolved, That the bill do not pass, two-thirds of the House not voting in the affirmative.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2037) to provide times and places for holding terms of United States courts in Utah.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9643) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills, each with an amendment in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (S. 321) granting a pension to James W. Dunn; and

A bill (S. 2923) for the better improvement of the Government reservation at the city of Fort Smith, in the State of Arkansas, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 649) granting a pension to Joseph S. Bunker;

A bill (H. R. 2035) granting an increase of pension to Peter Anderson;

A bill (H. R. 2321) to increase pension of John J. Cross;

A bill (H. R. 2395) granting a pension to Benjamin F. Young, late private of Company G, First Regiment Ohio Volunteer Cavalry;

A bill (H. R. 2974) to correct the military record of Corydon Winkler, late private Eighth Company, First Battalion, First Ohio Sharpshooters;

A bill (H. R. 3402) granting a pension to William Sheppard, late of Company A, Sixteenth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry;

A bill (H. R. 3605) granting a pension to Grotius N. Udell;

A bill (H. R. 3842) to increase the pension of Edward Vunk;

A bill (H. R. 4517) granting a pension to Washington Baker;

A bill (H. R. 4539) granting a pension to Zolman Tyrrell;

A bill (H. R. 5183) granting an increase of pension to Wesley A. Pletcher;

A bill (H. R. 5612) granting a pension to Nathan Mitchell;

A bill (H. R. 6159) to increase the pension of Mrs. Helen A. De Russy;

A bill (H. R. 6268) to increase the pension of William N. Wells;

A bill (H. R. 6803) granting a pension to Ellen Day, stepmother of Albert L. Day;

A bill (H. R. 6922) to pension Catharine Harris;

A bill (H. R. 7073) to increase the pension of Solomon Kline;

A bill (H. R. 7079) to increase the pension of Henry O. Hyre;

A bill (H. R. 7422) granting a pension to Lydia W. Holliday;

A bill (H. R. 7647) granting a pension of $30 per month to Albert Brown;

A bill (H. R. 7688) for the relief of John M. Laughlin;

A bill (H. R. 8075) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Anton Ernst;

A bill (H. R. 8706) to correct the military record of Patrick Hanley; and

A bill (H. R. 10202) defining the jurisdiction of the United States circuit courts in cases brought for the infringement of letters patent.

PROPOSED RESTRICTION OF IMMIGRATION.

Mr. LODGE. I now call up the report of the conference committee on the immigration bill, and ask that it may be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President, I gave notice yesterday that I should call up the Indian appropriation bill immediately after the routine morning business to-day, but I will defer that motion until after the vote is taken on the immigration bill, and then I shall call up the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. LODGE. The conference report has not yet been formally presented. I now present it, and ask that it be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be read.

Mr. PALMER. I rise to ask whether the report of the committee of conference is now before the Senate?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will first be read, after which it will be before the Senate.

The Secretary read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill H. R. 7864, "An act to amend the immigration laws of the United States," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment, and agree to the House bill as follows: Strike out the first section all after the words "admission to the United States the following" and insert:

"All persons physically capable and over 16 years of age who can not read and write the English language or some other language; but a person not so able to read and write who is over 50 years of age and is the parent or grandparent of a qualified immigrant over 21 years of age and capable of supporting such parent or grandparent may accompany such immigrant, or such a parent or grandparent may be sent for and come to join the family of a child or grandchild over 21 years of age, similarly qualified and capable, and a wife or minor child not so able to read and write may accompany or be sent for and come to join the husband or parent similarly qualified and capable."

Strike out the present section 2 and insert a new section as follows:

"SEC. 2. For the purpose of testing the ability of the immigrant to read and write, as required by the foregoing section, the inspection officers shall be furnished with copies of the Constitution of the United States, printed on numbered uniform pasteboard slips, each containing not less than twenty nor more than twenty-five words of said Constitution printed in the various languages of the immigrants in double small pica type. These slips shall be kept in boxes made for that purpose and so constructed as to conceal the slips from view, each box to contain slips of but one language, and the immigrant may designate the language in which he prefers the test shall be made. Each immigrant shall be required to draw one of said slips from the box and read, and afterwards write out, in full view of the immigration officers, the words printed thereon. Each slip shall be returned to the box immediately after the test is finished, and the contents of the box shall be shaken up by an inspection officer before another drawing is made. No immigrant failing to read and write out the slip thus drawn by him shall be admitted, but he shall be returned to the country from which he came at the expense of the steamship or railroad company which brought him, as now provided by law. The inspection officers shall keep in each box at all times a full number of said printed pasteboard slips, and in the case of each excluded immigrant shall keep a certified memorandum of the number of the slip which the said immigrant failed to read or copy out in writing. If in any case from any unavoidable cause the foregoing slips are not at hand for use, the inspection officers shall carefully and thoroughly test the ability of the immigrant to read and write, using the most appropriate and available means at their command; and shall state fully in writing the reasons why the slips are lacking, and describe the substituted method adopted for testing the ability of the immigrant."

Strike out the present section 3 and insert a new section, as follows:

"SEC. 3. That the provisions of the act of March 3, 1893, to facilitate the enforcement of the immigration and contract-labor laws, shall apply to the persons mentioned in section 1 of this act."

Strike out the present sections 4, 5, and 6, and insert as follows:

"SEC. 4. That it shall hereafter be unlawful for any male alien who has not in good faith made his declaration before the proper court of his intention to become a citizen of the United States, to be employed on any public works of the United States, or to come regularly or habitually into the United States by land or water for the purpose of engaging in any mechanical trade or manual labor for wages or salary, returning from time to time to a foreign country.

"SEC. 5. That it shall be unlawful for any person, partnership, company, or corporation knowingly to employ any alien coming into the United States in violation of the next preceding section of this act: Provided, That the provisions of this act shall not apply to the employment of sailors, deck hands, or other employees of vessels, or railroad train hands, such as conductors, engineers, brakemen, firemen, or baggagemen, whose duties require them to pass over the frontier to reach the termini of their runs, or to boatmen or guides on the lakes and rivers on the northern border of the United States.

"SEC. 6. That any violation of the provisions of sections 4 and 5 of this act by any alien or citizen shall be deemed a misdemeanor, punishable by a fine not exceeding $500 or by imprisonment for the term of not exceeding one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court: Provided, That all persons convicted of a violation of section 4 of this act shall be deported to the country whence they came."

"SEC. 7. That notwithstanding the provisions of this or any other existing law, the Secretary of the Treasury may permit aliens to enter this country for the purpose of teaching new arts or industries under such rules and regulations as he may provide."

Add a new section as follows:

"SEC. 8. That this act shall not apply to persons arriving in the United States from any port or place in the Island of Cuba, during the continuance of the present disorders there, who have heretofore been inhabitants of that island."

Strike out the present section 7 and insert as follows:

"SEC. 9. That this act shall take effect July 1, 1897."

H. C. LODGE,
WM. E. CHANDLER,
CHAS. J. FAULKNER,
Managers of the Conference on the Part of the Senate.

L. DANFORD,
STANYARNE WILSON,
Managers of the Conference on the Part of the House.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I desire only to say a very few words as to the nature of the report, which has been in print for a week and on the tables of Senators, and which I think is entirely understood.

The conferees have changed the phrasing in regard to the language qualification from "the English language or the language of the native or resident country" to "the English or some other language."

In deference to objection made on the floor in regard to the point that the original conference report would separate husband and wife, a new clause has been added which enables a man able to read and write to bring with him or send for not only his wife, but his minor children—an enlargement made by the committee.

The new section, which was put in as an administrative section, to which objection was made by the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] as new matter, has been stricken out entirely. That part of the bill, therefore, comes back from the second conference in substance as it left the Senate. The addition is what is known as the Corliss amendment. That was in the last conference report, and remains unchanged in this conference report. The Senate committee, as it will be remembered, struck out the Corliss amendment when they first reported the bill. The House conferees stood very strongly for that amendment, but finally agreed to accept important modifications in it, and then insisted upon its retention in the bill.

I have nothing further to say, Mr. President. I think the bill has been so much discussed that it is thoroughly understood. I desire merely to move at the proper time fixed for taking the vote that the Senate concur in the conference report. I gladly give way now to the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GIBSON] in opposition to the bill.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. President, I yield a part of the time which I shall ask the Senate to accord to me to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER], who desires to address the Senate briefly on this question, after which I understand he will be followed by the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER]. I shall desire then to take the floor in my own behalf.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. President, from the growth of what may be called nativism in the United States, and from the fact, as I understand, that in another branch of Congress this conference report has been accepted, I expect that the Senate will concur with the conference committee. I know of no sentiment, no feeling which has prevailed throughout the United States to a greater or less extent, and for which I have a greater and more profound and earnest detestation, than the doctrine of nativism. Believing as I do that all men are entitled to liberty, or, as that term is best expressed in the ancient Declaration, "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness," and believing that the right of expatriation and of migration is essential to the enjoyment of that perfect liberty which I claim to be the right of every man, I have detested nativism. This is but an expansion of that same sentiment. Its real purpose is to restrict immigration, to confine it, to impose conditions upon the right of foreigners to migrate into the United States. It is not very successfully done, however, and I congratulate the committee of conference that they have improved the original Senate bill so much.

When the bill was before the Senate on a former occasion I opposed it because its effect would be to separate families. I recollect that Senators on this floor argued that it was no hardship to parents that they should remain in the country of their birth until their children were educated to the moderate extent which is required by this bill.

Mr. President, I do not wish to be understood as underrating the value of even the moderate degree of literary attainment required by this bill as a probable improvement in enlightened citizenship. I have during my whole life favored free public education. In 1847 I was a member of a constitutional convention of the State of Illinois, and I reported to that convention, without succeeding in securing its adoption, a constitutional provision which would, if it had been adopted, impose upon the State the duty of providing a common school education, as the term then was understood in Illinois, for all the children of the State. I have also favored the diffusion of free education. I make these remarks in advance, because I do not wish to be understood as underrating the value, as I have said before, of the moderate degree of education required by this conference report. But "a man's a man for a' that."

The great purpose of our Government is to promote the happiness of the people, though I concede the right of the State to exclude from its limits or prevent the entrance into its territory of all dangerous persons, persons who have been guilty of crime, because liberty itself, as precious as it is, and to the extent that I claim the right of every man to liberty, may be forfeited by the commission of crimes. Such is the provision of the constitutions of all the States, especially of the constitution of the State of Illinois, to which I appeal with more confidence, because I am more familiar with its provisions. Liberty itself may be forfeited by the commission of crime whereof the party has been duly convicted.

I grant also that quarantine laws may be enacted for the protection of the public health. I am not disposed to limit the power of Congress, which may pass naturalization laws, to impose such proper and reasonable terms, such conditions as are essential to the enjoyment of the liberty which belongs to every man—to impose such terms and conditions of adoptive citizenship. But my experience and observation, both, are that the terms and conditions required of immigrants, persons coming into the United States, as imposed by this bill are essentially and radically unjust, as they impose conditions upon the natural rights of law-abiding men.

I have said before that I concede that men hold the right to liberty upon the condition of their obedience to law, and perhaps I may add their ability to support themselves without being a public charge. I concede that those are proper limitations upon the right of migration, the right of leaving an old home and finding a new one.

I read from the report:

All persons physically capable and over 16 years of age who can not read and write the English language or some other language.

I have said that this condition, in addition to being unjust, and one that has its origin in a desire to check and to control immigration, will be found in practice to be absolutely useless. While I have conceded that the United States may exclude dangerous persons from its limits, I have found by somewhat extended observation that the dangerous men who enter the United States, the brawling anarchists, those who would disturb public order, can read and write, and do read and do write, while this will operate upon a harmless and useful class of immigrants.

Having said this much in regard to the first section of the conference report, I will proceed to note my protest against the fourth section of the bill.

Is it not true, Mr. President, that the provisions of this fourth section of the bill will be found in the code of no other State? My observation and reading are not so extensive as to justify me in saying that this section is peculiarly American. I am sure it is not found in the codes of the Dominion nor of England; I am sure it is not found in the code of Mexico, nor of any of those countries which adjoin us. It is also true that the purpose of this section is to operate upon laborers alone. It reads:

SEC. 4. That it shall hereafter be unlawful for any male alien who has not in good faith made his declaration before the proper court of his intention to become a citizen of the United States to be employed on any public works of the United States, or to come regularly or habitually into the United States by land or water for the purpose of engaging in any mechanical trade or manual labor for wages or salary, returning from time to time to a foreign country.

I say that it is obvious, because no other persons are expressed, that this is intended to operate alone on mechanics and laborers. Whether the authors of this report intended that the requirement of reading and writing should not be imposed upon the laborers who return from time to time to a foreign country or not, I do not know. I do not know whether the Canadian laborer or the Mexican laborer or any laborer who may come into the United States with a view of bettering his condition and returning to his own country would be required to be able to read and write or not. The section is distressingly uncertain on that point, and possibly a construction may be given it that would make it read as I will suggest:

That hereafter it shall be unlawful for any male alien not able to read the English language, or some other language, to become a citizen of the United States or to make his declaration before the proper court of his intention to become a citizen of the United States.

I am not able to determine in my own mind exactly whether that requirement would be imposed upon an alien laborer coming into the United States to work at some mechanical trade or manual labor or not. But I have said that in my judgment the provision found in the fourth section is without precedent in the legislation of any civilized country in the world. I make that broad statement subject to the right of any Senator to suggest where a similar law can be found or where a similar provision of law can be found. So the United States of America, "the land of the free and the home of the brave," the land which has offered a refuge to the orderly men of all the world, originates this policy.

Mr. President, can it be supposed for a moment that the Dominion of Canada or Mexico—indeed, all the world—will not imitate our miserably narrow example? Suppose that our people go into other countries; that miners and lumbermen go into Canada or into other portions of the British dominion, and that those countries should imitate our example. Indeed, I saw the other day, in a newspaper published at Detroit, the statement that the exclusion of occasional labor from other countries would operate more severely upon the Americans in the case of countervailing legislation than it would upon the people of any adjacent state or territory. Is it not true that miners are seeking the rich treasures of the Mexican mines; that Americans are flocking to that country? Is it not true that thousands of our people are visiting the mines of the Northwest, and have gone across the border and are engaged in the preparation of lumber for the American market? Is not all that true, and can it be believed for a moment——

Mr. CAFFERY. Will the Senator from Illinois permit me?

Mr. PALMER. With great pleasure.

Mr. CAFFERY. There are a great many Americans now engaged in mining in the Transvaal. There are American engineers conducting mining operations there largely.

Mr. PALMER. I am obliged to the Senator for the suggestion. Undoubtedly our people are seeking adventure in all countries where wages or salaries can be found. The suggestion of the Transvaal is one, and I repeat Mexico and the British dominions. They are everywhere. If this country shall be guilty of an offense against the comity of nations so gross and offensive as this is, it may be expected that other nations will imitate our example. Indeed, I observed the other day that as to the lake navigation the Canadians have threatened to adopt retaliatory legislation. It is an outrage upon the comity of nations and of the civilization of the age that mere laborers, toilers who may happen to live across the line, whose homes may be in Canada or in Mexico, shall not be allowed to come into the United States and labor for the support of those who are dear to them. I mention this fact because it is the beginning of a system of legislation that will place us at war with all the world—I mean a war of legislative restrictions.

Mr. President, the whole principle upon which these requirements are made, either in New England or in the States of literary qualifications for the exercise of any right, is a crime against humanity. In some of the New England States they require that men shall be able to read or write. I do not remember what the qualifications are.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think there is only one New England State that does so.

Mr. PALMER. Only one of the New England States?

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; Massachusetts.

Mr. PALMER. Illinois, which requires no such qualification, is as well governed as Massachusetts. Every man in Illinois who has not been convicted of crime participates in the exercise of the right of suffrage.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from Illinois allow me?

Mr. PALMER. With great pleasure.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator says Illinois is as well governed as Massachusetts. I suppose the Senator is speaking of the time when he was governor.

Mr. PALMER. Then and now. As a matter of course, I do not except my own incumbency of the gubernatorial office. The State was well governed, and it is as well governed as Massachusetts, and Massachusetts can claim no superiority over Illinois or any of the States where the right of suffrage is unrestricted.

The fatal example of Massachusetts has furnished a precedent for much of the history of the South. In the Southern States a literary qualification is required, and the precedent of Massachusetts is pleaded by way of extenuation or excuse. Massachusetts perhaps is the inventor of that system by which a large proportion of the men of the South are excluded from the exercise of their rights. Such will be the fatal effect of legislation like this. It is dangerous as an example; it is dangerous as a precedent; it is objectionable upon moral grounds which I need not argue.

Mr. HOAR. I think the Senator from Illinois, if he will permit me, ought to bear in mind that the constitutional prohibition in Massachusetts is accompanied by provisions for securing popular education so liberal, comprehensive, far-reaching, and effective that practically no native of the Commonwealth, who has not some peculiar mental infirmity unfitting him for capacity, is unable to read and write. So the restriction, such as it is, applies only to persons coming into the State from other places, either at home or abroad—chiefly abroad—to whom reading and writing are ordinarily almost essential as a means of becoming acquainted with the character and spirit of American institutions or the merits of pending questions. The reading and writing prohibition of the constitution, without an absolute provision requiring all children to go to school when they are of school age and without providing means at the public charge for their education, is a very different thing from such a provision where it is accompanied with such a policy.

I do not believe that a native of Massachusetts, and it is very rare indeed that a native of the United States, is ever affected by that provision. I do not wish to trespass upon the good nature of the Senator from Illinois, or to take the time of the Senate to go into a general discussion of the policy of a reading and writing prohibition as applied practically to foreigners from other countries. I am willing to do so on any proper occasion, but I desired to submit to the Senator the suggestion I have made.

Mr. PALMER. The provisions made in Massachusetts for education are possibly wise, and as liberal as those of any other State, but the Senator concedes that the effect of the qualifications prescribed by the constitution does sometimes operate to the exclusion of natives of the State, and it does more frequently operate to the exclusion of the rights of American citizens, who have become so from choice—men who have proved in courts that they are of good character, and are attached to the Constitution of the United States.

One of the grounds on which I oppose this measure is that in Massachusetts the prohibition operates to the exclusion of foreigners, and in some of the Southern States it operates to the exclusion of the negroes, men who are free, having been made free by proper means. The miserable example of Massachusetts is pleaded as a precedent for similar provisions in the constitutions of Southern States under which law-abiding, orderly, industrious men are denied a right to participate in the Government which they are compelled to support by the payment of taxes and by other means.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator from Illinois a question. Does he deny or doubt that the class of people to which this is applicable can, if dwelling in Massachusetts, with the resources which the State places at their command, acquire that constitutional qualification in the five years between taking out their original papers and their final papers, if they are so disposed?

Mr. PALMER. I admit that they can.

Mr. HOAR. Very well.

Mr. PALMER. Most of them, however——

Mr. HOAR. Then, if the Senator will pardon me, this miserable policy that he talks of is a policy which never excluded a native American, probably; certainly not to amount to anything.

Mr. PALMER. One is enough.

Mr. HOAR. It is a policy which says to the foreigner "during the five years between the filing of the original papers and the granting of your final papers we will teach you to read and to write if you want to learn. If you will not do it, you can not vote." That is all there is of it.

Mr. GRAY. Will the Senator from Illinois allow me to ask the Senator from Massachusetts a question?

Mr. PALMER. Certainly; with pleasure.

Mr. GRAY. I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts whether the opportunities for learning to read and write, which are concededly so liberal in Massachusetts, extend to adults?

Mr. HOAR. They extend to any adult who chooses to avail himself of free schools. There is no trouble with it at all.

Mr. GRAY. Does the Senator suppose that an adult who comes here and has to earn his living with his hands can avail himself of those opportunities?

Mr. HOAR. I suppose that any adult with the energy and capacity and principle which an American citizen ought to have will not have the slightest difficulty in the world in learning to read and write within the five years of his preliminary experience.

I have known again and again colored adults to learn to read and write. I remember once going down in the evening for some special purpose in search of a colored man who was in my employ. As I went to the front door of his house I passed the side window, and there he was sitting, with his little girl 10 or 12 years of age teaching him to read and write. Since that time he has published a very admirable book of his own composition.

I wish to add that this talk about the miserable example of Massachusetts is, in my judgment, a piece of pure demagogic work in many of the quarters from which it comes. I would not attribute any such purpose or motive to the Senator from Illinois, of course; it would be furthest from my thought to do so; but he has taken up idle, wild, and shallow conclusions and judgments.

Mr. PALMER. I am perfectly willing to take my place with every one who uses the language that I do, and if the Senator from Massachusetts chooses to attribute to me the language of a demagogue, I must accept it. I have no desire to separate myself from those who denounce any infringement upon the right of an American citizen to participate in his Government, a Government that he must defend in time of war, a Government to whose support he must contribute from his property in peace. I therefore repudiate, repel, deny any claim that I have to separate myself from those who think as I do and use the language I do.

The Senator from Massachusetts does not seem to realize the dignity and the importance of the rights of an American citizen. The State of Massachusetts during the war sent its emissaries into the South and enlisted thousands of men who could neither read nor write to fill its quota, when required by the laws of the land. Those men were good enough to fight for Massachusetts, but had no right to participate in the government of that State, because they could neither read nor write.

Mr. HOAR. Does the Senator from Illinois speak of a colored man fighting in that war at which his liberty was at stake as a man fighting for Massachusetts?

Mr. PALMER. I speak of the fact that Massachusetts filled its quota with men who could neither read nor write. Many of them are now inhabitants of the State. They were permitted to take the place of citizens who could read and write, as I suppose.

I met during the war thousands of men from all the States who could neither read nor write. They were brave men. They stood in their places in the ranks. Some of them died there; others sustained wounds; they were in the hospital. They were men who could neither read nor write, and yet under this bill such a man shall not be allowed to become a citizen of the United States. I have been drawn away from the true argument——

Mr. HOAR. The prohibition of the State constitution excepts all soldiers from the disqualification.

Mr. PALMER. I am glad of that. They were not exempted,

I suppose, at the time of enlistment. They did their service and filled the place. They were known as Massachusetts regiments, and were commanded generally by Massachusetts men.

I had not expected to engage in this discussion at such great length. I dislike this legislation, first, because it is radically unjust. It abridges the right of an orderly man to go into a strange country, if he will, and there make a home.

In justice to the bill, I must say it does not prohibit the incoming of the family on account of the ignorance of the children or the wife. But I oppose it upon the ground I mention. I oppose it as a precedent. I regard it as a concession to that detestable thing called nativism, which is a most desirable thing when kept within proper and humane limits. I oppose it because it is a precedent. It is legislation in the direction of other restrictions, and it imposes upon the rights of man. The right of a man to migrate, to expatriate himself, to leave his own country and come to this, has been claimed and conceded. I do not know whether Martin Koszta could read or write, probably he could; but would it have been any different when he was at Smyrna, when American citizenship was prized as it then was? Indeed this, in my judgment, is intended as a restriction, as a means of embarrassing emigration.

Having thus stated my views with the utmost freedom, I shall no longer claim the attention of the Senate.

Mr. GIBSON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FAULKNER in the chair). The Senator from Maryland suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aldrich,	Cullom,	Lodge,	Proctor,
Allen,	Daniel,	McMillan,	Pugh,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-two Senators having answered to their names, a quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, it seems at this time useful that the parliamentary situation in which the pending measure is found should be understood. On the 11th instant, in the absence of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GIBSON] and during my temporary absence from the Chamber, unanimous consent was given to vote upon the measure at 4 o'clock this afternoon. I am free to say that if I had been present at the time, I should have objected to the agreement, but realizing the necessity for rigid adherence to such arrangements when made, I do not feel authorized or even inclined in any manner to impair the arrangement as consummated then. However, I wish to give notice that if this conference report shall be disagreed to I will immediately, following that action, present this resolution to the Senate for consideration:

Resolved, That the Senate request a further conference with the House on the bill of the House H. R. 7864, and that the Senate conferees be, and are hereby, instructed to insist upon adding to section 4 of the bill as reported by the conference the following, to wit: "That the provisions of this section shall not apply to any alien who is a resident citizen of any country on this hemisphere."

The section referred to is that read by the Senator from Illinois, made applicable to aliens coming into the United States and finding employment here prior to declaring their intention to become citizens. I agree with the Senator from Illinois that no such legislation, so far as my knowledge extends, can be found upon the statute books of any civilized country in Christendom to-day. Let the section be read. It is found as follows:

SEC. 4. That it shall hereafter be unlawful for any male alien who has not in good faith made his declaration before the proper court of his intention to become a citizen of the United States to be employed on any public works of the United States, or to come regularly or habitually into the United States by land or water for the purpose of engaging in any mechanical trade or manual labor, for wages or salary, returning from time to time to a foreign country.

The next section prohibits the employment of such persons, and reads as follows:

SEC. 5. That it shall be unlawful for any person, partnership, company, or corporation knowingly to employ any alien coming into the United States in violation of the next preceding section of this act: Provided, That the provisions of this act shall not apply to the employment of sailors, deck hands, or other employees of vessels, or railroad train hands, such as conductors, engineers, brakemen, firemen, or baggagemen, whose duties require them to pass over the frontier to reach the termini of their runs, or to boatmen or guides on the lakes and rivers on the northern border of the United States.

Then follows in another section a most severe and drastic penalty, to be attached in the event of this employment being procured. It reads as follows:

SEC. 6. That any violation of the provisions of sections 4 and 5 of this act by any alien or citizen shall be deemed a misdemeanor, punishable by a fine not exceeding $500 or by imprisonment for the term of not exceeding one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court: Provided, That all persons convicted of a violation of section 4 of this act shall be deported to the country whence they came.

With reference to the bill in general, I have no special objection. If criticism might at this time be offered, I think it would lodge against the bill as an immature and unwise piece of legislation—crude, as my colleague suggests. It seems that it would be infinitely better to provide that persons contemplating residence or citizenship in this country should first go before an American consul abroad and make clear to the consul of the United States the fact of previous good character and capacity to become citizens and show appreciation of citizenship in this Republic. But the committee did not think proper to incorporate such a condition precedent.

The objectionable sections might, with some degree of propriety, be made applicable to aliens residing across the water, where old conditions have so fettered the hands of toil that men are not now capable, after passing through centuries of those hard surroundings, to compete upon terms of equality and with justice to our own workmen in this country.

But, Mr. President, let it be known and understood that it has been the proud boast of this Republic that its standing in the civilized world entitles it to assert as a vital principle the far-famed Monroe doctrine. We have assumed the right to speak for this hemisphere and the people who live upon it. We have assumed and arrogated to ourselves the privilege of dictating, independent of Europe, policy for the peoples residing in North and South America. While asserting that doctrine as a rule of action binding upon all nations of Europe, it is now proposed to incorporate in a law this pessimistic, drastic, and trifling proposition that no citizen on the American continent who does not previously declare his intention to become a part of the Republic shall be permitted to do a day's work within the limits of the United States. Go back into the most provincial periods of the Middle Ages, when passion and prejudice controlled the day, and you will find nowhere a proposition put upon a statute book like that.

What is to be the effect upon our own people, Mr. President? If we have no regard for neighborly relationship, if we do not wish to indicate any desire to live on terms of peace and good will with those who adjoin our territories, let us, then, respond, if response is demanded, to the matter of pure, unadulterated self-interest in the matter.

Can the government of Canada fail to incorporate in the statute law of the Dominion at the earliest possible opportunity the exact language which we now propose to incorporate in the law of the United States? Canada has a larger number of square miles of land than the United States within its geographical boundaries. It has less than 5,000,000 of population. I believe it can safely be asserted that where one citizen of Canada who has not declared an intention to be a citizen of this country will be found toiling in the United States there are at least a dozen American citizens enjoying lucrative employment in the broad domain of that practically unoccupied country.

Mr. GRAY. May I ask the Senator from Montana a question there for information?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. CARTER. I shall be glad to yield to the Senator.

Mr. GRAY. I have not had time to look over the conference report, but I understood the Senator to say, and I want to ask him if he says it after due consideration, that the section inserted by the conference report to-day provides that it shall be unlawful for any person, partnership, or company in this country to employ any alien who has not previously declared his intention of becoming a citizen. Is that true?

Mr. CARTER. That is the language of the proposed law.

Mr. GRAY. Or is it confined to the public works of the United States? I am inclined to think that the first impression I got is the correct one, that it prohibits any private employment of an alien who has not previously declared his intention.

Mr. CARTER. I so understand the language of the section.

Mr. CHANDLER. From regularly and habitually coming.

Mr. GRAY. If that is the case, it is very much more drastic than the preceding report.

Mr. CARTER. Undoubtedly these two sections of this proposed act will inaugurate a policy in this country which will call for retaliation from every Government upon the American continent. West of the main range of the Rocky Mountains there must be to-day employed at from $2.50 to $3.50 per day, in the mines of British Columbia, no less than from 25,000 to 50,000 American citizens. Do we desire to bring about a state of affairs where those American citizens must either relinquish their jobs or renounce their citizenship as Americans and become subjects of Her Majesty the Queen of Great Britain?

In the Republic of Mexico it is a fact so notorious as to require no citation of authority that the vast system of railroads is operated generally, managed, and controlled by American citizens.

The railway conductors, the division superintendents, the section foremen, the roadmasters, the clerks in the offices, the yardmasters at the terminals, the firemen—indeed, a very large proportion of the persons who furnish the directing genius of the railroads of Mexico are citizens of the United States. Is it wise, consulting naught but the mere matter of selfishness, to invite the Republic of Mexico to command these people either to leave the Republic or renounce citizenship of the United States and become citizens of Mexico?

On the St. Croix River, coming nearer to the Eastern coast, I am advised that the large woolen mills found upon the north bank of the river pretty generally employ operatives who reside within the United States. I have been informed by a Senator upon the floor that the owner of one of them, an individual who employs a large number of people, says he is advised by the Dominion authorities that they will be constrained if not compelled by public sentiment to enact retaliatory measures at once, and that it will result in destroying the occupation of thousands of people who reside along the St. Croix River and find lucrative employment upon the northern bank.

But it is suggested that for the benefit of a few States on the Pacific Coast the Chinese exclusion act was passed. I trust that no Senator inclined to draw forth that simile in aid of this legislation will for one moment ask the Senate to discern any particular similarity between a resident of Canada and a citizen or subject of China. It was deemed for the best interests of all the people of the United States to put some sort of check by legislative enactment between the laboring elements of this country and the 400,000,000 people in China. The wisdom of that law, I think, has been amply demonstrated. But the fact that that enactment obtained has no relation to the case we are now considering.

The mission of the United States assumed, and very properly, has been to extend its influence as a beneficent, benevolent, civilizing agency over all this hemisphere. We believe that our advancement in science, in civilization, in art, in industry, together with our large population and resources, entitle us, yea, command us, to discharge an obligation and duty to all the people residing on this Western Hemisphere, the people who have responded largely to our example and to their own aspirations for liberty by getting governments established similar to our own. Are we now, near the close of the nineteenth century, to draw a line between the United States and these neighboring States, and through the drawing of the line actually force American citizenship upon any man who wants to come in here for a brief period to make a living, or to see whether he likes the country?

As heretofore suggested, these two sections will inaugurate a policy. With that policy I believe the sentiment of this country is and will continue to be at war. There is no demand either East or West, North or South, for any inhibition on honest men from either Mexico or Canada coming into the United States and going back at their own sweet will. We receive from the Dominion and the adjoining Republic the courtesy which we have been extending, and our interests will severely suffer, as well as our good manners, if we now depart from the ancient policy, which has not resulted in evil, but in much good, by adopting these two severe and unheard-of sections as a part of the proposed law.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator from Montana allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask the Senator whether it is not a fact that American wages are very much higher than the wages in the countries north and south of us, and whether it is not the Senator's policy and my policy to keep them very much higher?

Mr. CARTER. That will not hold good as to the mining population in the Northwest. I believe along the St. Croix River the wages paid in Canada are just as remunerative as the wages paid on the south bank of the river. I think the same is true at Detroit and other places. I know, as far as the mining region is concerned, with which I am most familiar, that the wages are substantially the same. The same class of enterprises is being prosecuted on the north as on the south side of the line, and any American citizen going into the Dominion of Canada to mine is treated precisely the same as and on terms of equality with a subject of Great Britain. He is called upon merely to take out a miner's license, and everyone is required to do that.

With reference to the Mexican border, conditions are somewhat different. The superiority of the artisans of our own country will usually prove ample protection in so far as Mexico is concerned.

I shall offer the resolution read in the beginning of my remarks when this vote shall have been taken, provided the vote disagrees with the conference report. I should not have detained the Senate on this subject, but it appeared obvious to my mind, after full consideration, that the adoption of the conference report as it stands would inaugurate a policy on the part of this Government which no Senator stands prepared to-day to father or support.

Mr. CAFFERY. Mr. President, when the bill was up before, there was an objectionable feature of the bill separating husband and wife, which has been excluded from the conference report. In a brief argument I stated some objections which I had to the bill. The objections are to the general character of the measure. I do not believe in placing an educational qualification upon an immigrant to this country. I think that that qualification is properly imposed in the several States as a qualification upon the franchise, and not as a test of the desirability of an immigrant.

I have failed to observe that an illiterate immigrant, a hard-working, industrious man, did not make a good citizen. Under the policy adopted in the several States, notably in Massachusetts, and latterly in a good many of the Southern States, it has been found politic to adopt an educational qualification for the exercise of the elective franchise. With that policy I have no quarrel. I indorse that policy fully.

But, Mr. President, the main objection, as I understand, to unrestricted immigration, is that the immigration may in some manner, in some way, compete with American labor, and thereby reduce the wages of American laborers. That argument, if worth anything, is only to be applied to States where there is already an abundance of labor. It signally fails of any application where there is a dearth of labor. Notwithstanding since the war there has been a larger amount of immigration into the United States than ever before, the fact remains that the price of labor throughout the United States instead of declining has steadily advanced.

Some years ago I read an address delivered by an eminent citizen of the United States at the centennial anniversary of American independence at Philadelphia. It was delivered by Mr. William M. Evarts. That address set out that after the war of independence there was between the thirteen original colonies scattered along the American seaboard a very wide line of demarcation. That line was the black belt. In that address it was set out that the presence of a large number of colored people owned as slaves prevented white immigration from entering the South; that immigration therefore necessarily had followed lines of longitude instead of lines of latitude; the more inviting climate, the more fertile soil of the South was denied to the European immigrant, and therefore he had to make his home westward. Mr. Evarts attributed the wonderful growth of the western section of our Union to the fact that European white immigration poured into that section and built up a new empire, at the expense of the South.

Now, sir, there are, omitting Alaska, about 1,500,000 square miles of arable surface in the United States, and of this area there are only 282,500 square miles now cultivated. This is a little over 20 per cent of the arable lands in the United States. Of that uncultivated territory the larger portion now is in the South.

I think it would be suicidal in the South to put any sort of restriction upon the access into the United States of hard-working, industrious foreign immigrants. I do not think that the present immigrants are as a class equal to the original settlers of this country; but I do know that more than three-quarters of the area of the United States now wants development, and it wants development through industrious muscle and brawn and brain. In my opinion it would be exceedingly impolitic and unwise to exclude hard-working, industrious immigrants from the United States by any provision of this kind.

It is true, sir, that the qualification is not drastic nor very wide in its scope. It only excludes immigrants over 16 years of age who can not read and write the English language or some other language. But unfortunately the large class of immigrants from Europe—hard-working, industrious people—are denied the privileges and opportunities of public education; and while they make excellent citizens, if not good voters, they are under this disability, and it would be exceedingly unwise in my opinion to exclude them.

Mr. President, I am familiar with a lot of immigrants, who are very much slandered, in my opinion, generally as undesirable immigrants. They are the Italians. There are Italians and Italians. The Italian proper, the agricultural Italian, the man who comes from Italy proper, is a good, hard-working, industrious citizen. The Sicilians are generally classed as Italians. They are not so desirable as a rule. They do not make as good citizens as the Italians. The criticisms leveled at the Italians generally are, in my opinion, unjust.

There never was a time when it could not be said that any accession to the laboring element would not reduce the price of wages. Every accession in the earliest time must have had that effect, and if the rule is good now it was good then. I do not believe that any hard-working, industrious man coming into the country, adding to its wealth by his labor, does decrease or lower the price of labor. I believe the wealth he produces, the stimulus that he gives to enterprise, more than makes amends for any temporary derangement of the labor market, in that it affords more employment to labor and gives more scope for industrial expansion.

I am in receipt of a copy of a letter which was sent to the Secretary of State—a private letter—and was forwarded to me. It is signed by the celebrated novelist Ouida. It contains a defense of the Italians. I propose to insert it in my remarks. If any Senator desires me to read it, I shall do so with pleasure.

Mr. CHANDLER. I shall not object to the Senator printing it. I only call attention to the fact that there is no State in the Union where the Italians have been treated so badly as they have been in Louisiana. Several of them have been killed there, and the United States has been obliged to pay indemnity for those cases of murder. I am glad to see that the Senator from Louisiana is coming to appreciate the virtues of Italian immigrants.

Mr. CAFFERY. Mr. President, that sort of fling has no effect upon me. There was a murder of Chinese in the Northwest, too, but that is no reflection upon the good people of the Northwest. The people of Louisiana, as a general rule, did not indorse the killing of the Italians. They were killed under very peculiar circumstances. For that murder I have no sort of apology, nor for any other murder; but that murder does not afford any evidence whatever of the opinion in which the people of Louisiana hold the Italians as laborers and as industrious citizens.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I trust my colleague will have the letter of the novelist Ouida read.

Mr. CAFFERY. I send it to the Secretary's desk, and ask that it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

SIR: Will you pardon my addressing you concerning the bill which I see is before Congress, in intent to exclude emigrants who can not read. If you exclude Italians who can not read you will lose the best and most laborious part of the population, and you will admit the trash of cities. It is not a test which can be properly applied to Italians, or indeed to any populace. Why should you suppose the power to spell out the crimes recorded in cheap newspapers is any guaranty for either virtue or intelligence?

In Italy the peasantry are almost entirely illiterate; yet they are the only class which can give immigrants of any value. I have had many men in my employ; I have invariably found those who could not read ten times more industrious, temperate, intelligent, and honest than those corrupted by the trumpery "education" of schools. I have had for twenty years an old man (who has been what is called the odd man in England) and he can be sent with fifty commissions to purchase objects, detailed to him only orally, and he will execute these commissions with no single error either of oblivion or of payment.

Such a man you would turn from your shores, whilst you would receive the youth corrupted, emasculated, diseased through cheap journalism, bad tobacco, and the enforced physical idleness of the schools.

I beg you to allow me to remain, obediently, yours,

OUIDA (LOUISE DE LA RAMÉE).

JANUARY 30, 1897.

Mr. CAFFERY. I can add nothing to the eloquent appeal of the distinguished novelist in behalf of the Italians. My own personal testimony to their industry and worth very well accords with this eloquent defense of them by this novelist.

Mr. President, the other features of this bill have been very ably discussed by the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER], and need no further discussion. I will only say that, in my opinion, this blow at the industrious Canadians or the industrious Mexicans is entirely unwarranted. I see no use for any such provision as this, and I see no use for the other provision in this bill for the free ingress into the United States of Cubans as long as the present disorders exist in that island. When will the present disorders in that island ever cease? They appear to be chronic. Either Cuba will win her independence or she will not. If she does not, her leaders say she will continue the fight with Spain. If she does, the Cubans will fight among themselves. So, therefore, in my opinion, this provision in regard to the admission of Cubans into the United States opens the gates of the United States to Cubans for pretty much all time to come. Why this privilege in favor of the Cubans? Are they any better citizens than the Italians?

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, the Senator will allow me to make a correction. The Cuban clause only applies to the term covered by the continuance of the present disorders in that island. In the first place, that is not, I trust, quite for all time to come. Secondly, it only exempts the Cuban refugees who may come over during the present disorders in the island from the obligation to be able to read and write. That is all. It grants no other privilege to the Cubans.

While I am on my feet, I hope the Senator will allow me to say that I did not mean to make any fling against the people of Louisiana. I only desired to express my hope that, influenced by this letter of Ouida, the Louisianians would not kill any more Italians. I disclaim the idea of having attempted any fling.

Mr. CAFFERY. I am very glad the Senator has made the explanation. I join with him in the hope that no more Italians will be killed anywhere.

Mr. CHANDLER. I concur in that also. Italians have been killed in Colorado; and I hope we shall always protect the people of any nation when they come upon our soil.

Mr. CAFFERY. The provision in regard to Cuba reads:

SEC. 8. That this act shall not apply to persons arriving in the United States from any port or place in the Island of Cuba, during the continuance of the present disorders there, who have heretofore been inhabitants of that island.

Mr. President, that language is very loose. In my opinion, that might admit Cubans after the revolution now going on had ceased and other disorders of a like character prevailed. I think that this section 8, even under the commentary or construction placed upon it by the Senator from New Hampshire, is invidious, and not warranted. The Cubans who can not read are to be admitted as citizens. The present disorder there may last a long time. According to the pronunciamento of Gomez, it is "liberty or death," "liberty or annihilation." They do not want any concessions from Spain; they must have absolute independence. How long, then, will this war be dragged out between the insurgents in Cuba and the Spaniards? How many inhabitants of Cuba will come in under this law? If we are to have a clause of exclusion, let it apply generally.

Mr. LINDSAY. I wish to ask the Senator whether or not this clause was incorporated in the bill in the interests of Spain, to encourage able-bodied Cubans to leave Cuba, instead of staying there and fighting for the liberty of their country?

Mr. CAFFERY. It might have that complexion. If Spain could get all the Cubans run off into the United States, there would not be anybody to fight; but I do not suppose that the insurgent armies will be depopulated to that extent. It is so easy to get up guerrilla bands in Cuba that there appears to be no end to them.

Mr. President, I am generally opposed to the whole policy of this bill. Our ancestors were not afraid of illiterates. I see no reason why we should be. They were not afraid of any competition with home labor. I see no reason why we should be. I do not believe in the postulate that an addition to the laboring element of a country where the demand for labor is great and ever growing will have any tendency to depress the price of labor; it has not in the past, and I do not believe it will work so now or in the future. The people who come over are certainly men who want work, or they would not come. It is obvious from their very coming that they are people of enterprise, of push, and of energy, or they would stay where they are. It is a noted fact that all the immigrants from Europe into the United States are characterized by superior energy and push and an adventurous disposition.

It is said that this would only exclude 7 per cent of Irishmen; that there is only that percentage who can not read. I do not want 7 out of 100 of any industrious Irishmen excluded, or 2 out of 100 of any industrious hard-working Englishmen excluded, or any percentage of any race excluded which comes here to work, to add to the resources of the country, to build up the wealth, to open up our unoccupied lands, and to add to the general weal of these United States.

It seems to me this educational qualification is an attempt to place upon the States who do not desire it an educational qualification for the franchise. That is a matter which pertains exclusively to the States. Some States have the educational qualification; some have not. Is a man who emigrates to the State of Massachusetts from a State of the South, without the educational qualification, an undesirable citizen? Under the terms of this bill he would be.

I therefore say that the whole feature of this measure, in my opinion, is objectionable; it is a departure from a policy which we have now followed from the foundation of the Government. I can see no reason for it. I see every reason why our doors should be opened to every industrious, honest citizen from any portion of the globe.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President, it is conceded on all hands, I believe, that this is a departure from the settled policy which has obtained in this country hitherto from its foundation.

Mr. WHITE. I suggest the absence of a quorum. I think this is a matter of sufficient importance to have a full Senate during its consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aldrich,	Faulkner,	Mantle,	Pugh,
Allen,	Frye,	Martin,	Roach,
Bacon,	Gallinger,	Mills,	Shoup,

Cockrell,	McMillan,	Pritchard,	White.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-two Senators having answered to their names, a quorum of the Senate is present. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President, as this is confessedly a departure from the established policy of the United States, it challenges the careful criticism and consideration of every member of this Senate before he gives his consent to the adoption of this conference report as the final establishment of these somewhat harsh measures as the law of the United States. I only rose to call the attention of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] to two sections of this bill which seem to be peculiarly obnoxious to criticism.

If I understood the Senator from New Hampshire a moment ago, when on the floor he was asked a question in regard to section 5 of the bill as reported from the conference committee, he replied that the effect of the bill was to exclude from all private employment any alien coming into the United States who had not declared his intention to become a citizen.

Mr. CHANDLER. Not exactly; but any alien who comes regularly and habitually, returning from time to time to a foreign country, as stated in the fourth section.

Mr. GRAY. As I understood the Senator, he undoubtedly made a more sweeping answer than that just now; but I call the Senator's attention, and I call the attention of the Senate, to what at least is obscure language in section 5. If the inhibition of private employment to all aliens coming into the United States previously to their declaring their intentions is to apply only to those, as the phrase is, habitually coming with an intention from time to time to return, then the section is unfortunately worded, I think, and leaves obscure what ought to be plain beyond cavil, so that no oppression and no hardship should ever be inflicted by a judge or an executive officer who might construe the language differently from the Senator from New Hampshire.

I will read section 4 to those who are interested in this matter. If there is an obscurity about this, confessedly it ought to be corrected. The section provides:

SEC. 4. That it shall hereafter be unlawful for any male alien who has not in good faith made his declaration before the proper court of his intention to become a citizen of the United States to be employed on any public works of the United States, or to come regularly or habitually into the United States by land or water for the purpose of engaging in any mechanical trade or manual labor, for wages or salary, returning from time to time to a foreign country.

That is section 4, which prohibits the employment on the public works of the United States of an alien before his declaration of intention, or the coming of any such alien habitually or regularly, by land or water, for the purpose of engaging in any mechanical trade or manual labor, and returning from time to time to a foreign country.

I will not pause here to criticise the language of section 4 and the rather undefined duty imposed upon employers of aliens coming into this country which lurks in the use of the phrase "regularly or habitually." What is the meaning of "regularly?" What is the meaning of "habitually?" You, Mr. President, may have one view of the meaning of those words as applied in this proposed law and I may have another. The Senator from North Carolina who sits opposite to me [Mr. PRITCHARD] may say that "regularly coming" means coming twice and returning, while I think I could, with equal ground, contend—and others might contend much more strongly than I—that regularly or habitually coming was not established by twice coming. What is to be the criterion of coming "regularly or habitually into the United States by land or water for the purpose of engaging in any mechanical trade or manual labor," and also of the phrase "returning from time to time to a foreign country?" Does once returning bring the person who has come and so returned within the provisions of this act and subject to the penalties denounced in it? I do not know. It is impossible to say beforehand that any two minds will agree about these words of general import, not specific in their character and not susceptible of accurate definition. Does coming back "from time to time" mean coming once and returning to his home, or does "from time to time" mean more than that? I think that it does mean more than once; but the law might be applied by a more discriminating mind than mine or one who was inclined to give a harsh construction to this law, so as to exclude a man who has once returned to his country from ever coming back again and being employed in any of these regards before declaring his intention of becoming a citizen. But I will not pause over section 4, although I think it is obnoxious to the criticism I have just made.

Now comes section 5, which is much more important. Section 4 refers largely to employment on public works. Section 5 prohibits from all private employment whatever any alien coming into this country before he shall have been naturalized. Let me read that section.

Mr. GALLINGER. Not before his naturalization, but before he shall have made his declaration.

Mr. GRAY. Declaration—that is what I meant to say. Section 5 reads:

That it shall be unlawful for any person, partnership, company, or corporation knowingly to employ any alien coming into the Uniten States in violation of the next preceding section of this act: Provided, That the provisions of this act shall not apply to the employment of sailors, deck hands, or other employees of vessels, or railroad train hands, such as conductors, engineers, brakemen, firemen, or baggagemen.

These are exempted. But here is all private employment denied to the man who comes into this country contrary to the provisions of this act. He is excluded from employment on the public works in section 4, and section 5 excludes him from all private employment, so that, if he comes, he must starve in his tracks, unless he violates the law or shall have previously declared his intention of becoming a citizen.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator wishes to be fair?

Mr. GRAY. Certainly I do. I wish to know whether or not twice coming would be "regularly or habitually" coming into the United States? There is an obscurity about that which I think ought to be corrected.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am very sure there is not any obscurity in the language of the section, but the Senator's statement is altogether too broad. The prohibition against employing such an alien is an alien coming "in violation of the next preceding section of this act," and he violates "the next preceding section of this act" only when he comes "regularly or habitually," "returning from time to time to a foreign country."

When the Senator says that an alien can not come in once and enter into employment without being subject to a penalty, and his employer being subject to a penalty, he certainly does not do justice to his usual legal acumen and fairness of reasoning.

Mr. WHITE. If the Senator from Delaware will yield to me, I desire to ask a question of the Senator from New Hampshire. Take a case to illustrate the section regarding which we are now speaking. In the State of North Dakota, I am told by one of the Senators from that State, it would be quite impossible, or at least very difficult, to harvest the annual crop of wheat unless they were permitted to employ those from across the line, the British possessions, who come in, as far as the season is concerned, habitually, who come there from year to year regularly. Now, I desire to know whether the Senator from New Hampshire so construes this proposed law as to cover that case, and to inhibit those laborers from working here, unless they declare their intention to become citizens of the United States?

Mr. CHANDLER. I will answer frankly, we do; but I will state to the Senator from California and the Senator from Delaware that they seem to be ignorant of the fact that there is a very stringent law now which prevents aliens from coming here. There is a contract-labor law, put upon the statute books of the United States for many years, under the pressure of the labor organizations and laboring people of this country, which makes it a penal offense for any alien to come here under contract——

Mr. GRAY. Suppose they come without contract?

Mr. CHANDLER. Wait a moment.

That law makes it a penal offense for any man to come from a foreign country to this country under a contract for labor, either express or implied. The cases the Senator from California has in mind and the cases the Senator from Delaware has in mind are cases of crimes against the existing law, which we have softened in this bill by making it a requirement that in order to punish anyone for coming or to punish anyone employing any alien who comes here, the coming or going must be regular and habitual.

Mr. WHITE. If the Senator from Delaware will permit me, of course I am ignorant of a good many things, and perhaps of most things, that are familiar to the Senator from New Hampshire, but I was aware of the existence of the law to which he refers, and submit that his committee perhaps might have been engaged in better business than in reenacting that statute which we have in the general law.

Mr. CHANDLER. We are softening it; we are not reenacting it.

Mr. WHITE. I do not observe any particular softening. The case to which I refer has no reference to the law which the Senator from New Hampshire says I am not cognizant of.

Mr. CHANDLER. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. WHITE. Yes.

Mr. CHANDLER. Do not the men who come over the line, of whom the Senator speaks, to help gather the crops, come under either an express or an implied contract?

Mr. WHITE. Neither.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator is mistaken about that.

Mr. WHITE. They come across the line for the purpose of seeking employment which they have reason to know they will get in the United States. It is not because they have been invited to come or have been contracted with, but because they know there is a market here, and they come to meet a local demand, a demand which will not be met unless they are present to meet it.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator is mistaken. They come and go to the same employer and return year after year, and as the law now stands it is a crime for them to come once, if a jury shall find that they come under an implied contract to labor. In the cases on the border, of which the Senator from Montana has spoken, and in New England, where they come across the border, there is an implied contract to labor in ninety-nine cases out of one hundred. It is a crime now to do that thing.

Mr. WHITE. The parties to whom I allude do not commit those offenses which seem to be committed without comment in the jurisdiction of the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GRAY. I am not concerned with the law already on our statute book, and which has been there for several years. It is a law for which I voted, and I have always been in favor of it. If that law has been violated, there are modes by which the violators may be punished. I am speaking now of the broad, sweeping effect of this provision that applies not only to laborers who come across our northern border to reap the abundant harvests of our Northwestern wheat fields. I am speaking of the provision that a man from the Continent of Europe who comes to this country without, in the language of the proposed act, having first made his declaration shall not be employed on any public works of the United States. I am speaking of the position in which such a man finds himself here when he has come under some mistake as to the freedom of this country, under some mistake as to what lies before him in this land; and being so here and excluded from public work, then the proposed law denounces any private person who shall employ him in any work whatsoever—to clean the snow from his pavement that has fallen the night before—as a violator of the law and subject to its penalties. That man must starve——

Mr. CHANDLER. That is an unfair argument.

Mr. GRAY. Unless some benevolent person violates the law and gives him the wherewithal to put bread into his mouth.

Mr. CHANDLER. Does the Senator say that is a fair argument?

Mr. GRAY. That is the result.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator knows that if an alien comes here and shovels snow, it is not regularly and habitually——

Mr. GRAY. I did not say regularly and habitually. This section says:

> That it shall be unlawful for any person, partnership, company, or corporation—

That includes every private employer, does it not?

Mr. CHANDLER. Certainly.

Mr. GRAY—

> knowingly to employ any alien coming into the United States in violation of the next preceding section.

The next preceding section says:

> That it shall hereafter be unlawful for any male alien who has not in good faith made his declaration before the proper court of his intention to become a citizen of the United States to be employed on any public works.

Now, if an alien has come for that purpose, then he has come in violation of section 4, and every private person, corporation, or company is punishable by law if he or it gives him a day's work.

Mr. CHANDLER. On public works.

Mr. GRAY. No; a private person. Let my friend read the section again and see whether he can disagree with me there.

Mr. CHANDLER. It is so plain that I am astonished that a Senator who, in the estimation of everyone, has been thought worthy of a place on the highest judicial tribunal of this land could argue in that way. The proposed law is plain. The employer is to be punished if he hires such a man upon public works of the United States. He is to be punished if he employs a man on any work who comes regularly and habitually, returning from time to time. I do not think the Senator's argument is fair at all.

Mr. GRAY. The Senator says it is not fair. I try to be fair, but may fail. Let us concede that it is not fair. My powers of discrimination are not so low that I can not at least see an obscurity in that language; that I can not observe that there may be grounds for a judge or some executive officer to take the harsh and proscriptive view that I have suggested may be taken. If that is true, it is unworthy of the Congress of the United States to place upon its statute book a law which is susceptible of an interpretation that can work such a monstrous injustice as that I have attempted to describe.

But, Mr. President, take this case, and I submit to my friend the Senator from New Hampshire whether or not it is fair. Take the case to which he has alluded. Suppose that a person who has previously been in the United States and has returned to his own country comes back, driven by his necessities, and lands upon our shores, and, being landed, without money, without resources except the labor of his hands, honest in purpose, honest in his intent to do a man's part to support himself and those who may be dependent upon him, seeks the most menial employment. He is confronted by the statement on the part of the employer to whom he applies, "I can not employ you without making myself amenable to the punishment prescribed in section 5 of the immigration act (fine or imprisonment or whatever it may be), and therefore I must decline; and no corporation, company, or person in the broad domain of these United States can employ you, unless he or it violates a law of his country." "But," the immigrant says, "I came here bona fide. I came here to stay. I have had no opportunity to declare my intention. In the meantime I must work or starve." "We can not help it, my friend; you will have to take the latter dread alternative, for I must, as a law-abiding citizen, refuse you employment, although I should be glad otherwise to give it to you. And in this interval, long or short, which is prescribed by the laws of the United States, you can go without work and subsist on charity, although you are willing to work." I say that such a condition, brought about by law, would be disgraceful to the statute book of the United States and to the good sense of the American people.

Mr. President, it is perfectly possible to pass a law regulating and restraining immigration into this country without such harsh features as these. We are not obliged, in protecting ourselves from assumed dangers or real dangers, to be cruel to anyone. We are not obliged, in closing the doors of this country to the oppressed people of the world for the first time in our history, to work so cruel and unusual a punishment upon those who honestly come for no other purpose than to better their condition and to labor with their hands for the food that is to support them.

So how are we to determine—for we come back again to the obscurity of the language used in the fourth section—what the language means? What is "regularly and habitually" to be interpreted to mean? Shall it mean once coming and returning or twice? Is it to be interpreted as once coming and returning or twice coming and returning? Is there no obscurity about that? If once coming and returning is sufficient to establish the habitude and the regularity of the process, I say it is unwarranted, cruel, unjust, unworthy of the American people. If you are going to enact this bill into law, let us have a definition of words, so that they can not be interpreted to the disadvantage and to the oppression of anyone, however humble and from whatever clime he may come. "Are you coming and returning habitually and regularly?" asks the judge; or, if that is not enough, "Have you been or are you returning from time to time to a foreign country?" As I said before, who is to interpret what "from time to time" means? Does it mean once coming and returning, or twice, or thrice? No one can say in advance. You may have one interpretation and I another, and that leaves it in the power of a judge who takes a harsh and proscriptive view of these enactments to work a great injustice and a great cruelty to a large number of our fellow-men who do not deserve it at our hands, and whom we ought to shrink from oppressing even by indirection.

Mr. President, that can be corrected, and the proposed immigration law can be shorn of that possibility of injustice; and unless it is I can not gain my own consent to give it the sanction of my vote.

Mr. CHANDLER. Before the Senator from Delaware finishes, I should like to answer a question which he very properly asked, having got round to contemplate the fact that an alien is only prohibited from coming regularly and habitually, returning from time to time. The question was, "How is it to be determined whether the alien does come regularly or habitually?" That is necessarily a judicial question. It is the duty of the judge before whom the trial proceeds to protect the person prosecuted. The court must instruct the jury that it must be a regular and habitual coming and returning.

The Senator from Delaware is familiar with that as a judicial question. The laws of many States punish habitual drunkards. How many times must a man get drunk to be an habitual drunkard? The Senator would ridicule me if I should say that a man might be adjudged a regular or habitual drunkard because he got drunk once and then was discovered to be drunk a second time. The Senator would ridicule this. No judge would so hold, Mr. President. There is the fair exercise of judicial discretion on the part of a judge. This language was carefully framed in the Senate to soften existing law. The Senator, I believe, will admit that there is no danger either to the alien or to the employer under this section when it remains for the judge of the court to define what is a regular and habitual coming and returning.

Now, I ask the Senator, having himself voted for the original contract-labor law, to say in all fairness whether the proposed law is not a judicious, a safe, a reasonable measure? It seems to me it is, Mr. President, and that the Senator from Delaware is hypercritical in the cases of supposed hardship which he brings to the attention of the Senate.

Mr. GRAY. I do not think so, Mr. President. It is from the tyranny of judicial discretion that I would save any man who honestly comes to these shores for the purpose of bettering his condition by the labor of his hands. It is because in judicial discretion lurks tyranny, and when you provide by law directly in language that invokes judicial discretion in place of that certainty which should obtain in a penal statute, then you are invoking a principle which is alien to our institutions and our laws and to the common sense and humanity of our people. That is the reason why I am opposed to the bill.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to ask the Senator why he voted for the two original contract-labor laws?

Mr. GRAY. Because with a statute which forbids a man to come here under contract for hire or labor, when a man comes here, it is under conditions that are precisely ascertainable. It is a matter of proof whether he comes here under contract for labor in this country. There can be no ambiguity or confusion about the terms of such a law, and no two judges can differ as to what is a contract for hire or labor. But in this case the Senator acknowledges that the language of the law imposes the discretion upon the judge; that it is a matter of judicial discretion whether a man shall be imprisoned or not under the terms of the law. I say there is no place for judicial discretion in a penal law that in any form will deprive a man of his liberty or send him to prison.

Mr. GIBSON addressed the Senate. After having spoken for some time,

Mr. LINDSAY. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. LINDSAY. I desire to suggest the want of a quorum.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Allen,	Chilton,	Lindsay,	Platt,
Allison,	Davis,	Lodge,	Proctor,
Bacon,	Faulkner,	McMillan,	Pugh,
Bate,	Frye,	Mantle,	Roach,
Blanchard,	Gear,	Martin,	Sewell,
Brown,	Gibson,	Mills,	Smith,
Burrows,	Gordon,	Morgan,	Thurston,
Butler,	Gorman,	Morrill,	Turpie,
Caffery,	Gray,	Palmer,	Vest,
Cameron,	Hansbrough,	Pasco,	Vilas,
Carter,	Hawley,	Peffer,	Walthall,
Chandler,	Jones, Ark.	Pettigrew,	Wetmore.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Forty-eight Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The Senator from Maryland will proceed.

Mr. GIBSON resumed his speech. After having spoken for some time,

Mr. LINDSAY. Mr. President, if the Senator from Maryland will pardon me, I understand that there was a unanimous-consent agreement yesterday that the vote on the conference report should be taken at 4 o'clock this afternoon. It is evident that the Senator from Maryland will not have concluded his argument by that time, and it is evident, too, that the report is not thoroughly understood. I therefore ask unanimous consent that the vote be taken at 5 o'clock, instead of at 4 o'clock, this afternoon.

Mr. GIBSON. Make it 6 o'clock.

Mr. HOAR. There is some other business of importance before the Senate to be accomplished during the next fortnight, and our hours are very precious.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will submit the request of the Senator from Kentucky to the Senate. The Senator from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that the vote be taken on the pending measure at 5 o'clock instead of at 4 o'clock this afternoon.

Mr. HOAR. I object.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is interposed.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator from Maryland shall have failed to conclude the argument which he is presenting to the Senate by 4 o'clock, and will take but a short time to conclude, I should not object to his having an opportunity to do so.

Mr. CHANDLER. It was my intention to ask, if the Senator from Maryland did not finish at 4 o'clock, as he has taken a distinguished part in this debate and exhibited great interest in the question, that he should be allowed a longer time. I did not know until now that the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LINDSAY] desired to participate in the debate.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I should like to suggest, in view of the fact that it is understood there were very few Senators present yesterday when this consent was given, that it is not an unreasonable thing to allow an extension.

Mr. FRYE. The consent was given a week ago.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. But there were very few Senators present when it was given.

Mr. GIBSON. I was not here.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. So, it seems to me, it would be at least reasonable to allow another hour for debate. So far as I am concerned, I have no desire to participate in the debate at all, but I know of several Senators who desire to submit some few minutes of argument on this report, and I believe they ought to have the opportunity to do so. I am sure it would be better for the bill and in the interest of the expedition of business if the extension be agreed to.

Mr. CHANDLER. What is the Senator's suggestion?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. That the time for taking the vote be extended to 5 o'clock.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair submitted to the Senate the request of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LINDSAY], but objection being interposed, the Chair recognized the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GIBSON].

Mr. FAULKNER. I suggest that the Chair again submit the request to the Senate, in view of the remarks of Senators around the Chamber, that the time be extended to 5 o'clock.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair again submits to the Senate the request of the Senator from Kentucky, that the hour for taking the vote be extended to 5 o'clock. Is there objection?

Mr. HOAR. I am very sorry to interpose, Mr. President, but it seems to me, if I may say one word, that Senators forget that these requests and appeals to the courtesy of the Senate are really appeals to the Senate to give up doing other important business which other Senators have in their charge. During the last fortnight of the session a Senator will come in and ask leave to make a very interesting speech, and he will take four hours, and nobody thinks it is proper to object, although some great public measure in which hundreds and thousands of people are interested perishes with the session because of the shortness of time. Now, I agree when a Senator, making an interesting and important speech like that of my honorable friend from Maryland [Mr. GIBSON], has not finished his remarks, he should be allowed to conclude. I make no objection whatever to that, but I do not think there ought to be any further extension. This matter was set down and intended to be closed yesterday. It came up to be closed last week, and my colleague [Mr. LODGE] very reluctantly was obliged to consent to nearly a week's delay.

Mr. LODGE. I hope my colleague will not object to unanimous consent to extend the debate to 5 o'clock, as the pending matter is very important, and that is only an hour longer. I should be very sorry if any Senator felt that he had been cut off, and I hope the objection will not be made. I shall be very glad myself to extend the time to 5 o'clock.

Mr. GIBSON. I thank the Senator.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. HOAR. I should like to know if I can have unanimous consent that the vote on the bankruptcy bill shall be taken at a certain time, say on Wednesday of next week, at 4 o'clock?

Mr. TELLER. No, I think not, Mr. President.

Mr. HOAR. I thought not. It is a good deal to ask me to insure the defeat of such an important measure as the bankruptcy bill for simply an hour of speech-making, and so I must insist on my objection.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is interposed to the request for the extension of time, and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GIBSON] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. CARTER. Will the Senator yield to me for one moment?

Mr. GIBSON. Certainly.

Mr. CARTER. This unanimous consent was given, as stated by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES], at a time when very few Senators were in the Chamber. The unanimous consent was granted, as the RECORD shows, upon the statement made by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] that this bill had been amended to the satisfaction of the Senate. I appeal to the performance this afternoon in rebuttal of that statement. It is very obvious that this bill has not been amended to the satisfaction of the Senate. Those who oppose the bill now having declined to take advantage of any infirmity in the statement upon which the agreement was reached——

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator allow me to interpose one moment?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. If unanimous consent was given upon the ground of a misunderstanding of the Senate, as the Senator now places it, I should not feel that I was warranted in insisting upon my objection, and I withdraw it.

Mr. CARTER. I understand the objection is withdrawn.

Mr. HOAR. It is upon the distinct ground which has been put, that there was a misunderstanding at the time the consent was granted, and I will withdraw the objection on that ground alone.

Mr. CARTER. The RECORD shows that the statement was made that the bill as presented by the conference committee to the Senate met all objections, or was satisfactory to the Senate. Upon that statement the unanimous consent was granted. That the RECORD shows, together with the spirit of the debate this afternoon.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understands the objection is withdrawn, and the vote will be taken at 5 o'clock this afternoon. The Senator from Maryland is recognized.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. President, I had hoped to be able to present the views which I have to submit in this connection at an earlier period during the day. I find myself, therefore, from the direction the debate has taken, curtailed in no inconsiderable part of the time which I hoped to secure.

I hope that the conference report will not be concurred in, and I sincerely hope, in the same connection, that the measure which it recommends may not meet the approval of the Senate. I am not a little surprised at the suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts, that the bill has been so thoroughly argued that every Senator is familiar with its provisions and that a vote thereon can be reached in a very short while. This conference report has not been debated in the Senate, nor has the bill to which it refers been debated in the Senate. The conferees on the part of the Senate and the House only a short while since were instructed by the Senate to present a different and a new conference report representing the views of both the Senate and the House representatives upon the immigration question. They have not done so save in one particular. That one particular is the elimination from the conference report of what was pronounced against with a degree of unanimity never before seen during the progress of the consideration of this question, the clause in reference to the separation of families. On the contrary, the report presents conditions which never were before considered, and conditions which in my judgment can not and ought not to meet with the approval of the Senate.

If this bill is to be passed, if the conference report is to be adopted, let it be adopted by the vote of the projectors of this measure—our Republican friends on the other side of the Chamber. I appeal to every Democrat on this side of the Chamber not to be found voting for a measure which, instead of being nonpartisan, as the Senator from Massachusetts has suggested, is as partisan as was the measure to regulate the elections in the States—a measure which would have brought woe and desolation to half a continent; a measure which lies at the very root and foundation, not of our political rights alone, but of those rights which are God-given and are inalienable, the right of life, of liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.

The immigration bill seeks, under what is known as the Corliss amendment—the fourth section—to make a crime of the privilege of going and coming when and where you please, in pursuance of that maxim of the civil law that you are permitted to use your own and to do as you please, so far as you interfere with no one else. A crime, Mr. President, is sought to be made out of the sacred right that belongs to individuals of earning their bread by the sweat of their brow.

This conference committee, Mr. President, to which this measure was recommitted with instructions, in their report now under consideration, has done the things it ought not to have done, has left undone what it ought to have done, and there is no health in it.

A résumé of the legislation sought for in this bill may be well enough in this connection. More than a year ago the House of Representatives sent to the Senate a bill to amend the immigration laws of the United States, which was composed entirely of what is known as the Corliss immigration measure, in which there was and is no suggestion of an educational test. The Corliss bill from the House was rejected by the Senate, and a Senate bill was interposed in the shape of the bill which was considered some time ago, with the provision as to all persons over 14 years of age who can not read and write the language of their country or some other country, and so on. Then follows a further provision for reading and writing. That was a Senate bill which, when it came up for consideration, was amended by striking out the age limit of 14 and inserting the age limit of 16, and an amendment from another Senator, the distinguished Senator from Florida, I believe, a provision in reference to immigration from Cuba. That was the Senate bill. That passed the Senate as a substitute for the House bill. The conferees were appointed on the part of both Houses. The result of their action was in the shape of a conference report differing from the bill of the House and the Senate, but requiring the educational test, and providing as a crucial feature of that test that no one should be admitted to the country who could not read and write the English language or the language of their native or resident country. That feature of the conference report——

Mr. CHANDLER. I desire to interrupt the Senator, with his permission. The Senator says that the original bill as it came from the House contained no reading and writing test, but only the Corliss provision. The Senator, who has been very diligent in investigating the subject, has overlooked the important fact that the bill as it came from the House to the Senate contained this provision:

> All male persons between 16 and 60 years of age who can not both read and write the English language or some other language. But no parent of a person now living in, or hereafter admitted to, this country shall be excluded because of his inability to read and write.

Mr. GIBSON. I am obliged to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. CHANDLER. That was in the bill as it came from the House, and the Corliss provisions also. The Senate substituted a different reading and writing clause and omitted the Corliss provisions entirely.

Mr. GIBSON. I understand.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then the course of conference was as the Senator states. However, I did not wish the Senator to remain under the mistaken impression that there was no reading and writing test in the original bill as it passed the House, because there was.

Mr. GIBSON. I stand corrected to the extent of error to which the Senator from New Hampshire called my attention, and I am very glad he did so. I desire to call attention to the fact that there was not in the House bill the provision which is in the Senate bill. The House bill provided that all "male" persons between 16 and 60 years of age, etc. That is what I referred to.

Mr. CHANDLER. That is right.

Mr. GIBSON. That is the difference between the two bills. I did not mean to say that there was no educational test, but that the educational test in the House bill was applied only to males, permitting females to come in from abroad without the educational test. That is what I had reference to, and I am very much obliged to the Senator from New Hampshire for calling my attention to it. But the fact remains, so far as the principle is to be considered, as I have before stated.

Now, Mr. President, in the conference report there was presented for consideration a feature which had never been considered by either the House or the Senate in so far as the educational test is concerned, and so abhorrent to the sense of the Senate was the exclusion of the wife, while admitting the parent or the grandparent of the illiterate immigrant, that before the point of order made by me could be passed upon by the Senate the distinguished Senators submitting the report withdrew it and asked for a further conference between the House and the Senate to cure this defect, to cure this ill, which it seems the conferees had not properly regarded.

Without commenting further in this connection, I will state that we are now met with another conference report, that I will proceed now to consider, which has remedied only one feature of the bill which the Senate instructed the conferees to remedy in other respects.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, one word right there. The Senator will also admit that section 9, which was objected to, has been stricken out.

Mr. GIBSON. De minimis non curat lex. Section 9 was admittedly of no effect; it had no purpose; it was surplusage, and whether it stayed in or whether it went out was absolutely immaterial.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator, in speaking of the de minimis principle, is belittling his own argument. He made quite an objection and quite a noise against section 9. Now, when it is stricken out, he ignores the fact entirely that it was stricken out.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. President, I do not like to be diverted from the line of my argument by the suggestion of the Senator, because it is immaterial whether section 9 was there or whether it was not there. However, as the distinguished Senator has referred to it, I will pay him the respect to look at it. I think I am right, however, in my view that it is simply adding to the penal clause of section 5, providing for the punishment of the violation of section 5, not enlarging it. It is only declaratory of what had been suggested before.

Mr. CHANDLER. No; section 9 of the original conference report. The Senator made great objection to that.

Mr. GIBSON. If the Senator from New Hampshire will do me justice, he will recollect that it was not the Senator from Maryland, but the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL], who objected to section 9. It was the section referred to by the Senator from New York as presenting to his view of the case an additional objection in reference to what had been urged as to other sections by the Senator from Maryland and other Senators.

I will proceed to reiterate a suggestion before made that the conferees have not discharged the obligations devolved upon them in the instructions with which they were invested or charged as a part of their duty. The admission of the wife, it is true, is provided for, but, with a degree of persistency which I will not charge as woefully ignorant or willfully persistent, they have undertaken to draw a distinction between "immigrants" in the bill and the "residents" before this legislation had been sought.

This construction which I am compelled to put upon the immigration bill as it comes from the conference committee does gross injustice to a large class of our bona fide residents and makes a discrimination against them which is unjust and un-American, if not clearly unconstitutional.

According to the text of the first section of this bill, a resident of this country can not, in my judgment, send for his illiterate wife, parents, or grandparents, regardless of whether he himself can read or write. As there is no provision in section 2 providing the pleasing machinery of a civil-service examination for a resident, but only for the unfortunate immigrant, how can a resident have his family with him? Now, if this is not the intent of the bill as it comes from the conference, what other or more liberal construction can be placed upon those words of doubtful import, "similarly qualified and capable?" Why should any resident American be obnoxious to the provisions of an immigration bill? Even a resident who may have either declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States or taken out full papers of naturalization comes within the unfriendly provisions of this measure as reported from the conference.

It is true that a wife or minor child unable to read and write may accompany the immigrant or be sent for and come to join the husband or parent of the immigrant referred to, "similarly qualified and capable," but it excludes from the provisions of this exemption of the illiteracy feature of the bill the wife of a "resident" of the United States who has been here one month or more before the passage of this act—if the measure should become a law—while the "immigrant" may bring his wife or send for her after he gets here.

No immigrant, even if he be a citizen for years, can have his old illiterate father and mother come to this country, because he has not been examined. The bill says that the former may be admitted, if they belong to a qualified immigrant over 21 years; in other words, an immigrant can bring his parents in, if he has passed the examination, but all those who came before the enactment of the Lodge law can not have that privilege, because they have not qualified. This is a discrimination against immigrants who are already in this country.

Those who have come to this country before this time, who have been waiting anxiously for the time to come when by their careful savings and their pinching to save here and there they could send for, when they had money enough, the illiterate wife and child whom they had left behind and beyond the seas, are excluded.

Was it the sense of the Senate, Mr. President, in sending back this measure to the conference committee to make this distinction? Is it not, on the contrary, that it was recommitted to the conferees to present a report which should in its broadest sense, and not in its narrowest construction, admit those who had been excluded, to wit, the wife and child of the resident previous to the passage of this act?

The provisions of a law like this should be so plain that he who runs may read, nor susceptible of doubtful construction; it should contain a distinct clause, either permitting or prohibiting, if such be the desire of Congress, the landing of an illiterate wife, children, parents, and grandparents of a resident of this country, irrespective of the literary qualifications of this resident himself.

I pass over that view of the case, Mr. President, and come now to the feature of the Corliss amendment, though I shall recur to the second section later on as referred to by the distinguished junior Senator from Massachusetts in what he said a day or two since. In inveighing against the importation across our Canadian border, the distinguished Senator says it has a wider scope and intent than that. He said previously:

> There seems to have been a widely spread idea that the Corliss amendment was aimed simply at the small number of aliens who come over the border from Canada to work in some of our northernmost States.

[At this point Mr. LINDSAY suggested the absence of a quorum, and the roll was called.]

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. President, I will resume where I was unfortunately interrupted, and I hope the Senate will not enforce the agreement which was made in my absence in reference to taking the vote at 4 o'clock. The Senate will understand that these interruptions have occurred in the course of my remarks, and I wish to ask the indulgence of the Senate to permit me to proceed until I have concluded, although the hour of 4 o'clock may have arrived.

The Corliss amendment, to which I was directing the attention of the Senate, is what occurs to me as one of the most outrageous features of this measure, next to the exclusion of the wife under the illiteracy test. Such legislation would bring dishonor and disgrace to us as a nation and blacken the fairest page of our country's history. The Corliss amendment, under the provision of the Senate bill, to which attention was called when it was first considered by the Senate in the speech of the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts, was intended to reach what he called birds of passage from Italy to the United States. Italians, who came to this country and, under the system of labor by which higher wages were secured than elsewhere, had made a little money, had gone home to spend it, and came back again the following season, going alternately backward and forward as they saw fit, were to be excluded under the Corliss feature, as the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts said. That feature of the Corliss amendment will not exclude Italian laborers alone. They are but few in this connection. They are not the "birds of passage" that are affected by the bill, but it is a class of citizens on our borders, in the States bordering on the Canadian and Mexican frontier, that are affected.

Senators LODGE and CHANDLER found themselves—

As the Philadelphia Record says—> unable to frame a statute to arrest railway engineers and firemen at the Canadian line and put native Americans in charge of the trains on this side of the border, and so they gave it up. But woe to the wight who should come over the line from Canada in the morning to work in Detroit, Toledo, Oswego, Plattsburg, or some other border town, and go back in the evening! The guilty wretch so offending habitually would be liable to punishment for misdemeanor by a fine of $500 or by imprisonment for a term not exceeding one year, or both.

What a rare jewel is consistency, Mr. President!

Massachusetts and slavery, the selling of slaves in the South and the horrors of separation of families and the "fugitive slave law!"

What iniquities more strongly denounced by Massachusetts than these? And yet to-day we have Massachusetts invoking in an immigration bill what it suited her purpose in times before to inveigh against.

The fugitive slave law, which was intended to further the carrying out of the Constitution with reference to the return of fugitive slaves in the South, is absolutely adopted in the conference report.

We know of no legislation—

The Philadelphia Record proceeds to say—

> We know of no legislation so despicable as this since the passage of the fugitive slave law. That law was designed to better enforce a provision of the Constitution requiring the delivery of fugitives from labor. But it was so mean and so atrocious in its premises, making crimes of acts innocent and humane in themselves, that the moral sense of the country revolted against it, and the Government was powerless to enforce it. This immigration bill attempts to make a crime out of the right of locomotion and of the equally sacred right of earning a living by the sweat of the brow. The fugitive slave law denounced heavy penalties against any person who, in obedience to the dictates of humanity, should give food to a fugitive or refuse to deliver him up to his owner. This immigration bill would subject to like fine and imprisonment any citizen of the United States who should employ a Canadian or Mexican crossing the border to and fro in pursuit of his daily vocation.
> Meaner than the fugitive slave law, this bill would violate the simplest rites of hospitality and the observance of good neighborhood.

The Senator from Massachusetts refers with a great deal of zeal to the fact that he—

> Was informed by an inspector of immigration on the Lakes that in one day in last December $4,000 were paid in wages by one firm of contractors to aliens and $2,700 by another.

How many days in the year were such sums ever paid? Will the Senator from Massachusetts answer?

The evil which he proposes to reach will be met by another evil infinitely greater in its character and in proportions which do not seem to have for a moment engaged his attention. What is the evil of paying $2,700 in one day under this law to Canadian laborers on our public works compared to the "evil" that will result in the measures which are sought, if this conference report be adopted, in doing away with $8,000,000 of trade in the city of Detroit alone? Canada, with an area greater than that of the United States, with only 5,000,000 population compared to our 75,000,000—1 in 15—is to be held up as a great bugaboo, if I may so express it, which we are called upon to defend ourselves against! Which has the most to lose—Canada or the United States?

In whose interest, Mr. President, is this discrimination? In the interest of the States of this Union? Not so. From no State of the forty-five States of the American Union has there come one single note of protest against the furtherance of this class of immigration.

Behind the "immigration bill" is not the sentiment of the States, but it is a sentiment of the "trades unions," formulated into this expression of sentiment by the Anti-Immigration League of Boston, Mass.

Let us see what the people have to say in this connection, Mr. President.

The Detroit Evening News, January, 1897, says:

> It appears from the figures compiled in the office of the collector of the port of Detroit that our immediate Canadian neighbors are a source of constant revenue to us through the trade they give us annually. Borrowing the language of the protectionists themselves, the balance of trade between our country and Canada for the past year has been overwhelmingly "in our favor." That is to say, we have sold those people more than $5,000,000 more than they have sold us. Yet, if a poor Essex County countrywoman, desirous of buying something in the Detroit market which she can not buy in her own markets, takes on her arm a basket of eggs with which to facilitate her purchases here, a great cry goes up from some demagogue or some lunkhead who has been "studying the economic problem," that Canada is flooding our market with dairy produce to the great wrong of the American farmers. Yet examination shows that the value of the dairy products which we sent to Canada during the year 1896 was $253,000, while the total value of all the eggs entered at this port was only $240. A great fuss has from time to time been made about the practice of the Canadian farmers flooding our markets with Canadian hay, when the books show that only $5,000 worth of hay, all told, came to this side during the year. In most instances the petty trade is wholly "in our favor," and yet the common belief that the Canadians come and use up our markets for us as they would borrow and wear out our umbrella has made it possible for Mr. CORLISS to make a feeling of prejudice against the Canadian workingmen, a very few of whom enjoy the privileges of work on this side of the line.

The United States is profiting by $5,000,000 a year more in the balance of trade which comes to us than belongs to Canada.

[Detroit Evening News, January, 1897.]

The News has already shown that, whatever may have been the disparity in former years, the tables have now turned, and there are as many Americans who do transient labor in Canada as there are Canadians who do such work on this side. This reciprocity is now so complete that the entire lumber regions of northern Michigan and Canada have come to be one interest industrially. Michigan lumbermen are much nearer to the Canadian interests than they are to the Minnesota and Wisconsin interests. No man can foresee the inconvenience which the Corliss artifice is going to work in these lumber interests alone.

But the News has also shown that the Corliss amendment is an act of hostility to the city of Detroit. The annual trade of this port with Canada amounts to more than $8,000,000. Retail merchants who have protested against the Corliss artifice say that the trade with the border Canadian towns which does not find its way to the custom-house records would increase these figures largely. According to the figures in sight, Detroit and Michigan sell Canada $5,000,000 more than Canada sells us, and every one of the figures not in sight would go to increase this balance in our favor. Down in Washington, and even out at Lansing, the impression exists that Detroit is commercially bounded only on three sides. This is a mistake. We have four sides, and our eastern side in not our least valuable one. A statesman with a broad mind would infer all this by the very fact that they interchange labor across the border here. By actual count there are on the average fewer than fifty persons living in Canada who earn a living in Detroit over and above those who go from this side to work in Canada. This blow at Detroit's commercial interest would never be able to pass this or any other Congress without some such measure as the Lodge bill to drag it through. Mr. CORLISS has been carried off his feet by the demands of a few people who have not thoroughly investigated the question in all its bearings.

An editorial from the Detroit Free Press of January 23, 1897, in the same connection, says:

Congressman CORLISS's bill for the exclusion of immigrants has at least the merit of plainness. There can be no doubt at what and whom it is aimed. It is intended to reach the Canadians who make their homes across the river and come daily to Detroit to work, returning at night. Incidentally it reaches a similar class who cross at Buffalo, at Port Huron, at the Sault, and at Cape St. Vincent, on the St. Lawrence; but the Congressman's object is to reach those who cross here and to put a stop to their coming.

If the tide moved only in one direction, and that toward the American shore, the measure would be less open to criticism than it is. It would still belong to the "Chinese wall" order of legislation and appeal to prejudice rather than to statesmanship or sound economics. It would involve, however, no very injurious consequences to the general American public, which can not be expected to take any great amount of interest in the Canadians who seek employment on this side of the boundary line, and it would gratify the labor unions, in whose interests it has been framed.

But, unfortunately for the measure and those whose interests it is supposed to further, the flood does not move only one way. There are quite as many American citizens who cross into Canada daily to work as there are Canadians who cross into the United States; and the work they do in Canada is of a higher grade and commands higher pay than is the case with those who come into this country. It is estimated that the number of Canadians who cross the river at this point from Walkerville, Windsor, and Sandwich to work on this side is not far from 400. The list comprises a few mechanics, many clerks, typewriters, pieceworkers, etc. They are met, however, at the ferry dock by an equally large stream going the other way to work in the establishments of such firms and corporations as Parke, Davis Co., D. M. Ferry & Co., Acme White Lead and Color Company, Seely Manufacturing Company, Stearns & Co., Penberthy Injector Company, Globe Tobacco Works, Hurley Coal Company, Daniel Scotten, and numerous others. Most of this army are skilled workers, commanding good salaries and wages, which they expend in Detroit for house rent and the necessaries, comforts, and luxuries of life. Besides these, there is a frequent exodus from this side of sewer diggers, masons, builders, carpenters, plumbers, and other mechanics, who are in demand in Windsor, Walkerville, and Sandwich, but whose money is expended in Detroit. It may be remarked in passing that much of the money earned by Canadians who work in this city is also expended here, because of the superior opportunities offered in a large city to supply their wants at low prices.

What is true here is true also of many other frontier cities—of Port Huron, of Buffalo, of Ogdensburg. There are Americans also who cross the line and go to the interior of Canada, to Kingsville, to the oil regions, to the lumber woods, and other places, but who still retain their American citizenship and residence and spend most of their earnings at home.

It will be the height of folly for Congress to pass the Corliss measure without taking these American workers in Canada into serious consideration. It is a well-known fact that the Canadian Government at Ottawa is only waiting for the passage of the Corliss bill to retaliate, as any self-respecting Government would. It is morally certain that the exclusion which the Congressman proposes of Canadians who come to this side to work without taking up their residence here will be promptly followed by the exclusion from Canada of those Americans who cross to that side to work, returning home at night or at short intervals And it is just as certain that in any such game, wholly aside from any sentiment involved in the matter, the United States will be the loser, because it has more to lose than Canada has.

Mr. President, I should like to ask the distinguished Senators composing the conference committee on the part of the Senate what earthly meaning, what earthly connection in the sense that it is germane, section 4 of this conference report has to the illiteracy test which is intended to be submitted to the immigrant? It was an educational test which the Senate directed the conferees to report upon. It was an educational test to which the immigrant was to be subjected. You have done all that after repeated endeavors, and now, when the alien is "capable and qualified," you want to starve him to death! What earthly sentiment are you after gratifying when there is inserted here this:

SEC. 4. That it shall hereafter be unlawful for any male alien who has not in good faith made his declaration before the proper court of his intention to become a citizen of the United States to be employed on any public works of the United States, or to come regularly or habitually into the United States by land or water for the purpose of engaging in any mechanical trade or manual labor, for wages or salary, returning from time to time to a foreign country—clogging the progress and development of a proper restriction of immigration, as I submit in this connection, with the absolute requirement of an appeal to the courts to determine a question which ought not to be submitted under such considerations if restriction of immigration is intended? It is for the courts alone to determine what and who are those who come regularly or habitually into the United States by land or by water.

Section 5 is one of the most drastic of all the sections of the bill under this conference report, imposing a penalty upon the sacred right of a man to earn his daily bread by the sweat of his brow, taking away from him absolutely two of those inalienable rights which belong to him by virtue of his individuality and not by virtue of citizenship. The provision is:

SEC. 5. That it shall be unlawful for any person, partnership, company, or corporation knowingly to employ any alien coming into the United States in violation of the next preceding section of this act.

Then in section 6 it is provided—

That any violation of the provisions of sections 4 and 5 of this act by any alien or citizen shall be deemed a misdemeanor, punishable by a fine not exceeding $500 or by imprisonment for the term of not exceeding one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court.

Undemocratic, anti-American, cruel, such legislation! "What a shameful step in the nation's downward progress." Even if it does put a check upon the immediate immigration of "undesirable immigrants from southern Europe;" even if it does keep "out these birds of passage" across our Canadian and Mexican border, it brings a blush to the cheek of every American who has heretofore rejoiced that—

His country's
Free latch-string never was drawn in Against the poorest child of Adam's kin;

and who is humiliated to reflect that the United States is no longer—

She of the open soul and open door,
With room about her hearth for all mankind.

The alien who comes across the border in violation of this edict, and the citizen who gives him shelter under circumstances where the good Samaritan might have bound up his wounds and given him meat and drink when he had fallen among thieves by the wayside, is to be punished under this law by imprisonment and a fine of $500 in the discretion of the courts of the United States. Find me in any of the provisions of the fugitive slave law, so vehemently inveighed against by that proud Commonwealth of Massachusetts, any language which presents features so repulsive to the sense of the American citizen and the American people as is proposed by this conference report, denying the alien upon whom the storm may beat the right to a roof over his head, denying a crust of bread to him who has appealed for relief, and subjecting those who furnish it to fine and imprisonment.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. GIBSON. I do, Mr. President.

Mr. CHANDLER. As the Senator is making the last speech on this bill, I venture to interrupt him to say that there is not a line or word in the bill which affords any foundation whatever for the last remark of his. There is nothing whatever which impinges upon the right of giving hospitality to any alien. The Senator ought, in justice to this great subject, to confine himself to the language of the bill and to legitimate argument. The forbidden act is the coming of an alien regularly and habitually to work in the United States without making a declaration of intention to become a citizen of the United States, and returning from time to time to a foreign country. When the Senator makes this denunciation of Massachusetts——

Mr. GIBSON. Oh, no.

Mr. CHANDLER. And talks about the bill as if it forbade the rights of hospitality, he is violating, as the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY], I think, violated, and I do not know but intends to continue to violate, the principles of fair argument.

Mr. GRAY. One moment, Mr. President. The Senator from New Hampshire just now violated his well-known rule of accuracy when he quoted from the bill, and said it only prohibited men coming here "regularly and habitually." The language of the bill is "regularly or habitually," which is a very different thing. A man comes here regularly and comes here——

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator is right. I substituted "and" for "or." I find the Senator right in that little particular for once.

Mr. PALMER. May I be allowed to ask a question?

Mr. GIBSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. PALMER. If a man agrees to work for his board would that be an offense against this proposed law?

Mr. CHANDLER. If board is wages or salary, yes. If board is not wages or salary, it would not be an offense; and it would be an offense only, as the Senator knows, where the alien regularly or habitually returns from time to time to a foreign country.

Mr. PALMER. Might one permit an alien to work for his board under the bill?

Mr. CHANDLER. I want to answer the Senator from Illinois. He repeats what is an incorrect statement. Nothing of that kind is in the bill and nothing which warrants the inference which he makes.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. President, I did not expect the Senator from New Hampshire to look through the same spectacles as myself at this bill, but I did expect before this debate was concluded that he would feel called upon to defend this very feature of this conference report to which I now call his attention. I repeat, if these three sections, which must be taken collectively or in connection, mean anything, they mean, first, that——

[At this point the honorable Senator yielded to Mr. LINDSAY.]

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. President, far be it from me, in the course of the remarks which I have submitted, to which my attention has been called, to reflect upon either the State of Massachusetts or any other State in the American Union in this connection. The distinguished Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER], who made the suggestion, will bear me out that my statement was that it was a striking coincidence that from Massachusetts, the State in the Union which inveighed most strongly against these two features of our system of legislation, the amendment of the Constitution with reference to slavery and of slaves being sold across the border, and the fugitive slave law, should come at this time to the support of this measure. That is all I propose to say in that connection, Mr. President.

I wish, Mr. President, to call the attention of the Senate to a letter which I desire to insert as a part of my remarks, as I do not wish to detain the Senate by reading it, which is addressed to me by a citizen of Detroit on this subject.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The letter referred to by the Senator will be inserted in the RECORD, in the absence of objection.

The letter is as follows:

DETROIT, December 10, 1896.

DEAR SIR: The Washington dispatches state that Senator LODGE'S immigration bill was laid over to allow you to look into the matter. Regarding Mr. LODGE'S portion of the bill I have nothing to say, only that thousands of good emigrants have come into America in the past unable to read or write. But it is the portion due to Mr. CORLISS that I wish to refer to. Mr. CORLISS states that thousands of Europeans come into Boston and New York yearly and go home again in the fall after working here all summer. Whether the United States is justified in building a wall around the country to keep out a few men who eventually, no doubt, settle in the country, when the countries they come from take millions of dollars' worth of the manufactures of this country, furnishing employment to vast numbers of Americans, is not for me to say. It is in respect to the original reason why the bill was introduced by the late member of Congress, Judge Chipman, namely, the preventing of people living in Windsor from working in Detroit, while retaining their home in Windsor. Although nearly as many people living in Detroit are at various periods of the year employed in Windsor and Walkerville, yet shutting out the Canadians is quite popular with the people who voted Mr. CORLISS into office. Hence his energy in pushing it. Now, a little light on the subject. Windsor and Walkerville are opposite Detroit, half a mile away, and being close to the center of Detroit business center, many people have resided there and bought little homes, in preference to going to the outskirts of the larger city, with expensive car fare. But many of them are employed in Detroit as clerks, various mechanical trades, sales ladies, etc. So that Windsor owes a large share of its prosperity to this item alone. Many Detroiters have invested in property in its confines, Mr. CORLISS owning 900 feet front on one of the main avenues. The amount thus owned figures up on the assessment roll at over $600,000, at a low estimate.

Now, the American portion is this: Hiram Walker, the great Canadian distiller, came here many years ago without a dollar hardly and engaged in the whisky business. He is now worth several millions, and has taken all his profits, practically, outside of his business, to the American city of Detroit and invested it there, to the great loss of Canada. He still continues doing this, and no doubt takes more to Detroit every year than several hundred people could do in the way of mechanics and shop girls. Again, Windsor is full of branch stores of Detroit wholesale houses, from seeds to billiard tables and wholesale drugs, in order to escape the Canadian duty, mostly officered and run by people living in Detroit. The number thus employed was taken during the last session and should now be on file in the Immigration Committee room, and the numbers about equaled each other, not taking into consideration the fact that the profits from these branches and the large salaries of the managers are in the main taken to Detroit and spent. So that approximately it may be stated that for every dollar taken on Saturday night from Detroit to Windsor, the Canadian town, $2 are taken from Windsor and Walkerville to Detroit, not counting the colossal incomes from the Walker distillery. Even the elegant ferry line is an American affair, so that there is perfect reciprocity here on the Canadian side at least, while the United States has the alien-labor law which works all right for labor outside of these towns. Again, Detroit is a natural buying resort for the people of these two towns, so that really there is no call for such a bill as Mr. CORLISS would have your honorable body put into law.

Suppose the bill passes. All people now living in Windsor would be compelled to move to Detroit, or lose their positions. This would in many cases be ruination to those compelled to sacrifice their little homes. You can readily see what hardships this would entail. It would be a public calamity.

On the other hand, the people now employed in Windsor, living in Detroit, would go through the same ordeal, for a bill identical with Mr. CORLISS'S has had one reading in the Canadian Parliament, and would be at once passed and enforced. Now, where would be the benefit to the American workman? Consider that all along the American frontier a like upheaval whould take place. Canada's Soo Canal is almost exclusively used by American vessels; 7,000 went through last year, at no expense to them. The Canadian lumber woods are largely owned by American capital, with Americans imported to work there in the summer.

This, and much more, the mines, etc., furnishing employment for Americans in the summer. Can you not see what a condition of things would ensue if the Canadian Government got its back up and rigidly enforced their bill along the frontier? It would be a very unfriendly act, at the least, and would in the end cause untold trouble. Less things have brought on a war.

I live in Windsor, and own much property close to Mr. CORLISS, and I work in Detroit, owning property there. I do not expect you will pass laws for Canadians, but in this case it will be as unfortunate for one as the other, so I hope you will see your way clear to vote against placing Mr. CORLISS'S amendment on the statute books of the United States. I lived for many years in Detroit, hope to again; but this measure would aid no one but Mr. CORLISS, who would be the great Republican workingman's friend, though it would injure American labor more than it would help it.

Hoping you will give this due consideration, I remain,

Your obedient servant,

ROBERT A. TIMMS,
75 Bates street, Detroit, Mich.

I wrote Mr. LODGE on this subject exhaustively.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON, Senator, Washington, D. C.

Mr. GIBSON. I ask leave also to insert as part of my remarks, without taking the time of the Senate to read it, another letter from a citizen of the United States relating to the subject.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The letter referred to by the Senator will be printed in the RECORD, in the absence of objection.

The letter is as follows:

WINDSOR, ONTARIO, February 9, 1897.

DEAR SIR: We who live on the border, and can understand what a war of exclusion by the United States and Canada will mean, wish you godspeed in your efforts to crush out Mr. CORLISS'S amendment to the immigration bill. I had the pleasure of addressing you before, when I forwarded you certain information pertinent to the question, and now, after Mr. CORLISS has succeeded in again having the immigration bill passed in the House, do I come to you and ask you, in the name of both Canadian and United States citizens employed on both sides of the line, to use all your influence to defeat the bill when it comes up in the Senate. We on this frontier are living in peace, but this bill will change it into but little removed from a state of war. This town is full of branch manufactories of Detroit houses, officered at big salaries, and very often the employees coming from Detroit, with not a question against it, and most liberal treatment at the Canadian custom-house for their large importations of goods in the rough that are finished in Canada, thereby escaping a heavy duty. These firms will feel it, just as all other American-owned institutions through the length and breadth of Canada—its fair woods, its mines, and everything in which American citizens are employed or are owners—if a state of war is declared by the American Congress. And it will be a state of war, too, only firearms will not be used; but American capital will feel it. We want to live in peace; we put out the right hand of fellowship to American capital and American labor and give them the same privileges and the same rights we give our own people; but if you will make war on us (at the behest of a few trades unionists), why, Canada will have to reply. God bless your efforts in behalf of peace, and may you be successful in your efforts in the Senate.

Wishing you success, I remain, truly yours,

ROBERT TIMMS,
Employed at 75 Bates street, Detroit, Mich.

Senator GIBSON, Washington, D. C.

Mr. GIBSON. I return now, Mr. President, to the second section of this bill, having sufficiently considered the Corliss amendment, except to say, what I was about to add, that there is only 1 in Canada to be benefited where there are 15 of the people of the United States to be benefited in view of these reciprocal relations which now exist, and which are the result of the unwritten law, not the lex scripta, in the shape of any tariff regulation of the United States, but a law which has been recognized from time immemorial, and laws which are of benefit not only to the States bordering on the Canadian frontier from Buffalo to Lake Michigan, but to the 50,000 miners in the British Dominion to-day, American workmen, recognized by the Canadian Government, and recognized in their relation as benefiting the United States.

I now refer to section 2, which reads:

For the purpose of testing the ability of the immigrant to read and write, as required by the foregoing section, the inspection officers shall be furnished with copies of the Constitution of the United States, etc.

If this second section of the proposed law is sought to be enforced, if this conference report shall be enacted into a law, there is no feature of the appropriations made at this session of the Fifty-fourth Congress of the United States that will begin to measure in magnitude with the appropriations necessary to be made to carry out the provisions of this law. There is no feature of legislation on our statute books to-day which is fraught with the expense in the shape of appropriations incident to the expenditure here. Senators can not have regarded this provision of this conference report, a provision never agreed upon in the other House and never agreed upon in the Senate. It can not be made effective, as I shall show you, Mr. President, in a few words.

I have here an official communication from the Commissioner of Immigration in the port of New York, Dr. Senner, who is best able to advise the Senate and the country of the details incident to the carrying out of this legislation to restrict immigration. He says:

The available space at Ellis Island is divided into eight aisles, an arrangement by which we are enabled to examine eight immigrants at a time, devoting an average of three minutes to each immigrant, thus disposing of 160 per hour. In order to furnish shelves for writing purposes we would be obliged to reduce the number of aisles to four, and the additional time for the writing test is estimated at seven minutes, making ten minutes for the examination of each immigrant. Making the calculation upon the basis of four aisles and ten minutes per immigrant, we have only examined 120 in the first five hours, according to this calculation.

Where will that lead us, Mr. President? In the carrying out of the provisions of this section of the bill, if it takes, as it will, five hours and thirty minutes for 120 immigrants, it will take eighteen hours for 500 immigrants. If we have 5,000 immigrants at Ellis Island at a time—and we have had them there frequently; and I noticed in a speech the other day of a gentleman [Mr. MAHANY], a member of Congress from New York, whom I have the pleasure of seeing in the Chamber at this time, that as many as 10,000 immigrants have arrived at Ellis Island or the port of New York in one day—but putting these figures as I have estimated them, if it takes eighteen hours for 500 immigrants to be examined, 5,000 at Ellis Island at one time will require one hundred and eighty hours to examine, allowing ten hours for a working day, which is two hours a day longer than they work there now. It will require eighteen days to examine 5,000 immigrants at Ellis Island. Eighteen days make three weeks. If you double that, according to the statement of gentlemen who are familiar with this feature of the subject, it will take six weeks to examine 10,000.

What is to become of the 10,000 or the 5,000 immigrants who land at Ellis Island? Where are they to be accommodated? The accommodations now are scarcely sufficient to meet the ordinary demands of inspection.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator kindly tell me from what paper he is reading?

Mr. GIBSON. I am reading from the report of Dr. Senner to Hon. RICHARD BARTHOLDT, of the House of Representatives, dated January 15, 1897.

Mr. CHANDLER. Has the Senator seen the letter from Mr. Stump, the Commissioner-General of Immigration, of January 20, 1897, to Mr. BARTHOLDT?

Mr. GIBSON. I have not. I have never seen it and never heard of it.

Mr. CHANDLER. I hand it to the Senator. It is a full refutation of the wild statement the Senator is now making. I trust he will let it be put in the RECORD.

Mr. GIBSON. I will appeal from the Commissioner-General to the commissioner of the port of New York, as being more familiar with the details of what goes on at Ellis Island, whose business it is to be there every day and every hour when work is to be done and when examinations by inspectors are to be made.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator put in this letter from Mr. Stump?

Mr. GIBSON. I decline so to do, Mr. President. That belongs to the Senator in his own time and according to his own views of the case. I am now discussing what the Senate and the country must contemplate in the carrying out of this educational test.

> A little learning is a dangerous thing;
> Drink deep, or taste not the Pierian spring.

These poor illiterates are required to be educated just sufficiently to read and write twenty words, unmeaning as they may be, of the Constitution of the United States, which has as much force, character, and effect to them as Sanskrit. Yet the education of those immigrants to read twenty words of the Constitution and to write them in the poor, hard-fisted, cramped hands of those who have been used to labor rather than the requirement of a test which means nothing to them, is to cost the taxpayers of this country millions of dollars in the shape of appropriations to carry out this law. Ellis Island in area will not be equal to the task; three times the extent of that area will not be sufficient to give the accommodation to these immigrants. They must be housed and fed there before their feet can be planted upon one other spot of American soil, and not only to be kept in quarters, but to be as comfortable as comports with the dignity of the United States, which has offered an asylum to the oppressed of every land. When they get here we are not to treat them as they were treated whence they came, but to treat them with the humanity which belongs to the American people, giving shelter and food during the five or six weeks that 5,000 immigrants are to be detained for the purpose of this educational test of their right to land.

With due deference to Dr. Senner, I submit, Mr. President, that ten minutes is a very moderate limit to allow for the inspection of these immigrants. The strength of a chain is its weakest link. Every link of a chain may, save one, be forged with a degree of strength to anchor a battle ship at its moorings, but if there be one link weak she drifts from her moorings upon rocks she knows not of. The length of time required for the inspection of the slowest immigrant, which may be half an hour or longer, will be the measure of time required for each detail at the several batches of immigrants. Inspectors! How many "inspectors" will be necessary to carry out the provisions of this bill? Twenty-three are all now that are required at Ellis Island and only one or two at Baltimore and Boston and Philadelphia. These entry clerks, or inspectors, are now paid $1,500 a year.

But let this bill become a law, and instead of the present number we will require 200, not at salaries of $1,500 a year, but with largely increased salaries. And provided; how? Provided as inspectors are now appointed. Not so. Inspectors at the port of New York, at Ellis Island, are appointed simply for the purpose of inspecting the immigrants physically, to determine whether they come within the prohibited class as being criminals, lunatics, paupers, or persons likely to become a charge upon the country within one year; whether they are ill; whether they are suffering with disease or disability of any kind. But the inspectors to be provided under the proposed act are of an entirely different class. They are not inspectors who are to look after baggage and see that it is fumigated. They are not inspectors to see whether the germs of smallpox exist and whether filth and dirt prevail or whether the immigrants come within the classes prohibited; but they are to be appointed with special reference to a high order of educational qualification themselves, with reference to ability to determine whether or not the immigrant is "qualified and capable" to pass the educational test in some one of 200 different languages written and spoken in the world.

I hold in my hand, Mr. President, illustrations of 200 languages in this world—languages written and spoken—in which these beautiful words from the Holy Bible, so full of meaning the world over—

> For God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life—have been printed and circulated; 200 languages written and spoken, not as dialects, but recognized the world over as having been translated from Holy Writ.

Not unmeaning words like those of the Constitution of the United States, but so plain that he who runs may read; as clearly seen to the mental vision in every land as was limned the sign of the cross in the skies to Constantine the Great.

Now, the President of the United States must appoint, before this law can be made effective under this nauseous nostrum of the civil-service law, three commissioners, who must be able to appoint inspectors, some one of whom can read and write themselves and determine whether others have correctly read and written in some one of these 200 languages, designated by the immigrant himself, these printed slips, etc. I know that $1,500 a year is paid to inspectors for the simple duty of determining whether immigrants are unclean and unhealthy; whether they are ill; whether they are lunatics, paupers, or persons likely to become a charge upon the community; but when you find a man who is able to speak one or many of these different languages and read them correctly, in order to determine whether the "immigrant" has written and spoken them correctly, double the salary of $1,500 and you will not yet have reached the maximum that should be paid in consideration of such distinguished services.

> The river Rhine, I own,
> Doth wash the city of Cologne;
> But tell me, nymphs, what power divine
> Doth wash the River Rhine?

I send to the desk, Mr. President, a letter from a gentleman in my own State, and ask that it may be printed as a part of my remarks:

FRANCIS B. LIVEZEY, AUTHOR AND PUBLISHER.
Sykesville, Md., February 5, 1897.

DEAR SIR: Keep up the fight against the Lodge immigration bill. We want all the working people possible to come to this country, regardless of their illiteracy. All our anarchy, all our socialism, all our industrial troubles are due to education—to educating the people to books rather than to implements. We have shut out the Chinese workers that came to us on the West, and now we would shut out those who come to us on the East.

You are not, in your opposition to the bill, submitting to "steamship and corporate influence," but you are proclaiming that the salvation of the country depends upon the workers, and that all should come here who are such. Thousands of farmers and thousands of families have suffered for years for the want of field hands and domestic servants. I have felt the want of these myself. Some years ago, before quitting farming, despairing of obtaining farm hands in the country, I advertised for one in the Baltimore Sun, and had upward of thirty clerks and bookkeepers reply, but not one genuine farm hand. I took a half-starved, smart young man from the vicinity, be it said, of Senator LODGE'S home, ingratiated him gradually into farm work, and he promised to be a workingman the rest of his life. I have had similar experiences with women.

A comparison was made in the North American Review some years ago between Massachusetts as a learned and South Carolina as an illiterate State. In proportion to population Massachusetts far exceeded South Carolina in her number of criminals, paupers, and insane. Verily, it is not the time, in the face of such facts, to accept the authorities of that State on matters pertaining to illiteracy and affecting the whole country.

An Eastern Shore (Maryland) school board advertised in the Baltimore Sun only once for a school-teacher, and the secretary wrote me he had seventy-two replies, ranging from Maine to Texas. If we want a farm hand, a chambermaid, or a cook we all know how many we get.

Fight the good fight that will bring men and women of muscle to our shores, for, unless manna descends from heaven, our poor educated classes will year by year be nearer starvation.

Very respectfully, FRANCIS B. LIVEZEY,
Sykesville, Md.

Hon. CHARLES H. GIBSON, M. C.

And now, Mr. President, we recur to what is supposed to be the true inwardness of this measure, the "educational test." Here it is, the test agreed upon by the Boston Anti-Immigration League, agreed upon by the Senate committee, and passed by the Senate:

Strike out the present section 2 and insert a new section as follows:

"SEC. 2. For the purpose of testing the ability of the immigrant to read and write, as required by the foregoing section, the inspection officers shall be furnished with copies of the Constitution of the United States, printed on numbered uniform pasteboard slips, each containing not less than twenty nor more than twenty-five words of said Constitution printed in the various languages of the immigrants in double small pica type. These slips shall be kept in boxes made for that purpose and so constructed as to conceal the slips from view, each box to contain slips of but one language, and the immigrant may designate the language in which he prefers the test shall be made. Each immigrant shall be required to draw one of said slips from the box and read, and afterwards write out, in full view of the immigration officers, the words printed thereon. Each slip shall be returned to the box immediately after the test is finished, and the contents of the box shall be shaken up by an inspection officer before another drawing is made. No immigrant failing to read and write out the slip thus drawn by him shall be admitted, but he shall be returned to the country from which he came at the expense of the steamship or railroad company which brought him, as now provided by law. The inspection officers shall keep in each box at all times a full number of said printed pasteboard slips, and in the case of each excluded immigrant shall keep a certified memorandum of the number of the slip which the said immigrant failed to read or copy out in writing."

No immigrant failing in the slightest degree to comply herewith shall be admitted. To be absolutely certain of the faithful carrying out of these important provisions, "the inspection officers shall keep in each box at all times a full number of said slips," etc.

And yet, Mr. President, after all this thought and time and care of the Boston Anti-Immigration League in formulating an "educational test," which shall turn back this monstrous, overwhelming tide of immigration from our shores, and one which has received the merit of his approval by the Senator from Massachusetts, as measuring fully up to his idea of all that is required in the way of "restricting" immigration, a subject which he says he has devoted ten of the best years of his life to the consideration of, this test is nothing. It has tumbled like a house of cards in the light of what the "conference committee" has added to this flawless production:

If in any case from any unavoidable cause, the foregoing slips are not at hand for use, the "inspection officers" shall carefully and thoroughly test the ability of the immigrant to read and write, using the most appropriate and available means at their command; and shall state fully in writing the reasons why the slips are lacking, and describe the substitute method adopted for testing the ability of the immigrant.

What a fall is here, Mr. President! What a "come down" from this high-flown, stilted emanation, that was to bring dismay to the luckless alien who dared to come to our shores, other than as the anointed child of education might come! The real test of illiteracy is abandoned to innocuous desuetude, and the "inspection officers" are left to their will and convenience to test the capacity and ability of the immigrant to read and write, "using the most appropriate means at their command!" These available means at their command may most likely be a blackboard and a piece of chalk! What a slender test, therefore, Mr. President, do we discover this "reading and writing" test to be, upon which to reverse our nation's proud traditions! "Parturiunt montes, nascetur ridiculus mus!"

Mr. Carnegie, in his Triumphant Democracy, says:

Were the owners of every gold and silver mine in the world compelled to send to the Treasury at Washington, at their own expense, every ounce of the precious metals produced, the national wealth would not be enhanced one-half as much as it is from the golden stream which flows into the country every year through immigration.

America is only a favored land for the most efficient; drones have no place in her hive; but in whatever the immigrant may fail, whether in securing wealth or home, whether he remains poor or lose health, whether his lot be happy or miserable, there remains one great prize which can not escape him—one blessing so bright, so beneficent as to shed upon the darkest career the glory of its entrancing rays and compensate for the absence of material good. The Republic may not give wealth or happiness; she has not promised these. It is the freedom to pursue these, not their realization, which the Declaration of Independence claims; but if she does not make the immigrant happy or prosperous, this she can do and does do for every one—she makes him a citizen—a man!

The Senator from Massachusetts has inveighed against the evils resulting from immigration, because, as he insists, immigration to these shores by aliens is to take away from the labor of this country what the labor of this country is justly entitled to as the reward of that labor. To that statement I reply that to-day the State of Massachusetts, which has profited more by immigration than any State in the Union, and for its area is the most thickly settled of any of the United States except Rhode Island, pays a higher rate of wages than ever was paid before, in the face of the immigration of which the Senator complains, and the hours of labor are shorter than they ever were before in the history of that State.

The best proof that unrestricted immigration does not tend to reduce wages is the fact that at the present day, after all these years of unrestricted immigration, the wages of the workingman in this country are higher and the hours of daily labor shorter than ever before. It needs only a superficial acquaintance with the nature of wages to show that they do not decrease as population increases. England has a greater number of inhabitants per square mile than Germany, and yet wages are higher in England than in Germany; and the same relation again exists between Germany and Russia. It is principally the skill and productiveness of the laborer that determines the rate of wages. As long as there is room in this country for both skilled and unskilled labor, we should welcome every man who is willing to work.

And again, labor unions, which more than ever before in the world watch over the interests of workingmen, by direct or indirect methods, effectually prevent the undercutting of wages. The rise and fall of wages due to obscure causes may occur, and be without remedy, but if it is caused by nothing else than competition among the workingmen themselves, labor unions may be depended upon to regulate it. But competition between laboring men of the class affected by this bill and Americans will never be, for skilled labor and unskilled labor work in different fields, too far apart for the higher class to be interfered with or jealous of the lower. As compared with the laborers of the class affected by this bill, all Americans are skilled laborers. They seek the shops, factories, foundries, machines, railroads, engine rooms, bridge and iron constructions, and other places where special aptitude, training, and acquired skill give larger value to their labor. There is no danger that he will overstock the market or that there will be more of him than there is demand for. In the Iron Trade Review of Cleveland there is an article calling attention to the scarcity of skilled men. And in all the departments where their work is needed there is an increasing instead of a decreasing call for such workmen.

But the Bohemian, Russian, and Italian must take and are glad to take the meaner sort of occupations—street sweeping, sewer cleaning, the digging of ditches and drains, the making of excavations, the outdoor work about mills and factories, which does not require skilled labor or special training, but only strength and industry—menial service, peddling, waiting in hotels and restaurants, fruit selling, knife grinding, toy and image making, and a great many other things which Americans do not seek and will not willingly undertake. All of these, together with many indoor employments, such as cigar and garment making, fall to the share of the newly landed, poor, and illiterate immigrants. Americans do not want such work. Hebrews, Russians, and Italians do want it; and the reason for their coming is that they may get it. They are the only persons to do it, and their presence here is a logical necessity.

This conference report, Mr. President, is not a compliance with the instructions of the Senate to its conferees. It is not only not a compliance, but it is a departure from the requirements of those instructions.

If the Senator from Massachusetts can show to me that illiteracy of foreign immigration means dishonesty in the character of the immigrant, I will vote for his bill. Education, it is true, does give polish to fine natures, but the nature may be fine without the polish of education. We want the fine nature and will do the polishing in the shape of education after the immigrants come here.

We will educate these immigrants when they get here. We will find the task less difficult to make a homogeneous mass of these people, adapting them to our customs and to our purposes, than if they had preconceived notions from the education which they had received abroad. We do not want them partial to the learning and culture of Europe. We do not want an importation of men with ideas hostile to our native civilization. In the composite population of this Republic we will have a nation of Americans peculiar to our own civilization. While it may not be "home born and home bred exclusively," in their hearts there will have grown up a spirit which will make them the faithful bodyguard of our liberties, who would be "driven into the sea at the point of the bayonet before they would renounce one principle of our Constitution."

Race deterioration! The learned Senator from Massachusetts refers to race deterioration; he urges it as one of the strongest reasons why the educational test should be submitted. He says:

If a lower race mixes with a higher in sufficient numbers, history teaches us that the lower race will prevail. The lower race will absorb the higher, not the higher the lower, when the two strains approach equality in numbers. In other words, there is a limit to the capacity of any race for assimilating and elevating an inferior race, and when you begin to pour in in unlimited numbers people of alien or lower races of less social efficiency and less moral force you are running the most frightful risk that a people can run. There lies the peril at the portals of our land; there is pressing the tide of unrestricted immigration. The time has certainly come, if not to stop, at least to check, to sift, and to restrict those immigrants.

Let us see whether history bears out the Senator from Massachusetts in the statement that the lower order degenerates the higher order. That feature exists only in his imagination, a Frankenstein that is conjured up by his own fears of what may happen, without any warrant or authority for it in history. Race deterioration is an evil which works from above downward, never from below upward. There never was but one distinctive race in this land of ours affected by immigration, and that was the race which John Winthrop and his followers found in 1630 when they set foot on Plymouth Rock—the American Indians—

"When across the ocean there came a Pilgrim bark bearing the seeds of life and death; the former were sown for us, the latter sprang up in the path of the simple native. Two hundred years have changed the character of this continent and blotted from its face forever a whole peculiar people. Art has usurped the powers of nature, and the anointed children of education were too powerful for the tribes of the ignorant. As a race, they have withered from the land; their arrows are broken, their cabins are in the dust, and their council fires have long since gone out on our shores. Slowly and sadly they climb the distant mountains and view their doom in the setting sun. They know that there is but one remove for them, and that is to the shores of the Pacific, where they must soon hear the roar of the last wave, which shall settle over them forever."

That is what immigration has done for the inferior race. No, Mr. President, the lower classes never corrupt the higher. History is full of examples of so-called race deterioration where the vices of the higher in rank came to be practiced by the lowly, but never yet of an instance of the lower classes influencing the higher to their hurt. If immigration detrimental to the prosperity, character, and quality of our race should ever come to our country from over the seas, it will come in the first cabin and not in the steerage; he who shall sow the seeds of deterioration among our people will be the "peer," not the peasant; the "count," not the "contadini."

There is no danger of race deterioration here, Mr. President. Even if these immigrant laboring men were racially inferior, there is no danger for us to dread from association with them.

There is a quality in the composition of the Anglo-Saxon which prevents any such calamity, if it really threatened. That quality is perhaps the distinguishing trait of the Anglo-Saxon people—I mean its power of assimilation of other peoples with itself. All men mix more or less; the resultant shows the characteristics of one of the component parts, or of another; sometimes the races blend so that the new one resulting from the combination is different from either of the originals. But wherever the Anglo-Saxon has been thrown by fate in contact with other peoples he has absorbed, assimilated, and made like unto himself the other peoples. Into whatever country he has gone he has carried his own language, his own laws, his own customs, and they have prevailed. There is no reason to fear that this country will furnish an exception to the invariable rule. Senators may surely depend upon it, that if foreigners, of any class or nationality, in any numbers come to our shores it will not be long before they adopt our speech and customs and adapt themselves to our institutions. Who can doubt it? Who does doubt it? You can tell the newly landed stranger at first glance; but who shall discriminate between the native-descended American and the son or grandson of him who landed forty years ago. The newcomers will not change us, but we shall change them. Circumstances, conditions, and opportunities, denied them at home, but open to their enjoyment here, will develop in them and bring to light the virtues and abilities latent in them which they have inherited from their ancestors and which made those ancestors the most civilized, enlightened, and cultivated people of the world.

Let no man stand here in his place and say to the American people that they are in danger of deterioration by any causes not of their own making. The people who made this great and glorious country what it is, who won their independence in their childhood and maintained it in their youth, are not now in their manhood of such paltry stuff as to be unable, without danger of contamination, to associate with other peoples. Let no such humiliating apprehension influence our legislation. We are strong; we can both protect the weak and succor the needy; we can receive into our midst the sturdy and diligent laborer of Europe and utilize his strength to his profit and our own. Let us put no hindrance in the way of his coming. Let all the peoples of the world who are industrious, vigorous, and law abiding come and join in the development of this rich and extensive country and in the formation of a healthy, free, prosperous, and powerful population.

On the east front of the Capitol there stands the colossal figure of Columbus, holding in his outstretched hand the New World, to which he invites the Old.

The gateways of that New World have stood open wide but not unguarded. Over against the glorious arch spanning these portals of our land an "educational test" has been inscribed, not formulated by leagues and submitted by inspectors, in unmeaning words, but writ in characters of living light, flashing across oceans and continents and seas, "Otiosis hic locus non est; discede morator!" This land is not for the lazy; loafer depart! A legend read in every land, spoken by every tongue, interpreted at every humble fireside, and graven on every fingerboard beyond the seas, to guide the wanderer to our western land.

These immigrants come here to work, Mr. President; to work for some good, be it never so lowly. All work to them is noble and holy. They want their great deeds to be their prayer to their God!

This is the character of immigration, sifted and restricted by the wholesome laws which the Democratic party has provided, that the Democratic party invites to-day. From 1852 to 1896 these wholesome immigration laws have been invoked in every Democratic platform.

[From the Democratic platform of 1852.]

10. That the liberal principles embodied by Jefferson in the Declaration of Independence, and sanctioned in the Constitution, which make ours the land of liberty and the asylum of the oppressed of every nation, have ever been cardinal principles in the Democratic faith, and every attempt to abridge the privilege of becoming citizens and the owners of soil among us ought to be resisted with the same spirit which swept the alien and sedition laws from our statute books.

[From the Democratic platform of 1892.]

IMMIGRATION.

SEC. 12. We heartily approve all legitimate efforts to prevent the United States from being used as the dumping ground for the known criminals and professional paupers of Europe, and we demand the rigid enforcement of the laws against Chinese immigration, or the importation of foreign workmen under contract to degrade American labor and lessen its wages, but we condemn and denounce any and all attempts to restrict the immigration of the industrious and worthy of foreign lands.

[From the Republican platform of 1896.]

For the protection of the quality of our American citizenship, and of the wages of our workingmen against the fatal competition of low-priced labor, we demand that the immigration laws be thoroughly enforced, and so extended as to exclude from entrance to the United States those who can neither read nor write.

The clouds are in the heavens, Mr. President, for the Republican party on the other side of this Chamber, which has invoked and supported such legislation as is sought in this conference report. It will not do for them to say that this is a "mild measure," nonpartisan in its character, and will meet with almost a unanimous vote on this side of the Chamber. Be not deceived, Senators on this side. The voice of our Republican friends is the voice of Jacob, but their hands are the hands of Esau. If this bill is to be passed, let it be passed by Republican votes; it has no part nor lot in the Democratic faith. If the time shall ever come, Mr. President, when, as a nation, we "shall cease to sympathize with the struggles of the people of other countries for liberty and justice, our own liberties and our free institutions will be in the greatest danger."

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. President, I am opposed to the adoption of the conference report, and I ask the indulgence of the Senate for a few moments in which to state my objections to it.

There has been an intelligent popular sentiment in the United States for a good many years past demanding restriction upon unlimited immigration to the United States. That popular sentiment has been met by Congress in the enactment of various immigration and labor-contract laws. One of those acts created a board of immigration inspectors, whose headquarters are in the city of New York, and there they are and have been for years sitting in execution and enforcement of the laws already passed by Congress restricting immigration.

I believe, Mr. President, that the present act goes too far. It is too drastic in its terms. There are not yet enough people in the United States. It is true that the population of our country has increased from about 3,000,000 in the colonial times to about 70,000,000 now, but there is a vast expanse of the domain of the United States which is still comparatively uninhabited. We have room for many more people. The natural increase of the population of the country is not sufficient to build up as rapidly as should be the waste places of the country.

As pointed out by my colleague, the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY], there are in the United States, exclusive of Alaska, 3,000,000 square miles of territory, and of that area less than 300,000 square miles are in actual cultivation and subjected to the uses of man. That is not 10 per cent of the area of the United States, exclusive of Alaska. If we include Alaska, the remarkable fact is presented that of the domain constituting the United States there is perhaps not 5 per cent of it that is in actual cultivation.

The Empire State of the South, the State of Texas, has, including the bays which border upon it, about 275,000 square miles. That is an area almost equal to the entire extent of the domain of the United States, exclusive of Alaska, which is now subject to cultivation and to use by man. The great interior sections of the country need more people, and any immigration act which tends to exclude, as the pending bill does, the people who would like to come here, is not to the interest of those sections.

Speaking from recollection, I will state the fact to be that in Holland there are more than 600 people to the square mile, whereas in the great valley of the Mississippi River, a country as fertile as Holland and as capable of sustaining a population as vast as are the lowlands of the Netherlands, there are not 30 people to the square mile. As my recollection further serves me, there are not more than 18 people to the square mile on the average on the domain constituting the United States.

It may do very well for certain sections of the country and for certain large cities in the United States to pass a measure as drastic as this one, but it does not do for the sparsely settled sections of the West and the South. Instead of the 70,000,000 people we have now in this country I would like to see that number doubled and even trebled.

Think what the valley of the Mississippi alone would be if it had one-third as many people to the square mile in the valley as there are to-day in Holland. It would be in itself a magnificent empire, and would then prove to be what we have always claimed for it, that it is capable of being made the granary of the world.

Mr. President, the committee that has reported this bill to the Senate have evidently gone too far, and no such drastic measure as this should be enacted into law by the Congress of the United States.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I should like to say a single word at the close of this debate.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to ask the Senator to explain one feature which has been suggested in the debate and which I think might create considerable embarrassment. Miners of the West in large numbers have gone over into British Columbia and discovered mines, and they are working over there. Would there not be danger of retaliatory laws? If so, it would be very embarrassing to them. I should like to have the Senator reply to the suggestions made upon that point.

Mr. LODGE. I was going to touch on it in a moment.

Mr. President, when I addressed the Senate before, on the first conference report, I undertook at some pains to explain the so-called Corliss amendments which were in that report. While I was doing so, the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL] interrupted me with a suggestion that I was wasting the time of the Senate and my own time in discussing those amendments, for there was no opposition to them, and they were not discussed during that debate except so far as I had explained them.

The bill as it relates to the educational test, as I stated this morning, comes back in the precise form which the conferees understood the Senate desired, and in the form in which it passed the House.

The Corliss amendment provides two things. One is that no alien shall be employed on the public works of the United States. The other is that anyone who comes regularly and habitually, going back and forth from this country to his own country, shall be subject to certain penalties set forth in the bill.

It seems to me that it is difficult to find an argument in favor of the employment of aliens on the public works who are unwilling to become citizens of the United States. It appears to me very plain that the money taken from the people by taxation should rightfully be paid back to those who pay the taxes and bear the burdens.

The other point relates to those who come here regularly and habitually.

Mr. HAWLEY. Before the Senator passes from the last point, I wish to have a word of explanation. No alien who has not declared his intention shall be employed on any public works of the United States. There is no penalty provided for that, I believe. It would not punish the United States for hiring them. It does not say that the United States shall not employ; but it is put the other way; he shall not be employed there. The alien may know something about this law, and he may not know anything about it. The United States can not employ men except through its agents. Suppose Colonel Casey had employed one of these men here, would Colonel Casey then have been subject to a fine of $500 or imprisonment for a year?

Mr. LODGE. There is no statement made about punishing the United States or any officer thereof.

Mr. HAWLEY. No; but it says a "person." He then becomes like an officer of the United States who violates a patent. The private citizen brings suit against that officer as John Smith, not as captain, and gets a judgment against him. Now, here a person has employed a man whom he ought not to have employed, and he is therefore subject to that penalty.

Mr. LODGE. I suppose that any officer of the United States is bound to know the law and to enforce it and to obey it.

Mr. HAWLEY. Then the Senator thinks he would be liable to be punished in that case?

Mr. LODGE. I do not know that he would be liable to punishment under this provision, but I think any officer of the United States sworn to carry out the laws of the United States is bound to carry them out.

Passing to the other point, for I have only a moment——

Mr. STEWART. I hope the time will be extended for half an hour.

Mr. LODGE. I do not desire to have the time extended. There are Senators here who desire to vote, and they have to leave the Chamber in a few minutes. If the Senator will allow me, I will go right on to that point.

This is aimed at those who come regularly and habitually. That they come regularly and habitually has to be shown. It is not aimed at those—as there seems to be an idea—who come over the Canadian borders. It is aimed particularly at the thousands and thousands who come into our great Eastern cities and to our Atlantic seaboard. Since this debate arose I have heard the point made about miners of the West. I do not know how great their numbers are. I do know that they could not be affected except by retaliatory legislation. I do not know that there is to be retaliatory legislation. I do not see how we can legislate on that basis. But in any event it would be necessary to prove the regular and habitual coming.

Mr. President, there is only one other point I desire to make before we vote. We have heard to-day much about humanity and what humanity demands in our treatment of those who are not citizens of the United States. That humanity which has been so loudly appealed to here to-day toward all aliens of the earth whom it is proposed to admit to the United States has been exceedingly silent in regard to those aliens crouching and beaten under the lash of Spain right at our doors in the Island of Cuba. But the humanity that is nearest to us and that is most important to us is the humanity of the United States. There is to me one all-important, all-convincing reason for this bill, and that is that there is a great mass of unemployed in this country. It was proclaimed on every stump. One party proposed one remedy; another party proposed another remedy; but there was no doubt that those unemployed were here. Every immigrant who comes into this country is one more addition to the ranks of the unemployed. When all our people are employed, then we can with safety cease to restrict immigration; but while there are unemployed Americans in this country it seems to me that that amendment on which the House insists, and which if voted down here means the ultimate defeat of the bill, is an amendment that strikes at the relief of a great evil. It is only a partial relief, but still it is some relief in these bad times to take from the unemployed of our great States this eternal competition of a lower kind of labor.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 5 o'clock has arrived. The question is upon concurring in the conference report.

Mr. MILLS. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MCBRIDE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE]. If the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS] will transfer his pair with my colleague [Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon] to the Senator from Mississippi, we shall both be enabled to vote.

Mr. VILAS. I shall be very glad to make that arrangement, letting the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] stand paired with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE].

Mr. MCBRIDE. Then I vote "yea."

Mr. MCMILLAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN]. Not knowing how he would vote, I will withhold my vote. I should vote "yea" if I were not paired.

Mr. MORRILL (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS]. I transfer my pair to the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK], and vote "yea."

Mr. PASCO (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Washington [Mr. WILSON]. I will transfer my pair to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. IRBY], and vote "nay."

Mr. SMITH (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS].

Mr. WALTHALL (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON]. I do not know how he would vote. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MCBRIDE. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon], if present, would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 34, nays 31; as follows:

YEAS—34.

Aldrich,	Davis,	McBride,	Proctor,
Allison,	Elkins,	Martin,	Quay,
Baker,	Faulkner,	Morrill,	Sewell,
Brown,	Frye,	Nelson,	Sherman,
Burrows,	Gallinger,	Peffer,	Teller,
Butler,	Gear,	Perkins,	Thurston,
Chandler,	Hill,	Pettigrew,	Wetmore.
Chilton,	Hoar,	Platt,
Cullom,	Lodge,	Pritchard,

NAYS—31.

Bacon,	Caffery,	Gibson,	Hawley,
Bate,	Call,	Gorman,	Lindsay,
Berry,	Carter,	Gray,	Mantle,
Blanchard,	Cockrell,	Hansbrough,	Mills,

Mitchell, Wis.	Pasco,	Stewart,	Vflas,
Morgan,	Pugh,	Tillman,	Voorhees,
Murphy,	Roach,	Turpie,	White.
Palmer,	Shoup,	Vest,

NOT VOTING—25.

Allen,	Dubois,	Jones, Nev.	Walthall,
Blackburn,	George,	Kenney,	Warren,
Brice,	Gordon,	Kyle,	Wilson,
Cameron,	Hale,	McMillan,	Wolcott.
Cannon,	Harris,	Mitchell, Oreg.
Clark,	Irby,	Smith,
Daniel,	Jones, Ark.	Squire,

So the report was concurred in.

Mr. HAWLEY. I beg the attention of the Senate for just one moment.

I was unable to obtain the floor to explain the reason why, while I am willing to exclude from this country ignorance and crime, I could not vote for the bill presented by the conference committee, simply because it says, so far as the United States is concerned, that an alien coming here who has not declared his intention of becoming a citizen shall die of starvation.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (H. R. 649) granting a pension to Joseph S. Bunker;

A bill (H. R. 2035) granting an increase of pension to Peter Anderson;

A bill (H. R. 7422) granting a pension to Lydia W. Holliday;

A bill (H. R. 7647) granting a pension of $30 per month to Albert Brown; and

A bill (H. R. 7688) for the relief of John M. Laughlin.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

A bill (H. R. 2974) to correct the military record of Corydon Winkler, late private Eighth Company, First Battalion, First Ohio Sharpshooters;

A bill (H. R. 8075) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Anton Ernst; and

A bill (H. R. 8706) to correct the military record of Patrick Hanley.

The bill (H. R. 10202) defining the jurisdiction of the United States circuit courts in cases brought for the infringement of letters patent was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Patents.

GOVERNMENT RESERVATION AT FORT SMITH, ARK.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2923) for the better improvement of the Government reservation at the city of Fort Smith, in the State of Arkansas, and for other purposes; which was, on page 2, line 9, to strike out all after "States," down to and including line 16 on page 5, and in lieu thereof to insert:

That such parts of said ground as shall be occupied for said streets and alleys is hereby donated to the said city of Fort Smith for the purpose of being dedicated to public use.

That said city of Fort Smith is hereby authorized and empowered to remove the old fort walls and buildings attached thereto, and to dispose of the same for its own use.

That the Secretary of the Interior shall cause said lands to be surveyed into lots and blocks, according to the plans and surveys of said city, and shall file a plat showing such survey in his office, and he shall cause the portions thereof not specifically reserved herein to be sold at public auction to the highest bidder, upon such terms and under such regulations as he may direct; and upon the full payment of the purchase money, execute proper conveyances to the purchaser or purchasers thereof.

The funds arising from the sale of said lots shall be turned into the Treasury to the credit of the United States.

Mr. BERRY. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

GEORGE W. FERREE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10040) granting an increase of pension to George W. Ferree, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate insist on its amendment, and agree to the conference asked by the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. BAKER, Mr. PALMER, and Mr. PEFFER were appointed.

REVISION OF PATENT LAWS.

Mr. PLATT. On the 27th of January, from the Committee on Patents, I reported favorably, without amendment, the bill (H. R. 3014) revising and amending the statutes relating to patents, which is Order of Business No. 1472 on the Calendar. The committee has since further considered the bill, and now instructs me to report it with amendments. I ask that it may take the same place on the Calendar as the former report.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That order will be made, in the absence of objection.

UNIFORM SYSTEM OF BANKRUPTCY.

Mr. HILL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New York moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to have the regular order laid before the Senate before that motion is submitted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8110) to establish a uniform law on the subject of bankruptcies throughout the United States.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. HILL. I now renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The question being put, there were, on a division—ayes 37, noes 3.

Mr. HILL. A quorum has not voted on the division.

Mr. BERRY. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PASCO (when his name was called). I announce the same transfer of my pair as before, and vote "yea."

Mr. WHITE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. SHOUP]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I inquire if the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD] has voted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Carolina has not voted, the Chair is advised.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I am paired with that Senator, and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. WHITE. I will transfer my pair with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. SHOUP] to the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KYLE], and vote. I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 43, nays 8; as follows:

YEAS—43.

Allen,	Davis,	Mitchell, Wis.	Sewell,
Allison,	Frye,	Morgan,	Sherman,
Bacon,	Gallinger,	Murphy,	Smith,
Bate,	Gibson,	Palmer,	Tillman,
Berry,	Hawley,	Pasco,	Turpie,
Burrows,	Hill,	Peffer,	Vest,
Caffery,	Hoar,	Perkins,	Vilas,
Call,	Lindsay,	Platt,	Voorhees,
Carter,	Lodge,	Pugh,	Walthall,
Chilton,	Martin,	Quay,	White.
Cullom,	Mills,	Roach,

NAYS—8.

Baker,	McBride,	Nelson,	Stewart,
Brown,	Mantle,	Pettigrew,	Wetmore.

NOT VOTING—39.

Aldrich,	Daniel,	Hansbrough,	Pritchard,
Blackburn,	Dubois,	Harris,	Proctor,
Blanchard,	Elkins,	Irby,	Shoup,
Brice,	Faulkner,	Jones, Ark.	Squire,
Butler,	Gear,	Jones, Nev.	Teller,
Cameron,	George,	Kenney,	Thurston,
Cannon,	Gordon,	Kyle,	Warren,
Chandler,	Gorman,	McMillan,	Wilson,
Clark,	Gray,	Mitchell, Oreg.	Wolcott.
Cockrell,	Hale,	Morrill,

So the motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After thirty-five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, February 18, 1897, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, February 17, 1897.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 3680) to provide for the removal of the Interstate National Bank of Kansas City from Kansas City, Kans., to Kansas City, Mo.; and

A bill (S. 1427) to provide for promoting Capt. William N. Tisdall, United States Army, now on the retired list, to the rank of major.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 8250) for the relief of William Gemmill; and

A bill (H. R. 9494) concerning certain homestead lands in Florida.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following Senate bills were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A bill (S. 3680) to provide for the removal of the Interstate National Bank of Kansas City from Kansas City, Kans., to Kansas City, Mo.—to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

A bill (S. 1427) to provide for promoting Capt. William N. Tisdall, United States Army, now on the retired list, to the rank of major—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

UNITED STATES COURTS IN UTAH.

Mr. BRODERICK. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a conference report.

The conference report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 2037) to provide times and places for holding terms of United States courts in Utah, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House, and agree to the same.

CASE BRODERICK,
CHARLES G. BURTON,
J. W. BAILEY,
Conferees on the part of the House.
GEORGE F. HOAR,
FRANK J. CANNON,
Conferees on the part of the Senate.

The statement of the House conferees is as follows:

The House conferees submit the following statement: The bill (S. 2037) to provide times and places for holding terms of United States court in Utah, as it passed the Senate, authorized civil suits not of a local character to be brought and tried in the division of the district where the defendants, or one defendant, resided or where the cause of action arose. The House deemed this a departure from the rule and struck out the words "or where the cause of action arose" wherever they appeared in the bill, and passed the same as amended. The Senate refused to concur in these amendments and asked for a conference with the House, which was granted. Upon a full and free conference between the managers of the two Houses, it was recommended that the Senate recede from its position and agree to the House amendment, and reported accordingly.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

CASE BRODERICK.
C. G. BURTON.
J. W. BAILEY.

LUCY ALEXANDER PAYNE.

Mr. COFFIN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a conference report.

The conference report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 1501) granting an increase of pension to Lucy Alexander Payne, widow of Capt. J. Scott Payne, Fifth United States Cavalry, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendment.

CHARLES E. COFFIN,
J. C. C. BLACK,
Managers on the part of the House.
W. N. ROACH,
H. C. HANSBROUGH,
W. A. PEFFER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement of the House conferees is as follows:

The Senate bill No. 1501, under discussion in conference, provided that the beneficiary should receive $50 per month. The House amended the bill by striking out the word "fifty" and inserting the word "thirty." The effect of agreeing to the report will be to grant the beneficiary $30 per month pension.

CHAS. E. COFFIN.
J. C. C. BLACK.

Mr. BLUE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House disagree to the report of the committee of conference and ask a further conference, and that the conferees be instructed to insist on the House amendment.

Mr. MEREDITH. Is this question debatable?

The SPEAKER. The regular course would be to pass first upon the question of agreeing to the conference report; that is the question now before the House. If the House refuses to agree to the report, then a motion to insist and to ask a further conference, and also a motion to instruct the House conferees would be in order.

Mr. BLUE. Is it not in order to make the motion simply to disagree?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the question comes up in the affirmative form, and that it is not in order to change it to the negative, because the House, if it desires to disagree to the report, can carry out its purpose by voting in the negative.

Mr. BLUE. I know the result can be reached either way. I want to follow the practice of the House.

The SPEAKER. The course just stated by the Chair is in accordance with the practice of the House and with the rules of parliamentary law.

Mr. BLUE. Is the pending motion to adopt the report of the committee?

The SPEAKER. That is the question before the House. Whenever a conference report is presented, the question is, Will the House agree to the conference report?

Mr. BLUE. Upon that I desire to be heard.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas is recognized.

Mr. BLUE. I ask that the report on this bill as it came to the House be read as a part of my remarks.

The conference report was again read.

Mr. BLUE. Now, Mr. Speaker, I trust the House will understand what this report means. The House, after some tribulation, has substantially reached a rule whereby we are not pensioning the widows of generals at an amount exceeding $50 a month. This report breaks that precedent and seeks to pension the widow of a captain at $50 a month. The only reason offered, so far as I can gather, is not merely that the officer performed distinguished services, but the chief reason is that the widow needs the money. I do not know of any reason for the establishment of such a rule. If every one in this nation is to be pensioned who chances to be in destitute circumstances and is in some way connected with a soldier, then we are opening very wide the door of the Treasury of the United States.

The House has sought to cut down this pension by its amendment to $30 a month. That is in excess of what the general rule would allow to widows whose husbands held the rank that this man did. That is going beyond the limit; and this beneficiary ought to be satisfied to accept the action of the House. It is due to the House conferees to say that one member of the conference committee on the part of the House refused to sign this report; and it comes here as the report of simply a majority of the House committee—under the pressure, as I understand, of the Senate portion of the conference committee.

Let us in this pension business strive to establish a rule that shall be equitable, so far as possible, to the beneficiaries, and a full and perfect guard of the Treasury of the United States. I trust that this motion to adopt the report of the conference committee will not prevail, but that a further conference may be had so as to reach a proper adjustment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. In view of the appropriations contained in the sundry civil bill passed the other day under a suspension of the rules, does not the gentleman think it is rather inconsistent for us to be drawing the line now on a few soldiers?

Mr. BLUE. Oh, Mr. Speaker, my friend from Indiana, skilled in legislation as he is, does not want to evade this question in that way. If the rule which he suggests were to be adopted, then the Treasury of the United States might be raided again and again. The sundry civil bill as it passed this House the other day, save and except upon the question of appropriations for rivers and harbors, was as conservative a measure as any sundry civil bill which has passed the House in the last ten years of the life of this nation.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. The gentleman's exception covers the biggest portion of the expenditures in that bill.

Mr. BLUE. Yes; but the Committee on Appropriations were not responsible for that. The appropriations and authorizations made last year by the river and harbor bill may have been unwise, may have been excessive, may have been extravagant, but that bill was passed by this House over the veto of the President; and in accordance with what is fair and just treatment of the sentiment of the House, in accordance with fair and good legislation, the Appropriations Committee sought to comply with the former action of this body.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. The gentleman seems to forget that there were original appropriations made in the bill which we passed the other day under a suspension of the rules.

Mr. BLUE. I think the gentleman will find that upon the question of rivers and harbors the original appropriations in that bill were very slender. I do not recall now any that were of any consequence, save and except as they had been anticipated and authorized by the river and harbor bill. But suppose there were a few appropriations in that bill which were not meritorious, would the gentleman argue that because that bill may have contained some items which were not fully justified we are to break over a well-established rule and lay bare the Treasury of the United States to a raid upon it which is not based upon any principle or rule of action, but simply a mere sentimental matter?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I understand the gentleman's position logically to be about this, that we shall "save at the spigot and lose at the bung." It is not simply this measure, but what is to follow it seriously affects the Treasury.

Mr. RAY. Will the gentleman from Kansas allow me a moment?

Mr. BLUE. I yield a moment to the gentleman.

Mr. RAY. I do not understand that this House has established any particular rate of pension to be given to the widow of a private soldier or the widow of a captain or the widow of a colonel, but we have in these various cases measured the pension granted quite largely by the needs of the beneficiary.

Mr. BLUE. In reply to that permit me to say that the general rule prevailing in this House is to give the widow of an enlisted man not exceeding $12 a month, and under the act of 1890 but $8 a month. There may have been a few exceptions to that rule.

Mr. CROWTHER. None.

Mr. BLUE. So far as I recollect, I know of no exception. So far as the pensions of widows of generals are concerned, while the House has not laid down any inflexible rule, yet practically all of them that have passed in the latter part of this session have been for $50 a month and no more. We should adhere to our action along that line. Upon considerations of equity and reason, and under any rule which is practically sound, it is not fair to pension the widow of a captain upon the same plane with the widow of a general officer. And for that reason, I insist, Mr. Speaker, that we have gone already too far in these matters. It is in the interest of the better protection of the Treasury, and more consonant with a logical system of administration of our pension laws, to adopt such a policy—a policy that the House ought to maintain—of refusing to put the pension of the widow of a captain or minor officer upon an equality with that which is paid to a general officer.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Does the gentleman think that more ought to be paid to the widow of a general officer than is paid to the widow of a captain?

Mr. BLUE. If you leave it to me, I will tell the gentleman candidly, no, I do not think so. But the House, in its conduct of pension matters, has seen fit to do otherwise, and I must acquiesce.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Is it not a fact that the gentleman himself advocated on this floor a payment, in one instance at least, of a pension of $75 a month?

Mr. BLUE. The gentleman knows that is correct, and I have regretted it, as I have stated before. If I had had the experience of the gentleman from Indiana, I would decline to rise in my place and offer such an excuse under the circumstances. But I was a novice in the House then. I was new to this body; I did not fully appreciate the surrounding circumstances; and if the opportunity were offered again, I would vote to put the pension where it rightfully and properly belongs, at a rate not exceeding $50 per month. If, in my inexperience in this House, I committed an error once, must I be constantly criticised therefor all through my official life?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Does it matter with the gentleman from what Congressional district the soldier comes, or the widow of the soldier?

Mr. BLUE. The gentleman knows it does not. I have made no distinction, no discrimination here since I have fully understood it. But the general pension laws of the nation make a distinction in regard to pensions, and it was the plain and well-settled policy of recent years, until this House, in its extravagance, broke over the rule in these matters and voted $75 and $100 a month in some cases, where widows, as I am informed, possess magnificent competencies and are amply provided for by incomes, notably the widow of an officer from the gentleman's own State, the widow of ex-Secretary Gresham.

Now, I hope the gentleman from Indiana will make a speech in his own time. I have been extremely courteous to him.

Mr. LOUD. Perhaps this is an Indiana case.

Mr. BLUE. The gentleman from California suggests that perhaps this is an Indiana case, too. I do not know in what State the beneficiary lives, nor do I care. That is not the question here. It concerns the whole policy of the pension legislation of a great nation, and we should have some established rule and not attempt to legislate upon each of these cases as a matter of sentiment, and sentiment only, without any basis of equality or reason in the legislation.

Mr. MEREDITH. Mr. Speaker, in advocating the motion that the House shall stand by the conference report, I desire to call the attention of the House to the fact that since I have been an humble member of this body I have never been found advocating any pension case where I did not believe that equity and justice prevailed and that it was not based on a mere question of sentiment.

Mr. LOUD. None of us do.

Mr. MEREDITH. My friend suggests that none of us do. But I happen to be cognizant of the facts in regard to this particular case, and the reasons that my friend from Kansas has given for opposing it here are precisely the reasons which would justify us in sustaining the report of the committee, first, the service of the soldier, and second, the necessity of his widow.

Now, I desire to say that the record of Capt. J. Scott Payne was equal to that of any other soldier who ever served the country in any war. I desire to say that if the commendation of his superior officers, if the report of General Sherman, if the letter of General Crook, who was his commander, can have any weight in sustaining the record of this admirable soldier, then it will go without saying that he was the equal of any man, I care not what his rank or position may have been, in the discharge of his duty to his country.

I shall read what General Sherman said in reference to the report which was made by Captain Payne after the battle with the Utes, when the gallant Thornburg had gone down and he had taken command of the troops, and, after being surrounded for days and days, brought the troops out safely.

General Sherman, in forwarding the report of Capt. J. Scott Payne, of the Fifth Cavalry, to the Secretary of War, indorses it as follows:

HEADQUARTERS OF THE ARMY, November 8, 1879.

This modest and most admirable report was received after I had finished my annual report, else I should have embodied it almost entire as a better description of the fight at Milk Creek on September 29 last.

W. T. SHERMAN, General.

The following letter was addressed by General Crook to Captain Payne after the Milk Creek affair:

RAWLINS, WYO. T., October 8, 1879.

Capt. J. SCOTT PAYNE, Fifth Regiment of Cavalry:

The gallant conduct of yourself and men on the hard-fought field of Milk River with the Ute Indians on the 29th ultimo and the management of the battle after the fall of the gallant Thornburgh, as well as the prudence, courage, and judgment in the construction of defenses, and holding them against a largely superior force during so many days and nights of terrible suspense and danger until relief reached you, not only deserves the highest commendation I can give but the thanks of the country.

Very sincerely, your friend,

GEORGE CROOK,
Brigadier-General.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I will not further take up the time of the House in the reading of these testimonials; but it is well known that the newspapers of that time were filled with commendatory reports of the services of this gallant officer. The story of that fight and of the gallant stand made by this officer is a thrilling one, and the legislature of Wyoming passed a vote of thanks. Twice was he wounded in that battle, and he suffered from those wounds until the time of his death. He died leaving a helpless widow, who is confined to her house, who has two or three children to support, and it is for these reasons that I ask the House to stand by the conference report.

Allusion has been made by the gentleman who preceded me to bills which have heretofore passed, and it seems that the gentleman has changed his opinion in reference to pension bills. Ah, Mr. Speaker, the very fact that this is a helpless and dependent woman, the very fact that she is in poverty, and that she is without a home of her own, entitle her, it seems to me, when the distinguished services of her husband are considered, to receive the relief which is here asked for. Republics are indeed ungrateful if they will not care for the widows of such soldiers, men with such military records as that of this man.

Mr. Speaker, I ask this House to stand by this conference report. I do so believing that this is a meritorious case. I believe the necessities of the case require that she should have the sum agreed upon by the conferees. This is perhaps the last case that I shall ever have the opportunity of asking this House to pass upon, and I do ask the House to do justice to this woman, because I have a full knowledge of all the circumstances connected with the case, and I fully believe that its requirements are such as to fully justify the giving of the sum agreed upon by the conferees.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. As I understand, the motion is, first, to concur in the report of the conference committee.

The SPEAKER. To agree to the report of the conference committee.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. And I also understood the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. BLUE] to make a motion to nonconcur.

The SPEAKER. The way in which the House nonconcurs in a conference report is to vote in the negative. If the House votes in the negative and refuses to agree to the conference report, then the way is open for a motion for a new conference, for instructions to the conferees, or anything that the House sees fit to do.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Then I understand that if this conference report is voted down, a motion may then be made and entertained to nonconcur, and insist on the amendment of the House for $30 a month.

The SPEAKER. And for another conference. That is the case.

Mr. BAKER of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I shall not crave the indulgence of this House for a very long time. I had the honor to be a member of this committee, and failed to agree with the majority report. I have been identified with the active pension work of this House for a number of years past. During that time I have endeavored to carefully investigate each case, as far as it lies within my power, on its individual merits, and I feel warranted at this time in making the statement that if you indorse this report you will go beyond almost any precedent that has been set in this House in the last four years. That this man was a gallant soldier, there is no question. That he left a worthy widow and children, there is no question. No member of the committee has any doubt but that there are tens of thousands of other cases in the country to-day just as meritorious as this one. If such bills as this are to become laws, then it will take hundreds of millions of dollars annually to pay the pension roll.

Under the pension law, this woman is entitled to $20 a month. The Committee on Invalid Pensions, after carefully investigating, concluded that, on account of her condition and that of her family, they were warranted in giving $30 per month, but that was the extreme allowance that the committee were willing to give. The bill passed this House in that form and went to conference, and the Senate insisted, and two members of our committee joined with them. My object in making this statement is to call your attention to the fact that the proposed action is, so far as I know, without precedent. I know that no such bill has ever met with my approval in the six years that I have had the honor to be a member of this House, and I trust that this House will not concur in the report of this committee, but will order the bill back to a further conference.

Mr. RAY. Is it not true that, in fixing the amount to be allowed in a private pension bill, you have been guided and controlled very largely by the necessities of the proposed beneficiary?

Mr. BAKER of Kansas. That is true to a great extent.

Mr. RAY. This is simply a contention now as to whether the situation of this widow is such that she ought to have $30 or $50 a month.

Mr. MEREDITH. She has to have an attendant all the time.

Mr. BAKER of Kansas. The Committee on Invalid Pensions is without any precedent that warrants it in allowing over $30 a month.

Mr. RAY. You think that $30 a month is ample?

Mr. BAKER of Kansas. I do.

Mr. RAY. It seems that one of your colleagues on this conference committee, two of them, and three in the Senate, think she ought to have $50 a month. Now, is it wise, under such circumstances, where the five agree that the widow ought to have $50, to stand out against the Senate? Is it wise for the House, under such circumstances, where five agree that the widow ought to have $50, to stand out against the Senate and a majority of its own conferees and contest the question of $20 a month to the widow of a brave and gallant soldier? Do you think it wise to do so?

Mr. BAKER of Kansas. My judgment is that it is. My judgment is it is the duty of this House to do right, irrespective of the report of any committee.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. RAY. I want, right there, if the gentleman will permit me, to say of course I concede that it is the duty of this House to do right if it can, and it is the duty of the Senate to do right; but when the conferees of the House and of the Senate are appointed for the very purpose of arriving at a compromise and doing what is right and just, in view of all the evidence and all the circumstances, is it not quite evident that $50 a month is right, in view of the fact that 5 out of 6 agree upon that sum?

Mr. BAKER of Kansas. That depends upon the influences that were at work, and those influences were at work in this case.

Mr. NORTHWAY. You are willing to give her $30 a month.

Mr. BAKER of Kansas. I am.

Mr. NORTHWAY. That is $10 a month more than she could get under the law.

Mr. BAKER of Kansas. It is.

Mr. NORTHWAY. That $10 you would give to her on account of her condition.

Mr. BAKER of Kansas. I would give her that on account of her condition. Let me say just here, no one is more willing to sympathize with the soldier who has offered his life in the defense of his country than I am, and no one would be less willing to do a wrong or injustice to his family.

Mr. NORTHWAY. That is right. But here, when you come to figure this compromise, and the conferees come to figure on this compromise, they do so, but at a higher rate than your own, is it not simply a question of policy and not one of a rule of law that we are being guided by here?

Mr. BAKER of Kansas. If it is a matter of policy, you can not agree to the conference report, because you would open hundreds of thousands of cases.

Mr. WOOD. Has there been any compromise by the conferees?

Mr. BAKER of Kansas. None whatever.

Mr. WOOD. It has been an absolute surrender by the managers on the part of the House.

Mr. BAKER of Kansas. That is true of a majority of the committee.

Mr. MILNES. Has it not been the policy of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, in fixing the pensions of private soldiers and noncommissioned officers, to keep those down at least to the highest point fixed by law and not to exceed that amount in the case of widows now?

Mr. BAKER of Kansas. That is so.

Mr. MILNES. But in the case of commissioned officers you have gone beyond that.

Mr. BAKER of Kansas. Not with my vote.

Mr. MILNES. I am speaking about the committee as a whole.

Mr. BAKER of Kansas. I have tried to be consistent; and being consistent with my previous action, I feel it to be my duty to make an appeal to this House in behalf of hundreds, yea, tens of thousands, of brave soldiers who went down in the defense of their country.

Mr. MILNES. I am sure that you do that. There is no case where the committee has reported the case of a private soldier to this House that they have gone beyond $12 a month this session.

Mr. BAKER of Kansas. Yes, there are, I think.

Mr. MILNES. I do not know of one.

Mr. HENDERSON. I got one reported by the gentleman for a private soldier, not a widow.

Mr. MILNES. I am talking about private soldiers. I am not talking about the widows.

Mr. SULLOWAY. There have been more than thirty passed this session.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I got one through.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Let me ask the gentleman if these special bills which are granting pensions at $30 and $50 a month are not creating a good deal of uneasiness and mistrust and dissatisfaction among the private soldiers——

Mr. BAKER of Kansas. They are.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Speaker, is this a meeting of the House or a private meeting of a few members?

The SPEAKER. It is a meeting of the House, but has the other appendage.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE (continuing). And that ought not to be.

Mr. BAKER of Kansas. That is my judgment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to say that the difficulty arises from the size of the Hall. It is very difficult for anybody to be heard in it.

Mr. BAKER of Kansas. I have only a word more to say. There has been a constant endeavor on the part of the committee since it was organized in this Congress to adopt a uniform system to govern in these pension allowances; but such has been the pressure brought to bear upon the committee from time to time in many cases that it has seemed impossible to do so. Each member seems to have special influences backing up his bill, and it has been very difficult for the committee to adhere to a uniform rule.

Special pleas on the ground of the distinguished services of the beneficiary are made in almost every case. I am glad to hear the story of the bravery of the soldiers of the Union; my heart swells with pride as I listen to the record of their gallant deeds, but I thank God that patriotism and bravery were not confined to one man or to a thousand men or to ten thousand men. [Applause.] Hundreds of thousands of men left their homes, went forth in defense of the Government, and gave their lives freely in the great cause, and to those men, and to the wives who stayed at home and took care of their families, it is the duty of this Government to be just and liberal; but, for that very reason, it is our duty not to bestow undeserved bounty in special cases. Looking at the question from that point of view, I declined to join the other members of the conference committee in the report in this case, and I trust that the House will stand by its amendment.

Mr. GROW. Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a motion that I think will take precedence of the one now pending. My motion is that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. BLUE. That is the question before the House.

Mr. GROW. I understood the motion was to nonconcur.

The SPEAKER. The question before the House is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. GROW. The motion I was about to make was that the House agree to the report.

The SPEAKER. That is the question now pending.

Mr. BLUE. I yield now to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE].

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Speaker, I always vote for general pension bills, and I generally vote for any pension bill where I think there is merit, and where there is some difficulty in the law which prevents the granting of a pension by the Pension Bureau; but here is a proposition to increase a pension from the amount to which the applicant would be entitled under the law to $50 a month, and we are asked to make this increase upon the ground that the husband of this lady was an officer.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Not now. Mr. Speaker, I want to caution my colleagues on this floor as to the danger that we are incurring by passing these special bills for exceptional pensions. The people in our several districts read in the newspapers that Congress passes a law for such a man or such a widow to get a pension of $50 a month, and they see no reason why they should not get as much, and they write to their Representatives here to introduce bills for them, and if this goes on, inside of five years we shall have nearly all the widows who are on the pension roll asking us to pass special bills giving them increased pensions, on the ground that their husbands were just as brave, just as heroic, and made just as great sacrifices as the husbands of those for whom we have passed these special bills.

We have a general pension law, under which everybody that is eligible can be pensioned, and in addition to that we pension by special acts those who can show that they have meritorious claims which, owing to peculiar circumstances, they are unable to establish under the general law. But here is a case where the husband of the beneficiary was a captain, brave and heroic no doubt, but after all, this is only one of thousands of cases, and we ought not to pass these special private pension bills making exceptions to the general law, which will come home to plague us in the future, and which, if persisted in, will gradually transform our pension roll from a general roll to a special roll. If the pensions provided under the general law are not large enough, let us increase them by general legislation, but let us not do it in this indirect manner by special legislation in special cases. Here we have a particular case, made special by Congress, and yet there is really nothing in it any more deserving than there is in a thousand or two thousand cases in my district, where the husband did not wear shoulder straps but carried a musket, and was as brave and served the country as long and as well as this captain did.

As I have already said, when other pensioners read about these special allowances it occurs to them that they are entitled to as much, and when they look into these cases they are unable to see any good reason or any excuse for this special legislation which would not be equally applicable to themselves, and it results in dissatisfaction and uneasiness, and in annoying applications to members of Congress to introduce bills. And members do introduce such bills in many instances simply because some other member has introduced a bill or bills with no more merit than theirs. We can not answer the argument of the widow who appeals to us to introduce a bill for her benefit and shows that her case is quite as deserving as that of some other widow who has received one of these special allowances. We can not convince her that the husband of a woman who is pensioned at $50 a month was any braver or made any greater sacrifices than her husband did. I hope the motion to concur in this conference report will be voted down, and that the motion of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. BLUE] which is to follow, to nonconcur and insist on the House amendment fixing this pension at $30 a month, will be adopted. That is a sufficient amount, and it will be a better precedent in the future and will tend to save us from some of the vexations and troubles and dangers to which I have alluded.

Mr. GROW. Mr. Speaker, I had no idea of taking part in this discussion, but the position of my colleague [Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE], if maintained, would make it necessary that we should pass no widow's pension at over $12 a month. According to him we should be troubled the moment we pass a bill above that amount. His argument is against any differences in our pension scale; it would require a horizontal rate for everybody of, say, $12 a month. Otherwise we should be besieged continually for special rates of pension legislation. Here is the case of a widow who is perfectly helpless, so as to require an attendant. Does not such a case appeal to the discretion of Congress, and, if we do grant an exceptional pension in such a case, is that any reason why other widows in an entirely different situation should receive the same amount? Is not her case to be regarded differently from that of a widow in good health who has attained only the average length of life? This woman is perfectly helpless. She is the widow of a brave soldier, and was his wife during his term of service. She took care of the soldier's home while he was on the battlefield. She is herself, therefore, a meritorious object of our consideration. Should we not make a discrimination in this case as against that of a widow who was not the wife of the soldier while in actual service on the field?

If we are to have special legislation at all, we must legislate on each case according to its own peculiar merits. There would be no private pension cases coming before us if they were not exceptions to the general law. I grant you that we may be beset by applications from various persons who regard their cases as equally meritorious with others on which we have favorably acted. But we can not help that unless we write in the Constitution of the United States a provision that "Congress shall not grant a pension to anybody of more than $12 a month," or some fixed amount. In that way me might stop applications for a greater amount, but in no other.

Mr. BLUE. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. ANDREWS].

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Speaker, this question renews the merriment in which we have been indulging from time to time in the ratings on private pension bills. After a careful study of the practice in relation to these matters, I have come to the conclusion that a large number of the private pension bills introduced into Congress and passed should never find place in our discussions. I have come to the conclusion, Mr. Speaker, that these bills are brought here by persons who have reached the maximum of pension allowed under the general law through the Pension Bureau; and having reached the full measure of their allowance under the law they come here, and, as a special privilege, ask for an increase of rating.

Were the Pensions committees of Congress organized for that specific purpose? I firmly believe that the Pension Committees of this House can render their best service to the cause of pensions not by spending all their time in increasing the ratings allowed by general law, but by considering cases where technicalities are unjustly depriving pensioners of the rates allowed by existing laws.

If we continue the present policy we are simply resolving Congress into a pension bureau and taking away from the regular Department of the Government the consideration of this line of business. I believe that we shall render our best service by holding to the rate fixed by general law, and insisting that wherever possible this pension business shall go through the regular Department and the pensioner receive the allowance given by general statute. When inequalities are disclosed in the operations of existing law, we should so amend the law as to remove the injustice and give equality of right to all.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, we ought to stand by the action of the House on this question. We ought to vote down the motion to concur and send this bill back to a conference, insisting upon fixing this pension at $30 a month. Take an example. Recently we had before this House a bill to pension the widow of Captain Keiffe, of Idaho. The rate of pension recommended by the committee was $30 a month. When that bill came up, members promptly sprang to their feet and said that $20 a month would correspond with the maximum rate allowed by the general law for the widow of a captain. The widow of Captain Keiffe has two children. She is in a feeble condition of health, and I understand that her enfeebled father is also dependent upon her for support. Under these circumstances, in the case of this widow with these extraordinary obligations resting upon her, the House amended the bill so as to make the pension $20 a month, the rate allowed by general law to the widow of a captain. Here we are asked to allow $50 a month, $30 beyond the rate allowed in the general statutes. The committee has recommended $30 as a compromise on this question. The gentleman from Ohio says that if you compromise on thirty, why not on fifty? The question might follow directly, Why not compromise on a hundred or a thousand dollars a month?

Mr. NORTHWAY. I am in accord with the gentleman's views.

Mr. ANDREWS. I insist that the House ought to vote down the motion to concur, and, if possible, return at an early day to the general provisions of the law applicable in cases of this kind. [Applause.]

Mr. MEREDITH. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to detain the House more than a few moments. Before referring to the particular circumstances of this case, I wish to return my thanks to the eloquent gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GROW], the Nestor of this House, for the chivalrous sentiments which fell from his lips only a few moments ago.

I wish to say to gentlemen who have opposed this report that the position they take seems to me to come too late. I have just been informed that the widow of an officer was allowed only a few days ago a pension of $50 a month. And the gentlemen are mistaken as to the merits of this case and the foundation upon which it stands. I want to say, so it may be understood, that it is the pressing need of this helpless woman in her feeble condition that requires she should have this much money for a decent support.

Mr. Speaker, this soldier is admitted to have been a brave one. He sprang from a race of brave men, men who from their infancy were taught what in my mind are the three cardinal virtues—to ride, to shoot, and to speak the truth. From that race of people have come soldiers who have illuminated the history of their country, who have stood by it in its peril and died for it as this man has done.

Mr. Speaker, it has been said that republics are ungrateful; and certainly it is true if, under circumstances such as these, in the case of a helpless and enfeebled widow whose husband has gone down to his grave in defense of his country, the American Congress, after numerous precedents have been set, should refuse to give her for the remainder of her life the pittance here proposed in order that she may eke out her days in something like comfort.

Mr. Speaker, in my opening statement I referred to the heroism of this man. I wish to add that Congress itself, on account of the part he took in the noted campaign already referred to, had determined that he should be made a major. I hold in my hand the report of the Committee on Military Affairs suggesting that the President should promote him to this rank in view of the distinguished services which he had rendered. I shall not take up the time of the House in reading that report, but will read simply an extract from the St. Louis Republican showing the country's appreciation of this man's services at that time, when they were fresh in its memory.

Payne's command is relieved; so are the hearts of thousands of people all over the country. The story of his siege and brave resistance is told this morning. It is one of the most graphic yet modest narratives in all our military history. None but a brave and truthful soldier could have written it. In the history of the Afghan and the Zulu war there is nothing to compare with it in point of courage under difficulties and persistence in the apparent teeth of fate.

Now, I say, Mr. Speaker, such was the record of this soldier, whose helpless widow appeals to the American Congress to-day. The press of the country at that time was teeming with praise of the conduct of her husband in the defense of his country and his Government. Knowing the circumstances as I do, and the helpless condition of this lady, I have urged you, with all the emphasis and all the earnestness at my command, to adopt this conference report. I have endeavored to state the facts as they exist. I have been unable to state them as they ought to be stated; but I beg the members of this House who were heroes in the war, who have been looking after the interests of their friends' widows, to stand by me in my effort to have the report of the conferees sustained by this House.

Mr. BLUE. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CROWTHER].

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to oppose the motion to concur in the conference report. I do so, not because I am opposed to any pension, for, on the contrary, I believe in legitimate pensions, but because I believe in equity and in justice to the widows of those men who sacrificed their lives in defense of the country. I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that this soldier, Captain Paine, graduated from the Military Academy in 1866. He was a soldier by profession.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. How could he have been in the war if he graduated in 1866?

Mr. CROWTHER. He was not in the civil war.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Then what are we talking about?

Mr. CROWTHER. That is one impression I want to remove from the minds of gentlemen on this floor. He was not in the civil war. He was an officer in the Regular Army, educated at the expense of the Government. That was his profession by adoption. In one of the Indian wars he received disabilities——

Mr. DOOLITTLE. How does that affect this bill?

Mr. CROWTHER. Wait a moment and I will tell you how it affects some of these cases we have been discussing. He was discharged for disability. He obtained a pension under the general law at the rate of $20 per month, the highest figure he could receive under that law. After his death his widow was pensioned, under the same general law, at the same figure at which her husband had been pensioned. When the Senate bill came up, the House amended it so that she would receive $30 per month, or $10 more than she could receive under the general law, trying in that way to compromise the matter. I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that such bills as this are the cause of the great unrest amongst that great army of citizens of this country of whom I am a representative upon this floor—the soldiers of the late war. As a member of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, I have, within the last twelve days, received seventy-nine letters from old soldiers, asking me to introduce special bills to increase their pensions, because the pensions that they are now receiving are not sufficient to meet their necessities.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. And if you are here in the next House you will receive seven hundred such letters.

Mr. CROWTHER. I have received more than fifty letters from the widows of old soldiers, asking me to introduce bills to increase their pensions, for the reason that they see that the House of Representatives is voting, with lavish hand, fifty and seventy-five dollars per month to the widows of general officers. I want to say, in this connection, in reply to the statement of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSON], that I have sat upon the Committee on Invalid Pensions for two years. I have attended every meeting of that committee, and I do not remember any bill passing to increase the pension of a widow of a private soldier to a greater amount than she would receive under the general law. But I discover that there is a sentiment upon the floor of this House willing and anxious to grant large pensions to the widows of general officers. I think it is time that these invidious distinctions should be stopped. We have been trying to stop it, a few of us, for weeks and months, and we have got the matter down to such a state now that it has been recognized by conference committees and by members upon this floor that $50 per month is sufficient for the widow of any general officer.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to call the attention of this House to another thing. Only a few days ago we passed a pension bill for the widow of General Stoneman, one of the great captains of the late war, and this House passed it at $30 a month. Yet we have this bill before us asking $50 for the widow of a captain, $20 more than the House voted for the widow of General Stoneman. Mr. Speaker, I hope that the House will not agree to the report of this conference committee, but that it will stand by justice, equity, and right in the interest of the old soldiers of the nation and their widows and orphans.

Mr. BLUE. Mr. Speaker, if no other gentleman is to be heard, I desire to move the previous question.

Mr. MORSE. Will not the gentleman yield to me for three minutes?

Mr. BLUE. I yield to the gentleman for three minutes.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. Speaker, since I have been a member of this House I have consistently and persistently opposed this class legislation. In answer to requests from my own constituents (and I represent a very large soldier constituency, perhaps second to none in Massachusetts), I have, I say, refused to introduce bills of this class. What is the effect of this class legislation? The only possible effect is to make the great mass of pensioners, the thousands of pensioners of the country, entirely dissatisfied with the bounty of the Government. I warn the friends of the soldier on this floor, and I claim to be one myself, that there is danger along this line. There is danger of making the whole pension system of this Government so odious that it will be repealed or modified, or the pensions of soldiers reduced. I say there is danger at this point.

Now, I hope, Mr. Speaker, that the House will stand by its action and refuse to concur in the conference report. I believe that I represent the opinion among my constituents and in the Commonwealth which I have the honor in part to represent on this floor. Mr. Speaker, as a friend of the soldier, as a friend of legislation in the interest of the soldier, as a friend of pension legislation, if the present laws are defective or not adequate to meet this class of cases, then I want a general law passed that shall apply to all pensioners alike. I do not want one person who has a friend at court to be able to come here and possibly get $50, $60, or $75 a month as a soldier's widow and to have it true that in the next house an equally deserving soldier's widow, whose husband served her country as bravely and well, shall only receive $8 or $12 a month. I again say that this legislation is wrong and unjust, and the effect of this legislation is to bring the entire pension system of the country into disfavor and make the great mass of pensioners of this country dissatisfied with the bounty of the Government.

Now, Mr. Speaker, one word more. A great committee of this House, to which I belong, has had many hearings during this entire Congress. They have presented bills that I believe to be meritorious bills for the erection of public buildings. I refer to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. No less than 305 members of this House out of 356 members have signed a petition to the Committee on Rules asking for time to consider these bills. We are told that the situation of the Treasury and the condition of the country will not warrant us in having a day in court to present those bills. Now, I say if economy is the watchword of the Government, is there not a good place for practicing economy presented here? Here you are entailing an expense on the Government for all time. I submit that we have already gone too far in this class legislation, and therefore I sincerely hope that the House will stand by its action and refuse to agree to the conference report.

Mr. BLUE. Mr. Speaker, I demand the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. MEREDITH. Division!

The House divided; and there were—ayes 28, noes 96.

So the House refused to agree to the conference report.

Mr. BLUE. Mr. Speaker, I renew my motion that the House insist on its disagreement and ask for a further conference, with instructions that the conferees insist on the amendment of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas moves that the House further insist upon its amendment and ask for a further conference.

Mr. BLUE. With instructions that the conferees insist on the House amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the instructions should be put separately. The question is on the motion to insist and to ask for a further conference.

The question was put; and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. BLUE. Now, Mr. Speaker, I move that the conferees be instructed to insist upon the amendment of the House.

The question was put; and the motion was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. BLUE, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the House instructed its conferees was laid on the table.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a conference report on the legislative appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read.

The report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9643) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendments numbered 3, 32, 46, 48, 62, 68, 69, 70, and 79.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 27, 29, 30, 33, 35, 36, 37, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 66, 67, 71, 72, 75, 76, 77, 78, and 80, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 26, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out, in line 5, of the matter inserted by said amendment the words "to be approved by the Joint Committee on the Library;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 28, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Register of copyrights, $3,000, who shall, on and after July 1, 1897, under the direction and supervision of the Librarian of Congress, perform all the duties relating to copyrights, and shall make weekly deposits with the Secretary of the Treasury and make monthly reports to the Secretary of the Treasury and the Librarian of Congress, and shall, on and after July 1, 1897, give bond to the Librarian of Congress in the sum of $20,000, with approved securities, for the faithful discharge of his duties."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 34, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 16 of the matter inserted by said amendment, after the word "dollars," insert "and said superintendent shall report to Congress at its next regular session the number of employees and the compensation of each employee hereunder;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 36, with an amendment as follows: On page 23 of the bill, in line 5, strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 47, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "Chief law clerk, $2,500; four law clerks, revising accounts and briefing opinions, one at $2,100 and three at $2,000 each; three clerks of class 4;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 49, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert $39,700; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 63, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed in said amendment insert $5,000; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 64, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Assay office, Deadwood, S. Dak.: The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to use the unexpended balance of the appropriation of $15,000 for establishing an assay office at Deadwood, S. Dak., made by the sundry civil appropriation act approved June 11, 1896, for rent of a suitable building for such purpose, and providing the same with necessary furnaces, fixtures, and apparatus, and for wages of workmen and contingent expenses; and said assay office shall be conducted under the provisions of the act entitled 'An act revising and amending the laws relative to mints, assay offices, and coinage of the United States,' approved February 12, 1873."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 65, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$2,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 73, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$2,250;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 74, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$9,250;" and the Senate agree to the same.

HENRY H. BINGHAM,
JOHN E. McCALL,
ALEX. M. DOCKERY,
Managers on the part of the House.

S. M. CULLOM,
W. B. ALLISON,
F. M. COCKRELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement of the House conferees was read, as follows:

The managers on the part of the House of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9643) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, submit the following written statement in explanation of the action agreed upon by the conference committee on each of the said amendments, namely:

On amendments numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, and 22, relating to the Senate: Appropriates, as proposed by the Senate, as follows:

For an assistant messenger, at $1,200, in lieu of a page at $912.50, in the Secretary's office;

For an additional carpenter, at $900; an additional telephone operator, at $720; a page in the press gallery, at $600, and three additional laborers, at $720 each, under the Sergeant-at-Arms;

Increasing the pay of an assistant in the document room from $1,440 to $1,600;

For a page, at $660, in the folding room;

For an additional assistant engineer, at $1,440; an additional fireman, at $1,095, and two additional laborers, at $720 each, under the Architect of the Capitol; and

Increasing the amount for materials, for furniture, and repairs from $1,000 to $2,000, and for services in cleaning and repairing furniture from $1,000 to $2,000.

On amendments numbered 23, 34, and 25, relating to the House of Representatives: Strikes out of the bill the provision making appropriations for session employees available before July 1, 1897, and transposes a paragraph in the bill.

On amendments numbered 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, and 39, relating to the Library of Congress: Provides that the Librarian of Congress shall be appointed subject to confirmation by the Senate, and strikes out the provision that the rules and regulations of the Library shall be approved by the Joint Committee on the Library; provides for a register of copyrights, at $3,000, to perform all the duties relating to copyrights, on and after July 1, 1897, under the direction of the Librarian of Congress, requiring the register of copyrights to make weekly deposits with the Secretary of the Treasury and monthly reports to the Secretary of the Treasury and to the Librarian of Congress, and to give bond to the Librarian of Congress in the sum of $20,000; appropriates $4,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $6,000, as proposed by the Senate, for purchase of books for the Library; provides for a superintendent of the Library building and grounds, to be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate, at $5,000, and appropriates a gross sum for the employment by him of necessary clerks, messengers, and others for the care of the building; provides that the officer now in charge of the construction of the building shall terminate his duty and assume the custody and care of the building and grounds after March 4, 1897, appoint the employees under his charge, procure furniture for the building, and remove into it the Library, copyright collections, and furniture, excluding the Law Library, and superintend the completion of such contracts pertaining to the construction of said building as may remain unfinished on March 4, 1897; requires the Librarian of Congress to give a bond of $20,000 instead of $50,000, as proposed by the House, and provides that the rooms now occupied by the Library of Congress in the Capitol building shall not, after the removal of said Library, be occupied for any purpose until so ordered by Congress.

On amendment numbered 40: Provides for a secretary, at $5,000, instead of a private secretary, to the President.

On amendments numbered 41 and 42: Appropriates for a private secretary to the Secretary of State at $2,400 instead of $2,000.

On amendments numbered 43, 44, and 45: Appropriates for a foreman of bindery at $5 per day instead of $4 per day, and for 4 binders at $4 instead of $3.20 per day each, in the division of stationery, printing, and blanks of the Treasury Department.

On amendments numbered 46, 47, 48, and 49, relating to the office of the Comptroller of the Treasury: Appropriates for a chief clerk at $2,500 instead of $2,700, as proposed by the Senate; and for a chief law clerk at $2,500, 1 law clerk at $2,100 and 3 law clerks at $2,000, instead of 5 law clerks at $2,100, as proposed by the House; for 3 clerks of class 4, as proposed by the House, instead of 2 confidential clerks of class 4 and 1 clerk of class 3, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendments numbered 50, 51, and 52: Appropriates for two additional clerks of class 1, and two additional clerks at $900 each, as proposed by the Senate, in the force employed in redeeming the national currency in the office of the Treasurer.

On amendments numbered 53 and 54: Appropriates for an examiner at $2,500, as proposed by the Senate, in the office of the Director of the Mint.

On amendment numbered 55: Provides for the granting of cumulative leaves of absence to medical officers of the Marine-Hospital Service, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendments numbered 56, 57, and 58: Fixes the salary of the assistant treasurer at Chicago at $5,000, as proposed by the Senate, and provides for an additional clerk at $1,200 in his office.

On amendments numbered 59 and 60: Appropriates for an additional engineer at $1,050 in the office of the assistant treasurer at New York.

On amendments numbered 61, 62, and 63, relating to the mint at Carson, Nev.: Appropriates for the officers and employees as proposed by the Senate; appropriates $10,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $15,000, as proposed by the Senate, for wages of workmen, and $5,000, instead of $7,500, as proposed by the Senate, for incidental and contingent expenses.

On amendment numbered 64: In lieu of the appropriation of $10,000 proposed by the Senate for the assay office at Deadwood, S. Dak., authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to use the appropriation of $15,000 made in the last sundry civil appropriation act for the establishment of said office.

On amendment numbered 65: Appropriates $2,500, instead of $2,000, as proposed by the House, and $3,000, as proposed by the Senate, for the services of a mathematician to supervise the completion of the tables of the planets.

On amendment numbered 66: Appropriates $6,800, as proposed by the Senate, for a clerk of class 4 to act as census clerk, and for rent, salaries, and incidental expenses for the care and preservation of the records of the Eleventh and previous censuses.

On amendment numbered 67: Appropriates $3,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $2,000, as proposed by the House, for professional and scientific books in the Patent Office.

On amendments numbered 68, 69, and 70: Strikes out the increase proposed by the Senate of $600 in the salary of the Commissioner of Education, and $200 in the salary of the statistician of the Bureau of Education.

On amendments numbered 71 and 72: Appropriates $10,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $8,500, as proposed by the House, for clerks in the office of the surveyor-general of New Mexico.

On amendments numbered 73 and 74: Appropriates $7,250 instead of $6,500, as proposed by the House, and $8,000, as proposed by the Senate, for clerks in the office of the surveyor-general of Oregon.

On amendments numbered 75 and 76: Appropriates for two additional laborers, at $660 each, as proposed by the Senate, in the Department of Labor.

On amendments numbered 77 and 78: Extends the powers of the Court of Private Land Claims to March 4, 1899, as proposed by the Senate, instead of to December 31, 1898, as proposed by the House.

On amendment numbered 79: Restores to the bill the provision proposed by the House extending the provisions of section 24 of the act of May 28, 1896, to the Indian Territory; and

On amendment numbered 80: Provides, as proposed by the Senate, that the act of May 26, 1896, shall not impair the right of the commissioner of the Yellowstone Park to receive his salary, as provided by law.

The bill, as finally agreed upon, appropriates $21,717,766.90, being $49,397.10 more than as it passed the House, $21,750 less than as it passed the Senate, $188,442.19 more than the law of the current year, and $1,049,383.90 less than the estimates.

HENRY H. BINGHAM,
JNO. E. McCALL,
ALEX. M. DOCKERY,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. QUIGG rose.

Mr. BINGHAM. Now, Mr. Speaker, if any gentleman desires to make any inquiry concerning any of the paragraphs of the bill, I shall take great pleasure in answering it.

Mr. QUIGG. That is the purpose for which I rise. During the last four months I have had the question addressed to me, I think, a little over ten thousand times as to who had the power to make appointments in the Library, and I would like to obtain from the gentleman from Pennsylvania the official form in which that question may be answered.

Mr. BINGHAM. I would state to the gentleman, I hope in such positive and definite terms that he will be fully able to answer the inquiry, that the Librarian will have the appointment of all the subordinate force pertaining to the Library, and the superintendent of the building will have the appointment of all the subordinate force pertaining to the superintendency of the building. The allowance contained in the conference report for the Librarian is the same as was agreed upon by the House. The allowance contained in the conference report for the superintendent of the building is the same as in the House bill. Does that meet the gentleman's inquiry?

Mr. QUIGG. That is a sufficient answer.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Will the Librarian in making these appointments regard solely, as heretofore, the wishes of members of the other body of the Federal Legislature and pay no attention whatever to the recommendation of Representatives? [Laughter.]

Mr. BINGHAM. I will say to the gentleman that I have no knowledge as to who the Librarian will be. The bill as agreed upon will require the President to send to the Senate the name of the Librarian, whose term of office will begin on the 1st day of July, 1897, as will that of the superintendent.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Are any appointments to be made by the present Librarian?

Mr. BINGHAM. The law does not go into operation until the beginning of the next fiscal year.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. Can the gentleman tell us how many appointments will be authorized under this bill to be made by the Librarian and how many by the superintendent?

Mr. BINGHAM. Without going into detail, my recollection is that this bill increases the present force 143. That number covers the superintendent's appointments as well as the Librarian's.

Mr. QUIGG. There are 147 places.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. Will the Librarian have the power to appoint 147, or does that number include the appointments of both the Librarian and the superintendent?

Mr. BINGHAM. The two together have the power to appoint 143 additional employees, provided the present force is continued.

Mr. LACEY. Are the appointments to be made under the civil-service rules?

Mr. BINGHAM. No civil-service rules, save and except the requirement that appointments shall be made in accordance with fitness.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. How many are to be made by the superintendent?

Mr. BINGHAM. It is not indicated in number, for the reason that the conferees concluded that it was best in the beginning to appropriate the same sums that the House had appropriated, without going into detail, but simply giving a lump sum, $147,000, according to my recollection.

Mr. QUIGG. If I heard the reading of the statement correctly, the House conferees have yielded to the Senate upon the question of the Librarian requiring confirmation by the Senate.

Mr. BINGHAM. They have, and also as to the superintendent.

Mr. QUIGG. Does not that waive some portion of the rights which the gentleman from Pennsylvania supposed the House to have in relation to this subject?

Mr. BINGHAM. No; the "gentleman from Pennsylvania's" contention with the gentleman from New York was that the Joint Committee on the Library should not have the power. That was all.

Mr. RICHARDSON. When the gentleman from Pennsylvania speaks of these appointments being made on the ground of fitness only, what does he mean? How is the fitness to be ascertained?

Mr. BINGHAM. By the Librarian and the superintendent.

Mr. RICHARDSON. By the Librarian and the superintendent without any board of examiners?

Mr. BINGHAM. Without any board.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Then it is left entirely in the discretion of those two officers.

Mr. BINGHAM. The Librarian himself has the power to appoint a board, but there is nothing in the bill that requires him to do so.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The law does not make it mandatory on him to appoint a board, but leaves it optional with him?

Mr. BINGHAM. Leaves it optional.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. How are those 143 appointments to be apportioned among the sexes?

Mr. BINGHAM. I am of the opinion that there are no ladies employed now on the Library force.

Mr. QUIGG. There are two.

Mr. BINGHAM. I was not aware of it.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. The present Librarian informed me some months ago—after having notified me that I could hope for no attention to my recommendations, as I was only on the House Committee on the Library [laughter]—that there were only one or two ladies employed at present in the Library, but when the new building was ready for occupation and use there would be a number of places for ladies.

Mr. BINGHAM. I would state that in the bill the committee have not gone into any question of that kind. The appointments are left wholly to the Librarian.

Mr. QUIGG. They have indicated the appointment of thirty charwomen, I believe.

Mr. BINGHAM. Those are eliminated, because the appropriation is made in a lump sum, without going into details.

Mr. QUIGG. The process, then, is this: The President appoints the Librarian, the Senate confirms him, and the Librarian makes all the appointments in his department?

Mr. BINGHAM. Yes.

Mr. QUIGG. Is the superintendent also to be confirmed by the Senate?

Mr. BINGHAM. He is to be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate.

Mr. QUIGG. And he makes all the appointments in his department?

Mr. BINGHAM. He does.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Most of the questions of these gentlemen have been diplomatic and somewhat impertinent. Now, I want to ask the gentleman a question which has the merit of directness and frankness. I want to know how many of these appointments I am to get? [Laughter.]

Mr. BINGHAM. I trust the gentleman will get all that the necessities of his constituents require.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Oh, that is a "glittering generality." I want the gentleman to be more specific.

Mr. BINGHAM. I will state to the gentleman that the new Librarian will be appointed about July 1, 1897.

Mr. SHAFROTH. At what amount does this conference report fix the salary of the Librarian?

Mr. BINGHAM. Five thousand dollars, as proposed in the amendment which the gentleman offered and which the House adopted.

I now yield a few moments to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY].

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, referring to the suggestion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. QUIGG], that the conference report waives the contention which has been made by the House in respect to the management of the Library, I wish to say that the bill as amended and now submitted by the conference committee gives the Joint Committee on the Library no supervision of the regulations to be made by the Librarian. It puts the Librarian in control of the Library force, charges him with the responsibility for the proper conduct of the office, and gives him sole power of appointment. We have yielded to the Senate in the matter of confirmation, and in my opinion the House conferees were fully justified in this action. The bill as now agreed upon requires the incoming President on or after the 1st of July next to appoint, subject to confirmation by the Senate, a Librarian, who shall conduct the operations of the Library in the magnificent new Library building. I want to say for myself—and I speak only for myself—that in my judgment the time has come, the exigency is somewhat pressing, when the national Library should be in charge of a management fully abreast with the progress of the times. A great many improvements have been made in respect to library management during the last forty years. There are now schools in this country whose sole function, as I am advised, is to equip gentlemen for the discharge of the duties of librarian. I believe that our great national Library should be systematically conducted, and in harmony with new and improved methods. I sincerely hope that the President-elect will select some one for Librarian solely with reference to his fitness to discharge the duties of that great office. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to say anything further at this time.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, if there are no further inquiries to be made, I move the adoption of the conference report.

The report of the conference committee was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. BINGHAM, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LACEY. I call for the regular order.

Mr. OWENS. I hope the gentleman will waive that for a matter which I am sure will not take more than a minute.

MARY L. TWEDDLE.

Mr. EVANS. I desire to enter a motion to reconsider the vote whereby a bill was laid on the table yesterday. The bill is No.——

Mr. TALBERT. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. EVANS. I hope the gentleman will wait until I state my proposition.

The SPEAKER. The question must first be stated, and then the point of order may come in.

Mr. EVANS. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill (H. R. 5793) granting a pension to Mary L. Tweddle was yesterday laid on the table, on motion of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TALBERT]. I was necessarily called out of the House a great many times yesterday; if I was in the Hall when adverse action was taken on this bill, I did not know it. I want now to enter the motion to reconsider. I do not wish to call it up at present.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, as I understand, the gentleman from Kentucky desires to enter a motion to reconsider the action of the House by which a bill was laid on the table. I respectfully suggest to the Chair that that motion does not seem to be in order except by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER (after a pause). The Chair will entertain the motion subject to the point of order presented by the gentleman from South Carolina. When the matter comes before the House, the Chair will pass upon the question of order. The Chair has a very strong impression that, under general parliamentary law, a motion to reconsider the vote laying a bill on the table would not be in order.

Mr. TALBERT. That was the point of order I desired to make——

The SPEAKER. Whether the practice of the House has changed the general rule is what the Chair desires to ascertain.

Mr. TALBERT. The point of order I proposed to raise was that just stated by the Chair, and also that the gentleman from Kentucky did not vote in the affirmative on the question; in fact, was not present.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is reserved, and all rights are saved.

COL. WILLIAM E. SIMMS.

Mr. OWENS. I ask unanimous consent——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY], as the Chair understands, calls for the regular order.

Mr. OWENS. The gentleman has agreed to withhold that call for a moment in order that I may make this request. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 10102) to remove the political disabilities of Col. William E. Simms. The beneficiary is an old man who has at best very few days to live, and he is anxious that before his death the ban of the country's disfavor should be removed from his record. He was a member of the Thirty-sixth and Thirty-seventh Congresses.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. TALBERT. I desire to ask whether this bill has been considered at a Friday night's session?

Mr. OWENS. It does not relate to pensions. It is a bill reported by the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MCCREARY of Kentucky. I hope the bill will pass. I know this gentleman.

Mr. EVANS. I will add my voice in the same petition.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill; which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That all political disabilities imposed by the third section of the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States be, and the same are hereby, removed from Col. William E. Simms.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed, two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

On motion of Mr. OWENS, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LACEY. Under the order of the House adopted on Monday last it was directed that immediately after the reading of the Journal to-day the arid-land bill should be called up and debated two hours, and then the vote taken. Now, I suppose that privileged matters being called up, such as conference reports, which are of high privilege, may take precedence over that order and at the same time not cut out any of the time allowed on the bill. But suppose that unanimous requests are allowed to come in, I would ask whether or not it would affect that arrangement as to time?

The SPEAKER. If the request for the regular order is withdrawn, the Chair will recognize gentlemen for unanimous consent.

Mr. LACEY. The question was whether it would come out of the time for debate.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it would.

Mr. LACEY. Then I demand the regular order.

RECONSIDERATION.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I wish to submit a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LOUD. I would like to ask if it would be in order now to move to reconsider and lay on the table the votes on the passage of the various pension bills which were considered on yesterday by the House, excepting the one referred to by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. EVANS]?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it would.

Mr. LOUD. I will submit that motion.

Mr. EVANS. That excepts the one to which I have referred?

Mr. LOUD. Yes.

The motion of Mr. LOUD, to reconsider the various votes by which the bills were passed was, on his motion, laid on the table.

RESERVOIR SITES.

Mr. LACEY. I now ask for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. As the Chair understands this, this bill is to be debated for two hours, and at the end of that time a vote is to be taken, and that a two-thirds vote will be required to pass the bill.

Mr. LACEY. And it is also subject to amendment.

The SPEAKER. And is subject to amendment.

Mr. LACEY. The two hours to begin from this time?

The SPEAKER. They begin now.

Mr. LACEY. I hope we may be able to reduce the time, and I shall occupy but a very short portion of it in explaining the provisions of the bill.

I ask that the bill be read.

The bill (H. R. 1934) was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all reservoir sites reserved or to be reserved by the Geological Survey be open to entry and use and occupation under the right-of-way act of March 3, 1891.

The amendments recommended by the Committee on the Public Lands were also read.

Mr. LACEY. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BELL] desires to offer a further amendment to this bill, and I yield to him long enough to have the amendment read for the information of the House.

Mr. BELL of Colorado. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The amendment will be read, and considered as a pending amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the end of said bill:

"And any State is hereby authorized to improve and occupy said reservoir to the same extent as an individual or private corporation, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe."

Mr. LACEY. I desire, Mr. Speaker, the attention of the House briefly to explain the scope and provisions of the bill. It was called up on Monday by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CATCHINGS], and proposed to be passed under a suspension of the rules, without sufficient time for debate. Objections were made to it, and it was passed over until to-day under the agreement for two hours' debate which has been specified.

In 1888 a clause was inserted in a general appropriation bill which was not considered by either the Committee on Arid Lands or the Committee on the Public Lands, in the following language, and I read now from page 527 of the Acts of the Fiftieth Congress, near the top of the page:

All the lands which may hereafter be designated or selected by such United States surveys for sites for reservoirs, ditches, or canals for irrigation purposes and all the lands made susceptible of irrigation by such reservoirs, ditches, or canals are from this time henceforth hereby reserved from sale as the property of the United States, and shall not be subject after the passage of this act to entry, settlement, or occupation until further provided by law.

That bill appropriated $100,000 for the purpose of setting apart and selecting certain sites for reservoirs for the impounding of water for the irrigation of the lands in the arid regions of the United States.

This proposition was considered by the Department as broad enough to practically withdraw from settlement, improvement, and occupation the arid lands of the country. Such was not the intention of the Committee on Appropriations, such was not the intention of the House, but this act, segregating the reservoir sites from occupation and settlement, drawn as it was, went further, and practically withdrew from settlement and improvement the arid region of the United States.

In 1891 a bill was passed, the "right-of-way bill," which had been prepared, I believe, by a commission of nine Senators. This bill was intended to take the place of the crude provisions of the act of 1888, and it was the manifest purpose and intention of that bill to provide that the very reservoir sites that had been theretofore set apart by the Geological Survey should be used and occupied under this right-of-way act of 1891. But the act of 1891 provided that reservoirs of the United States should not be affected by the bill.

I quote the following sections from that act:

SEC. 18. That the right of way through the public lands and reservations of the United States is hereby granted to any canal or ditch company formed for the purpose of irrigation and duly organized under the laws of any State or Territory, which shall have filed, or may hereafter file, with the Secretary of the Interior a copy of its articles of incorporation, and due proofs of its organization under the same, to the extent of the ground occupied by the water of the reservoir and of the canal and its laterals, and 50 feet on each side of the marginal limits thereof; also the right to take, from the public lands adjacent to the line of the canal or ditch, material, earth, and stone necessary for the construction of such canal or ditch: Provided, That no such right of way shall be so located as to interfere with the proper occupation by the Government of any such reservation, and all maps of location shall be subject to the approval of the Department of the Government having jurisdiction of such reservation, and the privilege herein granted shall not be construed to interfere with the control of water for irrigation and other purposes under authority of the respective States or Territories.

SEC. 19. That any canal or ditch company desiring to secure the benefits of this act shall, within twelve months after the location of 10 miles of its canal, if the same be upon surveyed lands, and if upon unsurveyed lands, within twelve months after the survey thereof by the United States, file with the register of the land office for the district where such land is located a map of its canal or ditch and reservoir; and upon the approval thereof by the Secretary of the Interior the same shall be noted upon the plats in said office, and thereafter all such lands over which such rights of way shall pass shall be disposed of subject to such right of way. Whenever any person or corporation, in the construction of any canal, ditch, or reservoir, injures or damages the possession of any settler on the public domain, the party committing such injury or damage shall be liable to the party injured for such injury or damage.

SEC. 20. That the provisions of this act shall apply to all canals, ditches, or reservoirs heretofore or hereafter constructed, whether constructed by corporations, individuals, or association of individuals, on the filing of the certificates and maps herein provided for. If such ditch, canal, or reservoir has been or shall be constructed by an individual or association of individuals, it shall be sufficient for such individual or association of individuals to file with the Secretary of the Interior, and with the register of the land office where said land is located, a map of the line of such canal, ditch, or reservoir as in a case of a corporation, with the name of the individual owner or owners thereof, together with the articles of association, if any there be. Plats heretofore filed shall have the benefits of this act from the date of their filing, as though filed under it: Provided, That if any section of said canal, or ditch shall not be completed within five years after the location of said section, the rights herein granted shall be forfeited as to any uncompleted section of said canal, ditch, or reservoir to the extent that the same is not completed at the date of the forfeiture.

It will be observed that the exception in the act did not say "reservoirs," but said "reservations." The Secretary of the Interior, in a decision rendered by him, held that this act, which was obviously for the purpose of utilizing these reservoir sites, expressly excepted them, and only allowed the occupation by reservoirs and canals on lands outside of the reservoir sites. The act of 1888 says that they shall be reserved "until further provided by law." In 1891 it was further provided, in the right-of-way act for canals and reservoirs, that the waters of the arid regions might be utilized for the purpose of improving and cultivating that country. I do not care now to discuss the question as to whether the decision of the Secretary was right or wrong.

The Commissioner of the General Land Office held precisely the other way. In his report in the case of the Blue Water Land and Irrigation Company, dated November 23, 1895, he says:

The act of August 30, 1890 (26 Stat., 371-391), repealed that portion of the act of October 2, 1888, withdrawing from settlement and entry the lands made susceptible of irrigation by the reservoirs selected under said act, but provided that the reservoirs located or selected shall remain segregated and reserved from entry or settlement, as provided by said act, until otherwise provided by law.

* * * * * * *

It was not contemplated that they should be reserved from use, but for use. The object of segregating and reserving them from settlement and entry was that they should be occupied as the sites for the construction of reservoirs for the purpose of reclaiming the lands susceptible of irrigation by the reservoirs so located.

The act of March 3, 1891, providing for the occupation of public lands for reservoirs, canals, and ditches for the purpose of irrigation, being general in its scope and containing no restriction as to the appropriation of sites theretofore located under the acts of 1888 and 1890, would seem to contain ample provisions for the utilization of such sites and hence fulfill the intention of Congress, to wit, that they should be reserved and used for the purpose of irrigation solely.

The very pith and marrow of the whole question involved in the bill now being considered by the House is contained in the statement that it was not contemplated that these sites should be "reserved from use, but for use." The act of 1888, as amended by the act of 1891, as construed by the Secretary of the Interior, reserves these reservoirs from use and not for use. A reservoir site without water is entirely useless. The water is the particular thing in question, and the waters are controlled by the States through which they flow, and not by the United States of America. These are surface waters, the waters of small streams not navigable, and the States control them.

Now, the act of 1888, as amended by the act of 1891, having set apart the most eligible reservoir sites all over the United States, and having been construed as reserving them from occupation, the Government is placed in the position of a dog in the manger. We will neither eat the hay ourselves nor let anybody else eat it. The result is that these sites, instead of being flooded with water and a source of plenty and wealth to the regions in which they are located and where they ought to be used, stand as arid as the surrounding country, and persons who desire, under the act of 1891, to impound water, must select some less eligible site outside of the boundary of the Government site, and there collect the water. In a number of instances this has already been done, and the water has been diverted from the Government reservoir and used for irrigation, at an increased expense, because the natural sites have been reserved and are not allowed to be used for the purpose for which the Almighty evidently intended them in the formation of that country.

It is proposed by the amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BELL] that the act of 1891 should be enlarged, so that not only corporations and individuals, under the right-of-way act, may select reservoir sites upon these lands, but that the States in which they are located may, by proper legislation and under suitable regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, likewise use them for the same purpose.

There are a very large number of these sites. They have been selected at great expense in every part of the arid regions of the United States, with the possible exception of Idaho, and the Government does not propose now, for a single moment, to consider this proposition of inserting an appropriation into any of the various appropriation acts for the purpose of utilizing these sites at the expense of the United States. For all of these years the Government has not utilized a single one of them. The present Director of the Geological Survey, I am informed, is heartily in favor of modifying the law, so that the sites selected may be utilized.

The provision that was inserted into the appropriation bill of 1888 had this beneficial effect: It prevented settlers from going in and locating homesteads in the controlling portions of land especially suited to the purpose of a reservoir; it prevented private individuals from taking possession for the purpose of selling out subsequently to water companies; the act prevented them from blocking the way of progress by withdrawing these tracts from settlement. To that extent the act of 1888 has proved beneficial and wise, and these sites are now where they can be occupied. Shall they be used? Shall water companies, shall private individuals, shall the States in which the sites are located be permitted now to go on and exercise their right under the act of 1891 and utilize these sites, or shall they be continued indefinitely as a blotch or a blight upon the Territories or the States in which they are located?

That, Mr. Speaker, is substantially all there is involved in this bill. The Commissioner of the General Land Office thought that no further legislation was necessary; that under the act of 1891 the people had full power to do what is proposed by this bill; but the Secretary of the Interior, upon appeal, has held differently; and whatever we may think about the act of 1891, it is now adjudicated that under that act these reservoir sites can not be utilized, and therefore this bill becomes necessary.

The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TERRY] controls an hour's time on the other side. I desire to reserve the balance of my time and yield to him now until I can hear what his views are on the question. Let me inquire how much time I have used.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. STEELE). The gentleman has used fourteen minutes, the Chair is informed.

Mr. LACEY. I shall use a few more moments now. I desire before we close this debate to yield a brief time to various members from the arid regions of the United States, where these reservoirs are situated, and give them an opportunity to express their views as to the propriety of this legislation. There is no uncertainty in the minds of the people out in that country. They want these reservoirs to be held back for use, and not from use. They have been held from use all these years. Now let them be used, and whether a corporation, an individual, or a State utilizes them, it makes no difference. I know it was contended in the debate on Monday that it was necessary to withhold these tracts of land from occupation under the right-of-way act, because otherwise a monopoly might arise and aggregations of capital might get the right to furnish water.

Mr. Speaker, there is no other way in this peculiar country by which these reservoirs can be utilized except by aggregation of capital. Some of them will require a million dollars to prepare them for impounding the water and digging the necessary irrigation canals. It is absolutely essential in the cultivation of an arid region that aggregation of capital should be effected. That can not be avoided. That is one of the circumstances by which that country is surrounded; and while we are holding back for fear some individual or corporation may make something, we are at the same time absolutely preventing the settlement of portions of that country by withdrawing from use the eligible places where water may be impounded. Remember, the United States does not control the water. It controls only the reservoir sites in which the water may be collected. The water is under the control of the States. If any of these corporations charge excessive or improper prices for the use of water, the States are permitted to regulate the rates charged. It is safely left, and may be well left, under the control of the local legislatures where the lands are situated.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, I fully agree with the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Public Lands that it was the intention that these reservoir sites should be reserved for use and occupation for irrigation purposes, and not to be reserved from use, as he has stated; but the trouble with the bill is that it does not stop at granting the right to use and occupy for irrigation purposes, but it states broadly that—

All reservoir sites reserved or to be reserved by the Geological Survey shall be open to entry.

Now, that word "entry" has a well-defined meaning in regard to the public lands of the United States; and under a possible construction that might be given under that by some such decisions as are sometimes rendered by the courts, a person or corporation might acquire the actual title to these lands.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. TERRY. Certainly.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Is not that clearly set forth in the right-of-way act of March 3, 1891, which expressly provides that it shall be used for irrigation?

Mr. TERRY. It does not necessarily follow. I should, perhaps, sitting as a judge, give it the construction that the gentleman contends for; but we know that there are strange decisions rendered, and I want to make the thing perfectly plain. "Subject to entry" might be construed as one distinct proposition, and the remainder of the clause, "and the use and occupation under the right-of-way act," as another. That construction might be put upon the act. That word "entry" should be stricken out. Now, sir, in order that the House may be more fully informed in regard to the pending measure, I will state that after demanding a second and the arrangement that was made for postponement until to-day, at the suggestion of the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, I communicated with Maj. J. W. Powell, formerly Chief of the Geological Survey and now Chief of the Bureau of Ethnology, and received from him the following communication, which I ask to be read in my time:

The Clerk read as follows:

SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION,
BUREAU OF AMERICAN ETHNOLOGY.
Washington, February 16, 1897.

SIR: In replying to your telephonic communication of yesterday, I beg to make the following statement: By the authority and direction of the United States statutes, the Geological Survey has been engaged in selecting and reserving reservoir sites for the purposes of irrigation, and many sites have already been established.

The reasons which led to their reservation are as follows: It was found by experience that, when reservoir sites were selected on the public land by a body of irrigators, it was possible for individuals to obtain title thereto from the United States, under some one of the provisions of the statutes, and then compel those desiring to use the reservoir sites for purposes of irrigation to purchase the title from themselves.

The United States, having made a large number of such reservations, has now given notice that such sites are dedicated to the purpose of irrigation, and can not be acquired by individuals, but are held for the use of the public; the manner under which such use can be acquired has never been established by law. Some uncertainty has existed as to the purpose of the reservation, as some persons suppose that they are reserved as sites upon which the Government is to construct reservoirs, while in fact the purpose, as clearly shown by the debates in Congress, as well as by the terms of the statute, was to reserve the sites for purposes of irrigation whenever irrigators should desire to utilize such sites by the construction of proper works themselves.

The sites already selected are many, and every one may easily be made of high speculative value by any person who should obtain title thereto, whenever any body of farmers should decide to increase the acreage of their irrigated lands, by constructing works. Single sites might thus become of a value of thousands of dollars, hundreds of thousands of dollars, or even of more than a million. Thus, by the entry of these lands under the general laws, it would be possible to assess the farmers in large sums preliminary to the enlargement of their irrigated acreage.

It would therefore seem not to be wise to throw these lands open to entry under the general provisions of the land laws, but still to hold them for the purpose originally designed. That these ends may be accomplished in a just and proper manner a general statute should be enacted providing the necessary regulations for their use.

The terms of the bill (H. R. 1984) to which you called my attention seem to be defective. The words in line 4 "be open to entry and use and occupation" would probably be construed by the Department as authorizing a sale. The act of March 3, 1891, and other statutes give ample authority for the use of these reservoirs, but not for their sale. That which is now needed is to provide a method of procedure for occupancy and use, which hitherto has not been fixed by statute or Executive order.

The Congress at this session has enacted a statute for another class of sites, which is eminently wise. I refer to the act approved January 13, 1897.

I would respectfully request permission to suggest a form for such a statute, following the terms of the act mentioned above, but modified to the conditions of the present case.

Inclosed please find the suggested form.

I am, with great respect, your obedient servant,

J. W. POWELL.

Hon. W. L. TERRY,
House of Representatives.

Mr. TERRY. Now, Mr. Speaker, I have here the suggested legislation. The Clerk will read the part that is typewritten, and I will state that I propose to offer this with an additional section that I have indicated in pencil. I propose to offer it as a substitute or by way of amendment to the pending measure. The Clerk will read at present the matter which is typewritten, which is the part that comes from Major Powell.

Mr. BARHAM. That is, the provision suggested by Major Powell.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That any person, company, or corporation engaged or desiring to engage in the irrigation of arid lands is hereby authorized to use any reservoir site heretofore or hereafter reserved under the laws of the United States for that purpose so long as such reservation is maintained for such purpose, and the Secretary of the Interior shall prescribe regulations for the occupancy of such reservoir sites.

"SEC. 2. That such person, company, or corporation shall file a declaratory statement in the United States land office in the district where the land is situated, which statement shall describe the land where such reservoir is to be constructed and specify the capacity of the reservoir.

"SEC. 3. That such person, company, or corporation shall have the same accurately surveyed and shall file in the United States land office in the district in which the reservoir is located a map or plat showing the location of such reservoir, which map or plat shall be transmitted by the register and receiver of said United States land office to the Secretary of the Interior, and the said person, company, or corporation shall have the right to use such reservoir site so long as it is maintained for the purpose of irrigation."

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order upon that.

Mr. TERRY. Now, I ask that the Clerk read the part written in pencil, which I propose to add to what has just been read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add the following:

"SEC. 4. In order to secure justice and prevent abuse, the United States reserve the power to regulate and to authorize States and Territories to regulate the rates and charges for use of water from any such reservoir site by any person, company, or corporation availing itself of the privileges of this act, and, in the absence of further legislation by Congress, the Secretary of the Interior shall exercise such power of regulation whenever he shall deem it necessary."

Mr. TERRY. I will add to that the following:

And no charge shall be made for water required for public use by the United States or by any State or Territory.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I think that that fourth section is a very important one to be added. I do not know what power of regulation has been reserved by the respective States and Territories, but now, while we have this power still in our hands, let us not part with it. Let us here and now, when we are making this concession, reserve to the Government of the United States, through their Congress, the power to prevent injustice and abuse by any of these corporations. As I stated the other day, I have no arid lands in my district or State, but years ago I spent a good deal of time in the great West, and there I heard numerous complaints on all sides from the ranchmen of the extortion and monopolistic oppression that was practiced by some of the water companies. I understand that since that time some of the States have taken the matter in hand and have passed laws to regulate it; but there is a certain point beyond which we might lose the power of regulation. If we make no such regulation now, it might be contended at some time in the future that, as we had given the right without reserving the right to regulate charges, the States could not interpose to regulate them. The States may, of course, control the water within their borders to a certain extent, but many of these reservoirs are of a peculiar kind, lakes which do not flow at all except when there has been a considerable melting of snow on the mountains, so that the entire body of water is found on the Government's land.

Now, if we give to companies or individuals the right to enter upon these reservoirs and do not make any reservation, it might become a question hereafter as to whether the States could control or regulate them.

Mr. MONDELL. Does the gentleman seriously believe that Congress has any right to regulate the price of water within the borders of a State?

Mr. TERRY. I do believe that when we grant a privilege or make a concession we have the right to prescribe the conditions on which the grant or concession is made, and I believe in attending to this matter right here and now.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman does not answer my question. I had no reference to the use of Government land. We all understand that Congress has the right to say how Government lands shall be sold, or given away, or utilized; but my question is this: Does the gentleman seriously believe that Congress has any more right to regulate the rates that shall be charged for water within the borders of a State than it has to regulate the rates that shall be charged for any other commodity within the State?

Mr. TERRY. I seriously believe, Mr. Speaker, that when we are making a concession such as is proposed to be made here, we have the right to prescribe the conditions upon which it shall be made. I believe we have the power to say that any company or corporation that shall avail itself of the concessions that we here grant shall do so upon certain terms. You have a right to sell a piece of land to a man, and when you do sell it you part with the title, but at the same time you have a right to make the sale upon the condition that no saloon shall ever be put upon it. Now, when the United States makes a concession like this, it has a right to fix the conditions, and I have no doubt whatever that Congress has a right to make the reservation that is contemplated in the proposed fourth section of the substitute.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. TERRY. Certainly.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Would not the regulation by the United States Government have a tendency to bring about a conflict between the State authorities and the General Government, and would not the individual irrigator probably fare better by having the rates established by local authorities instead of by Congress?

Mr. TERRY. That might be so; but, unfortunately, it sometimes happens that a State or a Territorial legislature will not do its duty in matters of this kind. It is sometimes surrounded by a lobby in the interest of these canal or irrigation companies, and will not enact proper legislation in the interest of the farmer, ranchman, and settler. They get concessions; the proper regulations are not made; and afterwards when the people cry out for State regulation they do not get it.

I want to say further to my friend from Colorado, that I am told they have good laws in his State now providing for the regulation of water rates.

Mr. SHAFROTH. We have.

Mr. TERRY. I do not know how recently they have been enacted.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Our laws put these matters under the control of the county commissioners.

Mr. TERRY. Wherever the fact is brought to the attention of the Secretary of the Interior that there are already sufficient regulations provided for the protection of the people, he will not step in. But if it should ever be found that a corrupt set of officials have refused to protect the people, let us have the remedy here to protect the people in the benefits of those reservoir sites. Whenever it is found that the States have done their duty, then, under the provision I proposed, the matter will be left in the hands of the State. Where it is found that the Territorial legislature has done its duty, this provision allows the control of the matter to remain in the hands of the local assembly. But until we have such an assurance, let us retain control of the matter here in our own hands.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call the attention of the House to a part of the letter which was read from the former Director of the Geological Survey. He says:

> Some uncertainty has existed as to the purpose of the reservations, as some persons suppose that they are reserved as sites upon which the Government is to erect reservoirs, while in fact the purpose, as clearly shown by the debates in Congress, as well as by the terms of the statutes, was to reserve the sites for purposes of irrigation whenever irrigators should desire to utilize such sites by the construction of proper works themselves.

So that, according to the statement of the Director himself, the purpose of this law was not to withhold these sites from use and to reserve them to the Government——

Mr. TERRY. I conceded that in the beginning of my statement.

Mr. LACEY. But for irrigators; and the act of 1891 limits the methods by which irrigators shall use the public lands adapted to this purpose. The only question now is whether the most eligible part of these sites shall be thus utilized or reserved.

Mr. BARHAM. Let me ask whether there is any objection to striking out the word "entry" where it occurs in this bill?

Mr. LACEY. None whatever.

Mr. BARHAM. Then I move to strike out that word.

Mr. LACEY. That motion perhaps would not be in order at this time; but I will say to the gentleman that I think the word "entry" is unnecessary. The words "use and occupation" are substantially sufficient. I believe the word "entry" was inserted for the purpose of giving title to so much of the lands as may be used for a canal; but so far as it concerns the use of the lands for canal and railway purposes, the language might just as well be "use and occupation" without the word "entry," and without giving any other title than the usufructory title.

Mr. BARHAM. At the proper time I desire to move that amendment.

Mr. LACEY. So far as I am concerned, I shall be glad to have the amendment agreed to.

I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BELL].

Mr. BELL of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, the amendment which I have offered provides that the States shall also have the right, if they see fit, to improve these reservoirs. My reason for proposing this provision is that there is now pending before the legislature of the State of Colorado a bill to appropriate $50,000 for the purpose of improving Twin Lake Reservoir, at the head of the Arkansas River, and a bill is now pending in this House, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, permitting the State of Colorado to make that improvement. If the State of Colorado be given that right in this bill—and the chairman of the committee, as well as all other members interested, appears to agree to it—it will save the necessity for the passage of any private bill on the subject.

Replying to our friend from Arkansas, I want to say that he evidently does not understand irrigation in the arid region. All that is reserved in the arid region is some great basins nine or ten thousand feet above the sea level. The land there is such as nobody can occupy. It is land that no man would want for any other purpose whatever. That land was first reserved for the purpose of storing water, to increase the flow so that the Government lands lying on the streams below might be made valuable and might be taken by citizens who would purchase them from the United States. It was thought at the time by a great many people that the Government would make the improvement. It was thought also that the State might improve. After a time a commission was appointed by the Senate consisting of nine Senators, who formulated and brought before Congress the bill which now constitutes what is known as the act of 1891. It was understood by everybody that the act of 1891 was for the purpose of making these reservoirs subject to occupancy. When application was made for occupancy, the Commissioner of the Land Office decided that they were subject to occupancy.

The matter went from the Commissioner of the Land Office to Secretary Smith, who, as I understand, after very short consideration and without giving any reason whatever, concluded that the object of Congress was to set these reservations apart for improvement by the Government, or to cede them to the State when the lands were ceded to the State, as he advocated at the time the decision on the subject was made. The Assistant Commissioner of the Land Office told me to-day, and he has told me repeatedly, that he believes that this application of the law of 1891 is just as this bill will make it, and would be the best thing that could be done, and it ought to pass. He told me that he did not believe that the decision of the Secretary would be followed; that the reason that these reservoir sites were set apart was for the purpose of increasing the flow of the rivers in the arid regions, and by that means it would make the Government lands valuable, and make them desirable for entry, and the Government can have the lands occupied.

The act was unquestionably passed, Mr. Speaker, for that purpose. But the Assistant Commissioner told me this morning that they had the anomaly now of a man in the West going by the side of one of these great natural reservoir sites that had been set apart by the Government for the purpose I have named, and while the Government said to him, "You shall not enter, according to this decision, yet under the act you can go on the public lands by the side of one of these reservoir sites and locate another and erect your reservoir there." And he said that a peculiar condition existed: Men in the arid regions would go and take a second reservoir site and improve it, and divert the water into the secondary reservoir and leave that which was reserved for the Government unoccupied and no water to fill it. After it had been diverted to the other reservoir, that was of but little use generally, it would leave the lands impossible of improvement, and the Assistant Commissioner of the Land Office has insisted with me and other members numerous times that this bill ought to be pressed to a speedy passage. I had individual bills introduced upon the subject. I understand Senator TELLER and, I think, all the other Senators from the arid regions, as well as the Representatives from that part of the country, favor the bill. I know of no objection whatever to it.

Now, our friend on the other side talks of "a monopoly." In the State of Colorado, and in every other State in the Union, I suppose, as far as these decisions have gone, the universal rulings of the courts are that no individual owns the water. It is the State alone that owns and controls the water, under the constitution of our States; and I suppose that is true under the laws of every State. In Colorado the county commissioners in all of the counties fix the maximum rate that shall be charged for the use of the water on the land. Every four years the commissioners from every county in the State fix the rate of charges that the ditch companies shall impose upon the farmers for the use of water, and this rate is established for the next three or four years, as the case may be. The ditch companies are absolutely at the mercy of the county commissioners of the State. The county commissioners—two out of three of them in my county are farmers—two out of three of them have the right to say what the water rate shall be in every canal in Montrose County; and the same power exists in every county of the State. And there is no danger where the State officers control the water. The reservoir is a mere channel.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LACEY. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Arizona.

Mr. MURPHY of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, as a representative of a portion of the arid regions of the West, I desire to add something from my own personal experience upon the pending question, and in regard to the legislation now sought to be had by this bill.

The act of October 2, 1888, required the reservation from entry of the reservoir sites and canal sites located by the Geological Survey, as well as all lands under these reservoir sites susceptible of irrigation. I believe the purpose of the promoters of that legislation was to secure continuous appropriations by Congress to develop and construct the reservoirs and canal sites, and make them useful to the people inhabiting that region.

But it was impracticable from the moment it was first inaugurated. In 1889 or 1890, I do not now remember which, the governor of Utah, the governor of New Mexico, and I were invited to consult with Major Powell, of the United States Geological Survey, on this very subject. He urged at that time the desirability of promoting this legislation and leaving these sites for the reservoirs free from entry until appropriations could be made by Congress or some general provision enacted for the construction of the reservoirs under the charge of the Geological Survey. I contended against the proposition at the time. The impracticability of it was so manifest that even then, if we could have gotten money from Congress to carry into execution the suggestion, it would have been at an expenditure on the part of Congress in the way of appropriations that would have exceeded even the cost of improvements of our rivers and harbors in this country.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. MURPHY] allow me a question?

Mr. MURPHY of Arizona. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman states that the former Director of the Geological Survey, who was the Director of the Geological Survey at the time these laws were passed and these reservations set apart, was in favor of direct appropriations by the General Government for the building of these reservoirs.

Mr. MURPHY of Arizona. Yes, he solicited the cooperation of myself, the governor of Utah, and the governor of New Mexico upon that very subject. The then Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Noble, was in favor of that proposition. The Assistant Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Chandler, opposed it, and said to me that it would retard the growth of that country for a hundred years, and a protest went up from the entire West to such a degree that the act of 1891 resulted. That was intended to cure the defects in the former act, and I believe it did cure them. The Commissioner of the General Land Office so believes, but the Secretary of the Interior has held that that law is not sufficiently curative.

Now we simply come here asking for a completion of the proposed relief. We simply ask that these reservoir sites may be occupied and used, and I am perfectly willing that the word "entry" should be stricken out; but there is no reason or force in the argument that because the Geological Survey has surveyed reservoir sites at great expense therefore they can not be made available and used. You might just as well say that because the Geological Survey has marked out great mineral regions and defined them, and has told what is contained therein, no citizen can enter them under the mineral-land laws and develop them. The Geological Survey performed a great service for that country. Although these reservoir sites were well known, a great service was performed in surveying and defining them; and now that they have been located, the people should have a right to use them. Let any amendment be made in this pending bill which relieves the ambiguity of the act of 1891. Carry out its intent, and that is all that is required at this time, in my judgment.

Mr. LACEY. I yield to the Delegate from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON].

Mr. CATRON. Mr. Speaker, during the last session of this Congress a bill was reported by the Committee on Territories recommending the admission of the Territory of New Mexico into the Union as a State. A minority of the committee made a report expressing their views, in which they stated that the Territory of New Mexico had not advanced as rapidly as many of the Western States had advanced, and for that reason that Territory ought not to be admitted into the Union as a State. It is true that we have probably not advanced in late years as fast as some of the other Territories, or as some of the new States. But it is true, also, that in the Territory of New Mexico we have advanced much more rapidly during the time that we have been under the control of the Federal Government than the old States have advanced. The increase in population has been greater than the average increase throughout the United States in the last decade. The increase in wealth has been ten times greater than the average increase throughout the United States.

But why are we held back? Why have we not advanced? It has been because of certain action on the part of the General Government. One of the reasons was the prohibition of the investment of alien capital in the Territories under the provisions of the act of 1887. Another one was the prohibition, by construction of the Departments of the Government, of the right of the Territories to locate and use these reservoir sites. We need capital in the Territories for the express purpose of developing these reservoirs and our irrigation system. The Government does not develop the public domain. It is the individual who does that. Individuals are usually poor, and they have to invite people from outside to come and help develop the resources of the Western country. In the Territory of New Mexico we have an area greater than the area of the State of Illinois which can be reduced to cultivation, provided we have irrigation to supplement it.

Now, how are we to get that? It can only be done by means of ditches and reservoirs. We have plenty of water, but the water goes down the streams. It should be taken upon the table-lands, so that it can be spread throughout this extensive territory which is susceptible of cultivation. If you do not give us an act like this, by means of which we can invite capital to come there, locate these reservoirs and ditches, and get people to come and assist us, you can never develop that entire region. You can never develop one-fourth of it for a great many years. But give us the right to use these reservoir sites and to take the water from them, to control them according to our own laws and in our own way; give us the right to invite capital there, and we will develop a Territory which will advance ten times faster than we have advanced before and rival the most prosperous of the Eastern States.

Mr. TERRY. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] such time as he desires.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I think a very few minutes will suffice for me to say what I desire so say. By accident I had some familiarity, as I explained a day or two ago, with the selection or segregating of these reservoir sites. It originated in a Senate amendment on an appropriation bill. After some kicking and all the consultation that we could get, the House finally adopted the Senate amendment. As explained the other day, a large amount of money—I think, if run down, probably in the neighborhood of a million dollars—was expended by the Government in surveying and platting these reservoir sites.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. MONDELL. I can only find two appropriations, aggregating $350,000.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman may be right about that; but, with the use of the force in that great work, in addition to that—geologists, topographers, and many other things. But I will not stop to consider that question, because it is not at all important. Now, as the able chairman of the Committee on Public Lands explained, there came a friction not only by this act, but by a construction of it which substantially took not only the reservoir sites, but all the arid lands that people practically desired to obtain title to out of the market, and in the Fifty-first Congress there came an effort, upon an appropriation bill, to absolutely repeal that law. There was a long contest about it, led by the now Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER], on the one hand, and other members of the House, and, if I recollect right, this right-of-way bill went upon the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes, it did; in 1890.

Mr. CANNON. That is my recollection of it; and the framing of that bill as it finally went upon the sundry civil bill was not particularly my work, although I was chairman of the Committee on Appropriations at that time and chairman of the conference committee, but it was principally the suggestion of the Committee on Public Lands, led by my late colleague [Mr. Payson] and a similar committee, I think upon Public Lands, of the Senate.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will state to the gentleman that the bill was drawn by Senator Plumb, who was upon the Select Committee of the Senate for the Reclamation of the Arid Lands.

Mr. CANNON. Yes; but it was submitted, so far as the House conferees were concerned, to members of the Committee on Public Lands in the House. Unfortunately, I have not much knowledge of the condition of the country in the arid region, nor have I much knowledge of the public land system, and therefore I do not speak with much confidence, especially in the presence of gentlemen who represent the various Territories and States in which the arid lands are situated; still I have just enough knowledge from the former contest to understand that the land is nothing, but the water is everything; that if all your water were utilized economically probably 80 or 90 per cent of your lands would remain without water and practically worthless except as they make a part of the earth's surface.

Mr. SHAFROTH. About 80 per cent, I should think.

Mr. CANNON. About 80 per cent, as the gentleman from Colorado says, and he is much more familiar with that subject than I am. With my knowledge I know that there are questions arising—for instance, the use of waters arising in the boundaries of one State and running into another, the use of water for irrigation in Colorado liberally used near the head waters of the stream, depriving the people below of its use; and I can imagine that a great many difficult questions will arise between inhabitants and citizens of one State in the various States and citizens of different States in the future, but the future will have to take care of itself.

Now, from these circumstances I have felt a great interest touching this matter, and I feel now that we ought to be careful not in any way to cripple the development of those States having arid regions on the one hand, and upon the other to enable anybody to get the whip hand of their fellow-citizens and the unnumbered millions yet unborn. That is the only reason why I challenged this bill the other day. One expression, it is agreed, shall be stricken out of the bill—the word "entry;" so that it is "the use and occupation only of these reservoir sites" that is to be obtained.

Now, I suggest, and have just suggested to the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, that another amendment might go upon this bill with great profit. I understand in most of the States—I am told all by some; and the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TERRY] thinks not all—that the prices of the water, the water rates, are regulated by the respective States and Territories. But let that be as it may, when we part permanently, so far as the United States is concerned, with the use and occupation of these great reservoir sites to the people of the respective States, I want to part with them under conditions that will give the greatest good to the greatest number. Therefore I shall offer the following amendment at the close of this bill:

Provided, That the charges for water coming in whole or part from reservoir sites used and occupied under the provisions of this act shall always be subject to the control of the respective States and Territories in which such reservoirs are in whole or part situate.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I think that is satisfactory.

Mr. LACEY. In view of the language used in the right-of-way act of March, 1891, I do not think that this language is necessary, because the control of the State is expressly preserved. But I do not care to have any question left open on this subject; and, so far as I am concerned, I would be glad to have the amendment adopted. I do not think it necessary, but would accept it.

Mr. TERRY. After the word "control" I wish the gentleman would insert the words "and regulation."

Mr. CANNON. What is the purpose of that?

Mr. TERRY. So as to have the control and regulation of the charges in the State.

Mr. CANNON. I will read it again.

Provided, That the charges for water coming in whole or part from reservoir sites used and occupied under the provisions of this act shall always be subject to the control—

Mr. TERRY. Right after the word "control" put in the words "and regulation."

Mr. CANNON. All right, then—control and regulation of the respective States and Territories in which such reservoirs are in whole or part situate.

Now, if my friend feels free to accept that amendment, so far as I am concerned, I shall be content.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to have the question of agreeing to that amendment submitted to the House.

Mr. TERRY. I hope unanimous consent will be given that that amendment be submitted.

Mr. SHAFROTH. As an amendment to the original bill or to the substitute?

Mr. LACEY. As an addition to the original bill.

Mr. COX. If I understand this correctly, if this bill is passed it will take the Government entirely out of this enterprise of the irrigation of these arid lands, and will turn it over to individuals or corporations.

Mr. LACEY. No. The Government may still act as to the reservations not taken, but this bill enables parties desiring to irrigate to utilize the reservoirs that have been selected and reserved. They may utilize none of them or they may utilize all, but if any remain, they may be utilized by the Government.

Mr. COX. Well, if they do utilize these reservoirs, the water will be under the control of Congress as to the charges that shall be made.

Mr. LACEY. No; the water does not belong to the Government. The reservoirs in which the water is stored belong to the Government, but the water belongs to the States and will be controlled by them. The amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] relieves this measure from all possible doubt upon that subject. I think there could be no doubt anyhow, but this amendment takes away the possibility of any question being raised as to the right of the States and Territories to regulate and control the management and the price of the water. I ask the Chair to submit the question on the amendment.

The SPEAKER. Unanimous consent is asked to have the amendment agreed to which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk again read the amendment of Mr. CANNON as printed above; and it was unanimously adopted.

Mr. LACEY. Now, Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH].

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Speaker, I want to address my remarks principally to the proposition presented by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TERRY] as a substitute for the pending bill. That proposition has in view the same purpose that I think animates every member of this House in relation to this subject, which is to provide for the control of the waters in the arid region so that irrigators shall not be charged higher rates than are fair and just. But the difficulty with the gentleman's substitute is that it comes here without the sanction of any committee, without thorough examination by any member of a committee, and consequently it is immature legislation. That part of it which seeks to have the United States Government control these waters is, it seems to me, in violation of the Constitution of the United States. I do not believe that the United States has the power to control these waters. Such power was never delegated by the States, and the United States has never attempted to exercise the same. The constitution of the State of Colorado, under which it was admitted into the Union, provides that the waters shall remain the property of the State. The amendment which has been proposed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], and adopted, really serves no purpose, because it merely reenacts the existing law. It would be the law even if the act of 1891 were not in existence. The waters belong to the States. The United States Government has always recognized that, and the States have enacted legislation directly controlling the use of the waters. In my own State the county commissioners of each county——

Mr. TERRY. Suppose the State of Colorado, which has control of the waters, should grant a concession to a company, or should enter into a contract with a company or corporation to construct dams and control all the irrigating lands, could the State, after having done that, still exercise the right to compel the corporation to reduce its charges if they were unreasonable?

Mr. SHAFROTH. That depends upon the constitution of the State, and the constitution of Colorado expressly says that it can not divest itself of such rights; consequently such an act would be invalid.

Mr. TERRY. I know you have a very good constitution in your State, but all the constitutions are not so good.

Mr. BOATNER. Is there a State in the Union whose constitution deprives the State legislature of the right to regulate the charges that shall be made for water, light, and other public conveniences by any public corporation?

Mr. TERRY. When I get time to read the constitutions of all the States, I shall be in a position to answer that question. [Laughter.]

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will state to the gentleman that the people of the arid States are more zealous for the protection of the public and of the farmer who desires to irrigate his land than Congress could possibly be. There is a continual attempt in the State legislatures to make the laws more stringent and to secure more concessions for the people. As it is now, there is ample provision in our State constitution and laws for the protection of the people. The county commissioners fix the price of water for irrigation purposes, and according to law they can fix it so low that there will be hardly any compensation to the corporation.

Mr. BARHAM. I doubt that.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The county commissioners try to fix a reasonable rate, such as will give a fair return on the investment, as they should do.

Mr. BAILEY. The constitution of Colorado, as I understand, provides that private property shall not be "taken, damaged, or destroyed" without just compensation. Now, under those words the holding is uniform that you can not condemn either the property or the use of the property without just compensation. The gentleman's own supreme court has so held.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The constitution of Colorado recognizes no private ownership in water—none whatever.

Mr. BARHAM. The Supreme Court of the United States has also held that you can not use private property without just compensation.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That is true; but that does not apply here.

Mr. BAILEY. Does the gentleman from Colorado state that the law of his State does not recognize any private property in water, or in a dam, for instance?

Mr. SHAFROTH. It does not recognize any private ownership in water. It says that the water shall always belong to the public.

Mr. BAILEY. Then the gentleman is very probably right.

Mr. BARHAM. But is not the use of water recognized as subject to reasonable control or regulation?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I think so.

Mr. BARHAM. Of course it is.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Our legislature has so regarded it, and the result is there have been created tribunals among the people to decide the rates, who understand the needs of the public, who know how much flow of water is required, and how much ought to be paid for the use of the water.

Mr. BOATNER. Does the gentleman state that under the constitution of Colorado the legislature might incorporate a company, giving it authority to collect water and sell it, and then by legislative enactment fix the price of the water so low as not to reimburse the expense of furnishing the water?

Mr. SHAFROTH. We do not recognize a sale of water. We regard these corporations that undertake to distribute the water as mere public carriers; that is absolutely all; they do not control or own or sell a drop of water.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Colorado has expired.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I should like a little more time.

Mr. LACEY. I yield to the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Now, Mr. Speaker, the difficulty with the provision which the gentleman from Arkansas has presented here as a substitute is that it is not mature legislation.

The object of the gentleman is evidently the same as ours; but what construction would be placed upon the provisions which he offers no one can tell. We have an act, passed March 3, 1891, which describes the manner in which persons or corporations may locate upon a reservoir site for irrigation purposes. It describes the methods to be pursued. A map is to be filed showing the line of high-water mark.

Mr. TERRY. Let me state to the gentleman right there, with his permission, the defect in the act of 1891. That act provides that this map of location, and so forth, may be filed within twelve months after the location of 10 miles of the canal. Under this provision, a corporation that has already gone there and obtained control of the reservation may, within twelve months afterwards, file its map. I propose that the map shall be filed with the Secretary of the Interior as a preliminary step.

Mr. SHAFROTH. As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman does not seem to know the condition of the laws out in that country. There is another map that must be filed with the State authorities. The State controls the waters of these reservoirs and streams. That map must be filed——

Mr. TERRY. The gentleman is referring to the State law.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes, sir.

Mr. TERRY. I thought the gentleman referred a while ago to the act of Congress of 1891.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I was then referring to the law of 1891.

Mr. TERRY. And I say that act of 1891 makes the provision to which I have called attention.

Mr. SHAFROTH. But there can be no serious objection to the act of 1891 even on this ground. There is always a race for the occupancy of these reservoirs if they are very desirable, and the person who gets his map first on file has the preference over others. He is not going to wait an entire year. Yet it may be necessary, in order that the surveys may be made, that he wait considerable time. A great many of these sites are located in the mountains where the snow in winter is so deep as to prevent a survey until summer. It seems to me that if there is a defect in the provision referred to it should be amended; but here is a law, passed in 1891, that has received the construction of the Interior Department from that time to this in a number of decisions.

Mr. LACEY. Allow me to ask whether the requirement that the map be filed within twelve months, as provided in the act of 1891, has been found inconvenient? Has any difficulty arisen in the practical operation of the law?

Mr. SHAFROTH. None that I have ever heard of. But, as I was saying, the act of 1891 has received the construction of the Interior Department—not in one decision, but, I have no doubt, in at least 100 decisions. Under those decisions a settled practice has grown up. There are certain rules and regulations which have been prescribed by the Interior Department. Therefore, if we should now undertake to enact hasty legislation—a measure brought in here as a substitute which has not received the sanction of any committee—it would, it seems to me, be dangerous, although its object may be good. I have no doubt the purpose of the gentleman from Arkansas is as good in respect to this matter as ours. He is doubtless trying to get the very best legislation possible for the protection of the users of the water. But, Mr. Speaker, the bill we have introduced here is short. It refers to the act of 1891. It expressly puts the use and occupation of these reservoirs directly under the act of 1891, which act preserves the use of these waters for irrigation purposes. A mode of procedure is prescribed, and I see no reason why we should now enact legislation which has not been matured or has not received the sanction of a committee of this House.

Upon the general question I wish to say that these sites are of much moment to the people of the arid region. There are 138 such sites, 35 of which are in Colorado, 23 in California, 30 in Montana, 19 in New Mexico, and 13 in Utah. It is estimated that these reservoirs will hold sufficient water to irrigate as much more land as there is now under irrigation. The withholding of these sites from use by the Government is greatly retarding development of agriculture in the West. Either the Government should construct the dams necessary to form these reservoirs, or it should permit the States and the inhabitants thereof to do so. There is no indication that Congress will appropriate money for such purpose, and therefore it should permit others to undertake the work. There is no danger of a monopoly of the waters, as the laws of the State afford ample protection to the public. This measure receives the approval of the Representatives from every arid State, and it should receive the indorsement of this Congress.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. STEELE). The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LACEY. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. Speaker, I wish to state how this bill came to be introduced into the House. When I came to Congress, being a new member, I did not know exactly how to get at the reservoir business, and I called upon the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], in whom I had the greatest confidence and faith, and asked him with reference to the matter. He told me that some legislation had been had in connection with it, and that some action had also been taken by the Geological Survey with regard to the matter, and that if I would inquire there I would receive all of the information that was available upon the subject. I did so and found what had been done, and after a talk with them they wrote the bill and handed it to me, stating that they thought it would cover the case I had in view, and it was at their suggestion and recommendation that I introduced the bill.

Now, it seems to me that it covers the case entirely. The amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], in my judgment, is unnecessary, because the statute already provides for it; but I do not object to the incorporation of the amendment. It can do no harm. The amendment of my colleague from California [Mr. BARHAM] is one that is perhaps wise, and I make no objection to that.

I want to say to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TERRY], who fears damaging results from the proposed legislation, that in my State the constitution, in reference to the use of water, reads as follows:

> Section 1, article 14. The use of all water now appropriated or that may hereafter be appropriated for sale, rental, or distribution is hereby declared to be for public use and subject to the regulation and control of the State in the manner to be prescribed by law.

So it seems that there is no danger in my State of a monopoly being created in the use of water throughout the arid portions of the State.

This question has been well spoken of by gentlemen representing the arid regions, and also well characterized by the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands as in effect that the United States is now acting the part of the dog in the manger—it will not use the reservoir sites itself and allows nobody else to do so. They ought to be used, Mr. Speaker; there is no question about that.

There are millions upon millions of acres of land that can be cultivated and used in the United States, and in California alone, if we can only get water upon it, and the only way to get water upon it is to construct and use the reservoirs during the proper season of the year; and the only way to get the reservoirs is to get those which the Government now claims. I hope the bill will pass, and pass by a large majority, and permit us to get legislation at this session, and thus be able to benefit our State and the other arid regions of the country.

Mr. SHAFROTH. If my friend will allow an interruption, when he speaks of the quantity of arid lands, if he will permit me, I wish to say that the Secretary of the Interior estimates that with 138 reservoirs that are now held by the United States, if opened for the use of the public, they would reclaim over 3,000,000 acres of land.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Well, I said millions and millions of acres. I was familiar with the figures; but the figures in my State would exceed that. The land in California alone that can be utilized, if these reservoir sites are opened and water is collected upon them for the use of the land, will bring into cultivation in that State as many acres of land as the gentleman mentions.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of the time to the chairman of the committee, so that some other member from the arid States can be heard upon this important question.

Mr. LACEY. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. BARHAM].

Mr. BARHAM. I only wish to offer an amendment, Mr. Speaker, which I have already sent to the desk.

Mr. LACEY. I ask the attention of the gentleman from Arkansas to the reading of the amendment, which may obviate the difficulty which he thinks exists in reference to the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out in line 4, page 1, after the word "to," the words "entry and;" so that it will read:

"That all reservoir sites reserved, or to be reserved, by the Geological Survey, be open to use and occupation," etc.

Mr. LACEY. That will relieve it of every possible objection that has been urged by the gentleman from Arkansas, and that was suggested by Major Powell, as to the use of the word "entry." Inasmuch as it would necessarily be an entry under the act of 1891, it would be so limited. But in view of the fact that a suggestion has been made here as to the use of the word, the gentleman from California now moves to strike it out.

Mr. TERRY. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. LACEY. I ask unanimous consent that it may be considered as adopted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the adoption of the amendment?

There was no objection.

Mr. LACEY. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the vital question in connection with the discussion of this bill is whether or not this nation, through Congressional action in the future, proposes to irrigate and reclaim the arid lands of the West, or whether or not that irrigation and reclamation shall be left to the people of the respective States and Territories. There can be no question in the mind of anyone who has followed this question of irrigation, and the discussion at the time the legislation was passed which brought about the segregation of these reservoir areas, that there was a strong sentiment at that time in Congress in favor of governmental irrigation.

Under the provisions of the original act vast areas were segregated, and these areas still remain segregated from the public domain, some five or seven years after their segregation. Now the question is whether Congress proposes to build these reservoirs and irrigate these areas, or whether it is proposed to allow individual capital, under control of the States, to go in and use and occupy these reservoir sites and develop the country. It seems to me that there should be no disposition on the part of Congress to pursue a dog-in-the-manger policy in this matter, but that, as there is unquestionably a strong sentiment against governmental control or governmental aid in the building of these works, these reservoir sites should be turned over to the people of the respective States.

There can be no such thing as monopoly in matters of this kind. In the first instance, any person wishing to use these reservoirs under the right-of-way act must obtain from the State authority to impound the water of the streams from which it is proposed to bring these waters for irrigation. And under the constitution and laws of every State and Territory in the arid region the waters thus diverted for purposes of irrigation are absolutely under the control of the State. The State legislature either directly controls the price, or the price is controlled by the boards of county commissioners under provisions of State legislation.

Mr. Speaker, in this connection, I wish to present a resolution of the Fourth legislature of the State of Wyoming, relating to State ownership of public lands. It is as follows:

STATE OF WYOMING, Office of the Secretary of State.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, State of Wyoming, ss:

I, Charles W. Burdick, secretary of state of the State of Wyoming, do hereby certify that the annexed is a full, true, and correct copy of enrolled joint resolution No. 1, senate, State of Wyoming, passed by the Fourth legislature of the State of Wyoming.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State of Wyoming.

Done at Cheyenne, the capital, this 11th day of February, A. D. 1897.

[SEAL.] CHARLES W. BURDICK,
Secretary of State.

FOURTH LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF WYOMING.

[Enrolled joint resolution No. 1. Senate. State of Wyoming.]

Joint resolution and memorial to the Congress of the United States, praying for the ceding of all unoccupied public lands within the State of Wyoming to the control of the State.

Your memorialists, the Fourth legislature of the State of Wyoming, would most respectfully represent:

That all of the lands within the boundaries of the State of Wyoming are what are known as "arid" lands; the reclamation and settlement of these lands must be accomplished under different conditions from those confronting the settler in the humid portions of this country; that none of the lands now the property of the State can be sold for less than $10 per acre, which is the minimum price allowed by the terms of the act of admission and the State constitution, thus causing unfair competition with United States lands, which are sold to settlers under the provisions of the several acts of Congress at prices ranging from 50 cents to $2.50 per acre.

Experience has demonstrated that the present land system is not suited to the conditions which prevail in this State, and as a result many obstacles are interposed to the development of the country.

The reclamation of the agricultural lands imposes upon the settler and upon the State labor and expense not incurred in the humid portions of the country; ditches must be constructed and the lands prepared for the application of water before there is any return to the farmer; in addition to this great labor and expense, it is necessary for the State to exercise a supervision over them, in order that just distribution of water may be made to those entitled to it.

Thus far the State has borne the entire expense of the investigation of its agricultural resources and the supervision of the public waters.

The efficiency of this work has been greatly impaired by reason of the inability of the State to assist in any way in the reclamation and settlement of the desirable lands or to restrict the diversion of water on the less desirable.

The importance of the pastoral interests of this State makes it desirable that provision be made for the utilization of the grazing land in connection with the contiguous irrigable areas. These grazing lands comprise the greater part of territorial extent.

None of the present land laws make adequate provision for securing possession or management of these lands. In our judgment it is impossible for Congress to pass a general law which will operate with equal justice and success on the arid belt as a whole. Conditions differ in different sections of the United States, and the people of each section are best calculated to determine the system best suited to their needs. We believe that by giving to the State full control over all classes of land the best results can be obtained.

If the State controlled the lands, it would be possible to connect water rights with land titles of all irrigable lands. That this is desirable is admitted by all familiar with the subject.

The results already achieved are a sufficient guaranty of what can be accomplished under more favorable conditions. Even with the imperfect means at hand, the value of lands has not only been enhanced, but their productive capacity has been correspondingly augmented. Such results are of interest and value to the whole nation, and in our opinion entitle the State to generous recognition.

The water laws of this State have been highly recommended. The State constitution and statutes contain provisions requiring the inauguration of the most systematic and complete supervision of its public waters yet undertaken by any Commonwealth in this country.

It is only, however, by uniting the control of both water and land under one authority that our irrigation system can have the fullest measure of stability and success.

We believe that the control of this subject can wisely and safely be intrusted to the State, since the practical knowledge is almost wholly confined to those engaged in the work. By endowing the State with means and placing upon it the responsibility for the development of our resources, a great impulse will be given to the diffusion of intelligence on the subject and to local pride in the success of the undertaking. It will put the solution of this problem in the hands of the people best informed as to its details and most interested in its success.

Because of the facts hereinbefore detailed, your memorialists respectfully pray that Congress will, by suitable legislation, grant to the State of Wyoming the unoccupied and unappropriated public lands within said State.

Resolved, That the secretary of state be, and he is hereby, respectfully requested, on the approval of this memorial, to forward a duly authenticated copy thereof to the Senators and Representative in Congress from this State, in order that the same may be brought to the attention of Congress.

GEORGE E. ABBOTT,
President of the Senate.
A. D. KELLEY,
Speaker of the House.

Approved February 8, A. D. 1897.

WM. A. RICHARDS, Governor.

I believe that the sentiment of the nation favors in the near future such legislation as will turn over the control not only of these reservoir sites, but of all the public lands within the arid-land States and Territories to the States and Territories. There is not in the State which I have the honor to represent a single one of these reservoir sites; but they have been selected in all the States surrounding us. We have natural reservoir sites as good as many of those which have been selected by the Geological Survey. At the present time the citizens of my State can occupy any of these reservoir sites under the right-of-way act. That being the case, should the citizens of other States, who considered that they were fortunate in having these surveys made at the time they were made, be placed in the position that they can not occupy these reservoir sites under the same laws and provisions as they can be used and occupied by private individuals and corporations in my State?

As to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], while there is no particular objection to it, there is certainly no reason for it, because the States and Territories absolutely control the waters within their borders. The act of Congress setting up the State of Wyoming provides that the waters of the State are the property of the State.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TERRY] desire to use some of his time now?

Mr. TERRY. I yield to my colleague [Mr. MCRAE].

Mr. MCRAE. Mr. Speaker, the bill as first presented ought not to pass; but as it has been amended it appears to be almost if not entirely satisfactory to everybody and what I desire to say will not be directed to the provisions of the bill, but to correct some statements in relation to the act of 1888, and the repeal of it in 1890, and to vindicate the truth of history.

It is not true, according to my recollection—and I have been a member of that committee since the Forty-ninth Congress—that the Committee on Public Lands ever agreed to the extraordinary and dangerous proposition which was inserted in the sundry civil bill passed at the first session of the Fiftieth Congress, in August, 1888. That proposition of the Committee on Appropriations was perhaps suggested by Major Powell, the Director of the Geological Survey at that time. It may be true, as stated by the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee [Mr. CANNON], that Mr. Payson conferred with him about it, but that gentleman was not chairman of the Public Lands Committee in the Fiftieth Congress, and it is just to the committee and to the members of it to say that no such proposition as was involved could have passed the committee. It granted to that officer a power over the public land laws that the President can not exercise. We knew nothing of it at the time.

It was an unusual and dangerous power to vest in anyone, and particularly in the head of a bureau which up to that time we had supposed had but little knowledge of and no concern with the disposal of the public domain. In the exercise of that extraordinary power by that geologist the people woke up one fine morning and found that all of the public land in the Western States and Territories had been reserved from settlement, under the public land laws, to await irrigation. It is due to the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], the present chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, that I should also correct him in the statement that I understood him to make, to the effect that he was chairman of the committee at that time. He was not chairman, but was a member of the committee, and may have supported, or perhaps suggested, the proposition. The gentleman was chairman of the committee in 1890, when the act of 1888 was repealed, and he may have the two confused in his mind.

At the first session of the Fifty-first Congress, which convened in December after the reservation, there came a perfect storm of indignation from the people of the West, which resulted in the prompt repeal of the extraordinary provision of 1888, and in the opening of these lands to settlement again, except the reservoir sites, which were reserved for public use. To that repeal the Public Lands Committee of the House did assent, and gave its influence, though it did not formulate the repealing act. Then followed the act of 1891, which contains the provisions under which canal and ditch companies may obtain the right of way over public lands and reservations, which was formulated, I think, by the late Senator Plumb, of Kansas. There is a provision in the act of 1890 which seems to have escaped the attention of those who have discussed this proposition. That is the following, which I will read:

For topographic surveys in various portions of the United States, $225,000, one-half of which sum shall be expended west of the one hundredth meridian; and so much of the act of October 2, 1888, entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes," as provides for the withdrawal of the public lands from entry, occupation, and settlement, is hereby repealed, and all entries made or claims initiated in good faith and valid but for said act, shall be recognized and may be perfected in the same manner as if said law had not been enacted, except that reservoir sites heretofore located or selected shall remain segregated and reserved from entry or settlement as provided by said act, until otherwise provided by law, and reservoir sites hereafter located or selected on public lands shall in like manner be reserved from the date of the location or selection thereof.

No person who shall, after the passage of this act, enter upon any of the public lands with a view to occupation, entry, or settlement under any of the land laws shall be permitted to acquire title to more than 320 acres in the aggregate, under all of said laws, but this limitation shall not operate to curtail the right of any person who has heretofore made entry or settlement on the public lands, or whose occupation, entry, or settlement is validated by this act: Provided, That in all patents for lands hereafter taken up under any of the land laws of the United States or on entries or claims validated by this act west of the one hundredth meridian, it shall be expressed that there is reserved from the lands in said patent described a right of way thereon for ditches or canals constructed by the authority of the United States.

It will be noticed that this reserves the right of way for ditches and canals constructed by the authority of the United States, and I think clearly shows that it was the purpose of those who inaugurated this scheme to ultimately commit the Government to a national irrigation policy.

At least it seemed to be the settled policy of Congress, when it repealed the act of 1888 and restored the land to settlement, to reserve the sites in question, so as to aid the settlers, so far as the public domain was concerned, in getting free access to the water and an opportunity to preserve it from waste. The purpose of the two acts when taken together appears to be to make it as easy as possible for private capital and individual enterprise to secure water privileges to be used for the public good under proper restrictions of the States. It seems to me that it was an effort on the part of Congress to enable the people on our deserts who had lands which were worthless without water to get the water to it without cost, so far as the public lands were concerned.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that it is not true that it cost $350,000 to locate the reservoir sites, as the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] has said. It is true that that sum of money was spent by the Geological Survey in this irrigation proposition, but the Committee on Appropriations is responsible for the expenditure of every dollar of it by attempting to look after the business of other committees. I grant you that it was expensive, but it was their mistake, and not that of the Public Lands Committee. If gentlemen will read the plan of work laid out and contemplated by Major Powell they will no longer wonder that it was expensive. He organized a corps of scientific men, the like of which has never been seen in connection with our public land system, and the wonder is that it did not cost more than it did to get rid of it. The Appropriations Committee have stood by that Bureau in its fights for jurisdiction and money with a love like unto that which existed between Jonathan and David. Every effort to check its growing power and patronage and reduce appropriations for it has been resisted by the committee that now talks so much about large expenditures. This is one bureau that can usually get what it asks for in the way of appropriations.

The Director in his report in 1889, in referring to the objects of the act of 1888, says this:

Its first object, as expressed in the statute directing that the survey be made, is for the information of the Congress and of the State and Territorial legislatures and the guidance of future legislation with respect to the arid lands and the use of natural waters. The second object of the survey is to select sites for reservoirs and other hydraulic works necessary for irrigation and to reserve the same for public purposes that they may not fall into the possession of individuals or corporations. The third purpose is to select and reserve the irrigable lands until the Congress shall decide upon the best method for their disposition to actual settlers. There is a fourth object, of equal importance with the others, namely, to guide the agriculturists of each great hydrographic basin to the most economic method of utilizing the waters for irrigation in such a manner that the greatest area may be cultivated thereby.

While, with this great scheme involving all of these objects, there was spent $350,000 which the Committee on Appropriations was generous enough to put at his disposal, it does not follow that the location of the sites cost that sum. Because the Appropriations Committee led Congress into a mistake, and because public sentiment required the repeal of the extraordinary power given that bureau when it had nothing to show for all this expenditure except a few reservoir sites, it is unjust to say that they cost or are worth that much.

I have thought it proper, in justice to the Committee on Public Lands in the Fiftieth and Fifty-first Congresses, to say this much; and having done so, I am perfectly indifferent as to what becomes of this bill. It seems to me that the limitations and reservations suggested by my colleague [Mr. TERRY] ought to be adopted, and I intend to vote for his substitute. It is possible that the amendments offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] and accepted will protect the people. I see but little difference in them, but the amendment of my colleague appears to be as complete as is possible under the circumstances. I was not present in the Committee on Public Lands when this bill was considered, and did not know that it had been reported until presented on Monday last. I was unavoidably out of the city; but the general purpose of the bill is right and in line with the established policy adopted by Congress as to the right of way for canals and ditches through arid lands, and we must improve it by some kind of rational legislation for the location of necessary canals and ditches. We can not expect these reservoir sites to remain dry and never to be used for irrigating lands that are worthless without water; and since the Government does not intend to go into a general scheme of irrigation that would bankrupt the Government, it becomes necessary under proper legislation to authorize States and individuals to utilize the sites for the public good.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, the original bill to which I took exception on Monday last has been vastly improved by the amendments that have been made here to-day; but there is still some points of difference between that bill and the substitute that I offer. Now, there is no difference of opinion on this subject as to the necessity of irrigation for these arid lands. I do not stand here to object to any proper legislation to give the people of the great West the benefit of all the water powers that nature has left there for the irrigation of those vast bodies of land. I want to help them all I can, and my only object is to see that in our legislation, when we part with rights that are now held by the General Government, that we shall part with them in such way that they shall bestow a benediction upon the people of those States and not create any monopoly.

My friend from California [Mr. JOHNSON] has pointed out that under the constitution of his State the State has full power to prevent any monopoly and to regulate and control the water rate. My friend from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH] has pointed out that the same thing is true in regard to his State. But gentlemen should recollect that this is a general bill for the Territories as well as the States. The Territories have no constitution to protect their people. When we part with a right or let these rights be absorbed by private corporations or water companies, what protection will there be for the people of the Territories? Their rights will be gone before they are ever admitted into the Union. That point has been entirely overlooked in this bill. It has been entirely overlooked by the gentlemen from the great West; and I want to call their attention to that very important distinction between my substitute and the original bill, even as amended.

Mr. MURPHY of Arizona. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. TERRY. Certainly.

Mr. MURPHY of Arizona. Does not the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois entirely cover that question?

Mr. TERRY. I have not examined it close enough to tell whether it does cover it.

Mr. MURPHY of Arizona. He used that language, so as to perfectly include the Territories.

Mr. TERRY. I hope you will find it a benediction to your people and not a burden.

Now, it is objected again that this proposed substitute is crude legislation. It was not prepared by me, except the fourth section, but was prepared by a gentleman who was for years connected with the Geological Survey and the laying out and segregation of these reservoir sites. He is entirely familiar with the whole subject. It occurs to me that it is far more carefully prepared than the act of 1891. I want to show you how. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH] says that there is always a race of diligence as to which company shall get one of these sites first, and under the act of 1891 the Secretary of the Interior has to approve the location and the occupation. But in what shape does it come to him? It comes to him absolutely without any map or plat in order that he can see in what shape the company proposes to occupy and use these reservoir sites.

Suppose, Mr. Speaker, that two contending applicants present themselves, asking to have the right to occupy different reservoir sites in the same general locality. How can the Secretary tell which will be best for the people unless there is a map showing the situation? Now, that is provided for in the substitute, and it is not provided for in the act of 1891. Under that act the map may be filed within twelve months after they had gone on and occupied the site. In the substitute that is fully provided for. It requires that the person, company, or corporation desiring to occupy a site shall have it accurately surveyed and shall file in the land office a map showing the location, which map is to be transmitted to the Secretary of the Interior. You do not have that in the act of 1891.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That is the law, irrespective of any legislation.

Mr. TERRY. It may be the law in your State and it may be the law in California, but remember that here we are making a law not only for the States, but also for the Territories—making a general law.

Mr. Speaker, I do not desire at present to consume the remainder of my time, but I now move to amend the bill by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting what I sent to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas, which is in the nature of a substitute, will be read.

Mr. LACEY. The substitute has already been read, I believe.

Mr. TERRY. Yes; it has been read once, and unless some other member of the House desires to have it read again I do not ask it.

Mr. LACEY. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from California, Mr. BOWERS.

Mr. BOWERS. Mr. Speaker, I want to say to the House that every member coming from the arid States is in favor of the passage of this bill because he understands the necessity for it. If this bill fails of passage, then all the work that has been done providing for these reservoir sites lies dead and can not be utilized. Some legislation of this kind must be enacted in order to allow us to make use of the work that has already been done. No monopoly gets any advantage under the provisions of this bill. We grant no water rights by it. Within the hour I was at the Land Office talking with Judge Lamoreux and Mr. Best and the Department officers, all of whom are very anxious to see this bill pass, so that the purpose of the act setting apart reservoir sites in arid regions may be carried out. That is the purpose of this bill. Nothing can be done under the original act until we have legislation of this kind.

This bill is fully guarded in all its provisions. We all want it passed. It can not harm any other States. All the Territories that we have remaining need this bill and their representatives are in favor of it. The men who are developing those Territories, New Mexico and Arizona, all desire the passage of the bill. It is an absolutely vital necessity for all those Western arid regions, both States and Territories, and I hope members will stand by us and see that the bill is passed. It was reported unanimously, after careful consideration by the Committee on Public Lands. It is indorsed by the Department and by the officers who are thoroughly familiar with all land matters and with the irrigation laws, and they all agree as to the necessity for its passage. No good reason has been offered against it, nor can one be cited for the rejection of this bill. I trust that it will pass.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, there is an amendment pending which was offered by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BELL] and which has not yet been acted upon. I do not know whether the gentlemen upon the other side object to that amendment. It gives to the States the same right to occupy one of these reservoirs, if they so desire, that is given to individuals or corporations.

Mr. TERRY. I see no objection to that as an amendment to the original bill.

Mr. LACEY. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask the Chair to submit the question for unanimous consent to accept that amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The amendment of Mr. BELL of Colorado was read, as follows:

Add at the end of said bill:

"And any State is hereby authorized to improve and occupy such reservoir sites to the same extent as an individual or private corporation, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the adoption of this amendment?

Mr. MAHANY. I object.

Mr. LACEY. Then I call for a vote on the amendment.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. BELL of Colorado, it was adopted.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, I now move the adoption of my substitute.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] insist on his point of order on the substitute?

Mr. LACEY. I simply reserved the point because I wanted to examine the proposition. I do not make any point of order upon the substitute; but I hope it will be voted down.

The question being taken on the proposed substitute offered by Mr. TERRY, it was rejected; there being on a division—ayes 36, noes 74.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is now on the passage of the bill, on which, according to the arrangement made the other day, there must be a two-thirds vote in the affirmative.

The question being taken, the bill was passed, two-thirds voting in the affirmative.

ELECTION CONTEST—HOPKINS VS. KENDALL.

Mr. DANIELS. I call up the contested-election case of Hopkins vs. Kendall, from the Tenth Congressional district of Kentucky.

The SPEAKER. The resolutions reported by the majority of the committee will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That N. T. Hopkins was not elected a Representative to the Fifty-fourth Congress from the Tenth Congressional district of the State of Kentucky, and is not entitled to the seat.

Resolved, That Joseph M. Kendall was duly elected a Representative to the Fifty-fourth Congress from the Tenth Congressional district of the State of Kentucky, and is entitled to the seat.

Mr. ROYSE. I now ask that the resolutions reported by the minority of the committee be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Joseph M. Kendall was not elected a member of the Fifty-fourth Congress from the Tenth Congressional district of the State of Kentucky, and is not entitled to a seat therein.

Resolved, That N. T. Hopkins was elected a member of the Fifty-fourth Congress from the Tenth Congressional district in the State of Kentucky, and is entitled to a seat therein.

Mr. DANIELS. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the time to be occupied in the discussion of this case be so divided that each side shall have an hour and a half. I suppose that I may be considered as controlling the time on the part of the contestee and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ROYSE] as controlling the time on the part of the contestant.

Mr. BAILEY. Do I understand that the gentleman from New York [Mr. DANIELS] is trying to reach an agreement about a division of time and when the vote shall be taken?

Mr. DANIELS. The division of time, as we understand, is to be an hour and a half on each side.

Mr. BAILEY. Is that simply the purpose of the gentleman and his committee, or does he ask the House to make such an order?

Mr. DANIELS. If the matter had not been so arranged, I should not have so stated. I am not in the habit of making statements that have no responsible foundation.

Mr. BAILEY. The gentleman from New York did not understand my purpose. I meant to ask whether the understanding reached by the committee had been submitted to the House and agreed to. The gentleman perfectly understands that whatever the arrangement of the committee might be the House would have to agree to it. I am sure there will be no objection to the arrangement if the gentleman will ask unanimous consent.

Mr. DANIELS. There has been no formal agreement by the House; but that is the arrangement that has been made on the part of the different gentlemen who are to address the House.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York desire the arrangement submitted to the House?

Mr. DANIELS. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks that the discussion on each side in this case shall occupy an hour and a half, and that then the vote be taken. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. LEWIS. I presume it is understood that no vote will occur this evening.

The SPEAKER. That is for the House to determine. If the House should not adjourn the vote would be taken at the expiration of three hours of debate.

Mr. ROYSE. I suggest an agreement that the vote be not taken until to-morrow.

Mr. DANIELS. I suppose that would be the natural result.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. DANIELS] is entitled to control the time for one hour and a half.

Mr. DANIELS. Mr. Speaker, the election now in question took place in the Tenth Congressional district of the State of Kentucky on November 6, 1894. The result of the election was certified by the election officers as showing a majority of 253 votes in favor of the sitting member, Mr. Kendall. It has not been substantially controverted that the returns in point of fact justify this statement; but the contestant has claimed and, as I understand, proposes to reassert before this House that there was such a transposition of the emblem or device on the tickets as to render the ticket itself void under the laws of the State of Kentucky. This transposition took place in the county of Clark, one of the counties of this election district; and it is claimed that on account of this the entire vote of Clark County should be thrown out and disregarded, the result of which would be that the contestant would be elected.

Now, the device that was placed at the head of the Democratic ticket was the rooster. There was no question as to the regularity of that ticket. The Republicans of the State and district had been in the habit, since 1892, of placing at the head of their ticket as an emblem the eagle, or the eagle about to fly. This emblem was given to the clerk of the county, who was to prepare the tickets for the election in question; the manner in which the Republican ticket should be framed was indicated to him. A proceeding was set afoot—a voluntary proceeding by petition, the petition being signed on the 14th day of September, 1894—by which the petitioners asked for a place upon the ticket, and another petition asked for this same emblem or device—that is, the eagle about to fly.

The clerk, when he came to make up the ticket, substituted the eagle about to fly for the ticket of the petitioners, which was substantially a false and fabricated ticket, and placed at the head of the ticket to be voted by the Republicans, not his party emblem, the eagle, but a raccoon, and the ticket was so printed for the purpose, apparently, of deceiving the illiterate voters of the district and inducing them to vote under a ticket of the eagle about to fly as the Republican ticket, when in point of fact their party organization required the votes to be cast for the regular Republican ticket.

The law of the State of Kentucky required that the ticket should be printed and the emblems used practically in the order in which they were delivered to the clerk of the county. It will be remembered that those that were drawn upon the petition of persons desiring a place on the ticket were, according to petitions, dated on the 14th day of September, and the clerk certified that when he came to make up the ticket, or afterwards, these petitions were delivered to him on the 14th day of September, the day of their date, and before any signatures were produced for the purpose of sustaining the application.

The Republican ticket was filed on the 20th day of September, and, as a matter of fact, as the evidence established it, it appears that this was before the petitions were filed, which were signed under date of September 14; so that when the Clerk came to make up the ticket, instead of giving the Republicans the eagle about to fly at the head of their ticket, he gave them the raccoon, and put the eagle, according to the petition of those persons whose tickets were handed him, at the head of the spurious ticket.

Now, there is no doubt of the evidence produced on the hearing that this was an entire fabrication on the part of the clerk; that it was not a genuine execution of the law, but that the tickets were so made up to lead these people on the morning of election, who would be informed that the Republican ticket would be indicated by the heading of an eagle about to fly, to vote the spurious ticket instead of that which they desired to vote and which actually represented their party. So that here was a transparent fraud on the part of the clerk.

This is further established by the fact that the law requires sample ballots to be distributed at the voting places three days before the election, so that the people could have their attention directed to the ticket, and the form in which it was framed and the manner in which they were to vote, for the purpose of securing the expression of their desire in the election. There was an entire failure on the part of the clerk in sending out the sample ballots. He did not do it, or did not intend to do it, until the morning of the election, intending in that manner to add to the imposition that resulted as a matter of fact from the manner in which the ticket itself had been framed and printed.

It is claimed on behalf of the contestant that this renders the ticket absolutely void, and that the whole vote of Clark County should be thrown out, although the vote of the county in fact was in favor of the sitting member, giving him a majority there, and there was a fair representation of the Republican vote under the "coon" ticket.

Now, on the part of the sitting member, a majority of the committee concluded that this could not be done; that the fact that the clerk had misconducted himself and violated his duty as the clerk of the county in this manner was not sufficient in and of itself to justify the entire setting aside of this ticket and to justify rejecting it as a fair expression of the votes of the people so far as they had not been implicated in the commission of the fraud. It is contended on the part of the majority of the committee, seven members agreeing to that conclusion, that, inasmuch as it appears what the number of ballots actually was (that is, the spurious ballots cast under the ticket headed with an eagle about to fly), that in itself marked the extent of the deception produced by the fabrication of the ticket by the change of the emblem. There is no doubt as to what that vote was. It was returned, and returned under such evidence as precluded the possibility of any question of doubt, and it appears from the return of the officers, as well as the sworn testimony in the case, that there were but 79 persons who voted the ticket with the eagle about to fly at the head. So that that was the extent of the number of persons who were deceived into supporting the ticket under the impression that in doing so they were sustaining the Republican organization and the Republican nomination.

Mr. MILLER of Kansas. If I do not interrupt the gentleman, I would ask him if it is not true that in every other county in the district there was a large Republican gain, but that in estimating what the damage was by reason of this fraudulent ticket they have only taken the Republican vote in this county as of previous years as the basis of the calculation?

Mr. DANIELS. All that is brought in question is what took place in the county of Clark.

Mr. MILLER of Kansas. I know that. But is it not true that if there had been the same rate or proportion of gain in the county of Clark as elsewhere in the district for the Republican ticket it would have elected the contestant?

Mr. DANIELS. No, not at all. It appears by the statement made by the secretary of state giving an account of the majorities, and also the votes which were polled, that in 1884 the Democratic majority in this district was 3,219; that in 1894 the majority was reduced to 253 votes. In 1895 the majority in the county was 353. So that it is entirely practicable to determine the extent of the effect of the substitution of this spurious ticket in place of the proper emblem. It is entirely clear and capable of demonstration that the Republicans were induced to vote to the extent of 79 votes only, in support of this spurious ticket, by reason of this substitution. The proposition of the majority of the committee is that for the purpose of rectifying the situation here we take these 79 votes, inasmuch as they were undoubtedly cast under the impression that they were Republican tickets, and transpose them to the ballots that were cast containing the raccoon ticket, which turned out to be the Republican ticket. Adding those 79 votes to the ballots that were cast on that ticket, for the purpose of giving the Republicans the entire effect, that is the result which is reached by the majority of the committee.

Mr. BARHAM. Will it interrupt the gentleman if I ask him a question?

Mr. DANIELS. Not at all.

Mr. BARHAM. Was the full vote of the county cast at this election?

Mr. DANIELS. Very nearly.

Mr. MILLER of Kansas. It was over 700 short.

Mr. DANIELS. No; that is a mistake.

Mr. BARHAM. If it was 700 short, would that change the result?

Mr. DANIELS. It would depend upon how the shortage was divided.

Mr. DINSMORE. The chairman of the Republican committee of that county fixed the Republican vote of that county at 1,600, and there were 1,488 votes cast for the contestant.

Mr. DANIELS. There were about 42 votes requisite for the purpose of filling up the entire Republican force in that county, and a nearer approximation to the entire vote was scarcely ever found, under any circumstances, in the case of an election.

Mr. BARHAM. I should like to ask the gentleman another question, if he will permit me. If this was a fraudulent ticket, the vignette being improper, parties may have been kept away from the polls who would have voted the ticket, except for the fraud in the ticket, with the result that the will of the people was defeated.

Mr. DANIELS. There is no evidence of any person having been prevented from voting by reason of the fact that this substitution took place in the party emblem on the ticket. I will say right here that Mr. Hatton, who is the only witness who speaks on the subject, testifies that, in his opinion, the contestant lost from 300 to 400 votes in the county by reason of this substitution of the party emblem, but he does not put his hand upon a single individual; he does not point out one person who has either informed him or that he has any reason to believe was prevented from voting at this election by reason of this circumstance.

Mr. BARHAM. The contestant having established the fraud, was not the burden of proof cast upon the contestee to show that the contestant did not lose a number of votes sufficient to elect him?

Mr. DANIELS. I should think not.

Mr. BARHAM. Is not the burden of proof shifted when fraud is established?

Mr. DANIELS. There is no doubt as to the proof, and no doubt as to the effect of the proof here, and there is no doubt as to the number of votes that were cast upon this spurious ticket, having the "eagle about to fly" at its head. So that, upon this subject, there is no room whatever for controversy or for inference.

Now, taking this testimony of Mr. Hatton, and adding to the vote of the contestant the number of votes which he thinks were lost, you would get a larger vote in that county than under any circumstances you have the slightest reason for believing could possibly have been cast.

Mr. BARHAM. Will it interrupt the gentleman if I ask him another question?

Mr. DANIELS. I do not wish to be interrupted all the while.

Mr. BARHAM. Very well. I do not wish to ask you anything which will interrupt you.

Mr. DANIELS. A witness who was familiar with the state of the vote in the county, and who was assistant editor of a paper published in the city of Winchester, has stated in his testimony that the total vote of the Republican party in the county was 1,600, and that out of that there were three-fifths of the voters who were negroes. Now, when you come to take into consideration the number of ballots that were cast, and see the difference between the number actually cast and 1,600, the margin is so small as to leave only 42 Republican votes in the entire county which were not cast at this election.

An examination of the figures showing the number of votes cast at preceding elections demonstrates that by no possibility could there have been any such loss in the Republican vote as 300 or 400, the estimate of Mr. Hatton. In the election of 1894, which is the one in controversy here, the Democratic candidate received 1,844 votes and the Republican candidate received 1,488 votes, leaving the Democratic candidate 356 votes ahead.

Now, see what the vote was in the year 1895, immediately following that year, when no person was running as a candidate for Representative in Congress. On that occasion the Democratic vote was 1,926 votes, nearly 100, it will be seen, in excess of the vote of 1894. The Republican vote was 1,662, leaving a Democratic majority of 264 votes in the election of 1895. If you go back to the preceding election of 1892, the Democratic vote was 1,958, while the Republican vote was 1,599, giving a Democratic majority of 359 votes. But suppose you take the difference between the votes that were given upon these different elections and give the contestant the benefit of that difference, it does not entitle him to an election here or to a seat in this House, unless the House is ready to adopt the conclusion that the change in the emblem or reference to the ticket was sufficient to render it void.

Mr. MILLER of Kansas. I would like to know whether, in making your estimates here, you have not assumed in regard to that vote in this county that no man in the county who was not a recognized Republican would have voted for Congress? Now, is not that the assumption of the majority of the committee?

Mr. DANIELS. Not at all. I have estimated the votes as they are stated in the report of the secretary of state relating to these different elections. Now, as to the question whether this ticket can be rejected, because if it could be undoubtedly the contestant would be entitled to the election. On the question of whether this ticket can be rejected, I desire to call the attention of the House to the case of People against Wood, recently decided, and reported in 148 New York Reports. There a large number of names had been placed upon the ticket without authority, and it was claimed on behalf of the parties insisting upon the invalidity of the ticket that, inasmuch as they were placed there without authority of law, it rendered the ticket void, and consequently it should be rejected and had no effect whatever upon the election. There was a division of sentiment on this question. The chief justice says:

> The effort in this proceeding is to disfranchise innocent voters because of a latent defect in the official ballot furnished by the State, not discernible on inspection, which ballot they were compelled to use, the defect consisting in the unauthorized insertion therein, by a public official, charged with the duty of making up and printing the ballots, of names of candidates in a party column not duly nominated by such party. The intention of the voters who used this party column to express their choice is clear, and admits of no doubt. Each one received his ballot from the inspectors, marked with the cross under the party name and emblem, and returned it to the inspectors, by whom it was deposited in the box and subsequently counted. We can conceive of no principle which permits the disfranchisement of innocent voters for the mistake or even the willful misconduct of election officers in performing the duty cast upon them. The object of elections is to ascertain the popular will, and not to thwart it. The object of election laws is to secure the rights of duly qualified electors, and not to defeat them. Statutory regulations are enacted to secure freedom of choice and to prevent fraud, and not by technical obstructions to make the right of voting insecure and difficult.

Now, applying the principle to this particular case. Here 1,844 persons went to the polls and, under the head of a ticket having the rooster upon it 1,844 ballots were deposited by what appears now in the case, or certainly what does not appear to be different, to be innocent voters. The persons who deposited these tickets in the ballot box were free to assume that this ticket was regularly framed, and that they had the right to vote it and express their opinion as to their candidates upon the faith and assumption of the correctness of this ticket; and the court of appeals of the State of New York sanctioned the exercise of the authority by the voter in this way, and say that his right is not to be affected or disturbed by reason of the willful misconduct of the clerk who made up the ticket. The same is true as to a large number of Republicans, 1,488, who voted the ticket under the head of the coon, marked on their ticket in the square required by the law to indicate their intention under that heading. Is it true, that because a few persons may possibly have been deceived in the exercise of their authority or their right as freemen under those circumstances, that all these other persons are to be deprived of their votes? Are they thus to be practically disfranchised by the exercise of what is no more than arbitrary authority?

The statute of Kentucky requires nothing of that kind. On the contrary, it is as salutary in its provisions as the statutes of other States in reference to the preservation and maintenance of the rights and privileges of the voter; so that we were constrained to come to the conclusion, when we came to look the subject entirely over, that this ticket could not be rejected because of the circumstance that this emblem had been displaced in the manner described by the clerk of Clark County, and that, inasmuch as there did not appear to have been a single person who had failed to vote because of this change in the emblem on the ticket, unless it might be the 79, and full justice could be done to the contestant by transferring their ballots to the Republican ticket, we felt constrained under the circumstances to find that no ground whatever existed for displacing the contestee and giving the seat to the contestant, where the majority of the votes under the circumstances were necessarily against him.

If you take the 79 votes out of the majority given to the contestant and take 92 votes, the difference between the ballots in the election of 1894 and those in 1895, and deduct them from the majority which is certified to by the officers of election, still the sitting member has a majority. The parties stipulated, in the course of taking evidence upon these controverted matters, that every person who was entitled to vote or who desired to vote had had his ballot received and fairly and honestly counted by the officers of election; so that there was no fraud, no defalcation on the part of the public officers in receiving and counting the votes of the persons who went to the polls and voted the Republican ticket; but, on the contrary, full effect was given to the intention of all those persons, and at the same time, when you come to make these deductions and give the contestant the credit of all that he can possibly ask, it brings the vote that was cast at this election so close to the actual Republican vote of the county that there is no ground for saying that the contestant was elected and that the contestee is not entitled to the seat.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. ROYSE. Mr. Speaker, I wish to offer a suggestion. It is evident from the appearance of the Hall that a large number of members have gone to their homes. It is somewhat near the ordinary hour of adjournment, and as I could not conclude what I want to say about this case by 5 o'clock, and as the case is quite important, I think it better that we adjourn at this point, and I therefore move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. MOODY. Let me suggest to the gentleman that a speech might be made on our side within the time remaining before the usual hour of adjournment.

Mr. ROYSE. Well, I could not conclude within that time, and I think it better that we should adjourn now.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. ROYSE, that the House adjourn, the Speaker declared that he was in doubt.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 50, noes 38.

So the motion was agreed to; and the House accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 16 minutes p. m.) adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of Nancy M. Bass, administratrix of William Bass, deceased, against The United States—to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, February 18, 1897.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on motion of Mr. DAVIS, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

THE REVENUE-CUTTER SERVICE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 16th instant, certain information in relation to the United States Revenue-Cutter Service; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 205) granting a pension to Mary O. H. Stoneman.

The message also announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. R. 201) to enable the Secretary of the Senate to pay the expenses of the inaugural ceremonies.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 1984) to provide for the use and occupation of reservoir sites reserved; and

A bill (H. R. 10102) to remove the political disabilities of Col. William E. Simms.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 10278) to reorganize the judicial districts of Arkansas, and for other purposes; and it was thereupon signed by the Vice-President.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin presented sundry petitions of citizens of Racine, Beaverdam, Kenosha, and Burlington, all in the State of Wisconsin, praying for the passage of the antiscalping railroad ticket bill; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. DAVIS presented a petition of sundry citizens of Lac qui Parle County, Minn., praying that adequate protection be given to the sugar industry of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented petitions of the Commercial Club of St. Paul, of Rev. Elijah B. Jones and sundry other citizens, and of sundry citizens of Winona, Minneapolis, Lyle, and Lake City, all in the State of Minnesota, praying for the passage of the antiscalping railroad ticket bill; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. BAKER presented sundry petitions of citizens of Fort Scott, Hutchinson, Ottawa, Mound City, and Columbus, all in the State of Kansas, praying for the passage of the antiscalping railroad ticket bill; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. BURROWS presented a petition of the board of education of Grand Rapids, Mich., praying for the ratification of the pending arbitration treaty with Great Britain; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. WALTHALL presented a petition of sundry citizens of Corinth, Miss., praying for the passage of the antiscalping railroad ticket bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MORRILL. I present the petition of M. Ross Fishburn, pastor of the Mount Pleasant Congregational Church, of this city, representing the standing committee of that church of 211 members, and the petition of Austin T. Foster and a large number of citizens of Derby Line, Vt., praying for the prohibition of the sale of alcoholic liquors in the Capitol building and grounds. As the bill on this subject has already been reported, I move that the petitions lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ALDRICH presented a petition of the officers of sundry societies and churches of Rhode Island, and a petition of the officers of sundry societies and churches of Middletown, R. I., praying for the appointment of an impartial, nonpartisan industrial commission; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the officers of sundry churches and societies of Rhode Island; a petition of the officers of sundry churches of Providence and Olneyville, R. I., and a petition of the officers of sundry churches and societies of Middletown, R. I., praying for the enactment of legislation raising the age of consent to 18 years in the District of Columbia and the Territories; which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Eagan and sundry other citizens of Hutchinson, all in the State of Kansas, and a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of New Orleans, La., praying for the passage of the antiscalping railroad ticket bill; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. PEFFER. I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that a large majority of the petitions of this character come from railway employees, such as conductors, engineers, section hands, shop hands, etc., and not from the managers of the companies themselves. I think it is suggestive, to say the least, in favor of the employees.

Mr. SEWELL presented the petition of J. H. Lippincott and 56 other citizens of Camden, N. J., praying for the enactment of legislation regulating fraternal beneficiary societies, orders, and associations; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented the petition of William Lunger and 52 other citizens of Plainfield, N. J., praying for the enactment of legislation prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors in the Capitol building; which was ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 664) to remove the charge of desertion against Joseph Riese, alias Julius Rosier, late of Company D, Second Regiment New Jersey Volunteers, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. BERRY. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] on the 16th instant, intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, to report it favorably. I ask that the amendment be printed and referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and that the letter of Maj. J. H. Willard, United States Corps of Engineers, at Vicksburg, Miss., which accompanies it, be printed as a document.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered.

Mr. McMILLAN, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9703) to provide for light-houses and other aids to navigation, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3700) to provide for aids to navigation, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. SEWELL on the 12th instant, intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, reported it with an amendment, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. ELKINS, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by himself on the 16th instant, intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. FRYE, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by himself on the 13th instant, intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be printed, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Appropriations; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by himself on the 16th instant, intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9168) to authorize the construction of a bridge over the Monongahela River from the city of McKeesport to the township of Mifflin, Allegheny County, Pa., reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3690) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a steel bridge over the St. Louis River between the States of Wisconsin and Minnesota," approved April 24, 1894, as amended by an act approved August 4, 1894, entitled "An act to amend an act to authorize the construction of a steel bridge over the St. Louis River between the States of Minnesota and Wisconsin," reported it without amendment.

Mr. QUAY. The Committee on Commerce, I think, this morning instructed the Senator to ask that the bill be immediately put on its passage. I will mention to the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS] that it is the bill relating to the extension of the time for the completion of the bridge at Duluth. I do not desire to put it upon its passage to-day unless he agrees to it.

Mr. VILAS. I hope the Senator from Pennsylvania will be willing to let the bill stand until Monday next. By that time I am quite confident I shall have received an answer to the letters I have written, and I believe I shall be under no necessity to make any objection to the bill.

Mr. QUAY. It will go over, then, until Monday next.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Meanwhile, the bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. MURPHY, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. FRYE on the 16th instant, intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. WHITE, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. PERKINS on the 15th instant, intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be printed, and, with the accompanying report, referred to the Committee on Appropriations; which was agreed to.

Mr. SHOUP, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6845) granting an increase of pension to Maj. John H. Gearkee, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. QUAY, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by himself on the 16th instant, intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and printed; which was agreed to.

GEORGE I. SPANGLER.

Mr. COCKRELL. By direction of the Committee on Military Affairs, I report back favorably, with an amendment, the bill (H. R. 4424) to correct the military record of George I. Spangler. As this soldier is reported to me to be in a critical condition, and an amendment has to be made to the bill, I ask that it may be put upon its passage. I hope there will be no objection to it.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, after the word "to," in line 4, to strike out the remainder of the bill and insert:

Revoke and set aside so much of General Court-Martial Orders, No. 4, Headquarters Army of the Potomac, dated January 20, 1865, as approved the proceedings, findings, and sentence of the general court-martial convened under Special Order No. 9, Headquarters Third Division, Ninth Army Corps, December 27, 1864, dismissing George I. Spangler, first lieutenant of Company K, Two hundredth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, with the loss of three months' pay and allowances, and announced that he ceased to belong to the military service of the United States from that date, and to issue to him a certificate of honorable discharge as of date January 20, 1865, and to correct his military record accordingly.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

NEW YORK ASSOCIATION OF SEWING SCHOOLS.

Mr. ALDRICH. I am directed by the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. Res. 239) admitting free of duty needlework and similar articles imported by the New York Association of Sewing Schools for exhibition purposes, to report it favorably without amendment, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution. It provides that all articles of needlework and similar articles which have been made by pupils in the schools of Europe, which have or shall be imported from Europe for the sole purpose of exhibition by the New York Association of Sewing Schools, shall be admitted free of payment of duty, customs fees, or charges, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe for the due exportation thereof at the close of such exhibition.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN M'LAIN.

Mr. PALMER. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8037) for the relief of John McLain, alias Michael McLain, to report it favorably without amendment and recommend its passage. Inasmuch as it is a bill in which Mr. BURRELL, of the other House, is very much interested, and his service will end with the present Congress, I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration. There is a careful report accompanying the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of John McLain, alias Michael McLain, late a member of Company D, Tenth Illinois Infantry, and Company I, Thirteenth Missouri Cavalry, and grant him an honorable discharge as of date October 22, 1864, the date he suffered an amputation of his left arm by reason of gunshot wounds received while engaged with his command against the enemy at the battle of Independence, Mo.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HUGH M'LAUGHLIN.

Mr. PROCTOR. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1515) for the relief of Hugh McLaughlin, to report it favorably with an amendment. It is a bill to remove the charge of desertion, and on account of the amendment I ask for its immediate consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to grant an honorable discharge to Hugh McLaughlin, late sergeant Company B, Fourth Regiment New Jersey Veteran Volunteer Infantry.

The amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was to add at the end of the bill:

To date from November 20, 1864.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

RESERVOIR AT GULL LAKE, MINNESOTA.

Mr. NELSON. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably, without amendment, the bill (S. 3683) to amend the river and harbor act of August 18, 1894. It is a very short bill, a local bill, and I ask that it may receive immediate consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to repeal the provision that the United States shall not be subject to any cost or expense for lands, mills, or other property necessarily taken or injured for the reservoir and dam at Gull Lake, head waters of the Mississippi River, in the State of Minnesota.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. ALLEN introduced a bill (S. 3708) to remove the charge of desertion from the record of Frank Ferrin, of Omaha, Nebr., alias Cyrus F. Dunby; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HOAR introduced a bill (S. 3709) granting a pension to Mary J. C. Throop; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BATE (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3710) for the relief of Sarah McClay, administratrix of Robert McClay, deceased, late of Davidson County, Tenn.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3711) for the relief of Mrs. Sarah E. Norton, of Memphis, Tenn.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3712) for the relief of John Zimmerman, of Madison County, Tenn.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. CAMERON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SHERMAN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. VOORHEES submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Printing, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HOAR submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DANIEL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

EXTENSION OF MAIL SERVICE.

Mr. VILAS. I ask unanimous consent to dispose of the bill (S. 1811) to extend the uses of the mail service. This bill was read at length, as in Committee of the Whole, and the amendments in part agreed to when it was objected to by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN], who, as I am advised, has since given the subject consideration and finds no reason to object to the bill. The bill having already been read, it will occupy but little time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill indicated by the Senator from Wisconsin?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

The next amendment of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads was, in section 2, line 6, after the word "dollars," to insert "or such larger sum as the Postmaster-General shall in the beginning or from time to time prescribe;" so as to read:

That before the said cards and envelopes shall be so carried through the mails the said association shall enter into a bond to the United States, with corporate or other sufficient security, to be approved in form and sufficiency by the Postmaster-General, in the sum of $100,000, or such larger sum as the Postmaster-General shall in the beginning or from time to time prescribe, conditioned for the redemption in cash when presented of each and every one of said coupons taken from cards and envelopes at the office of delivery.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 11, before the word "days," to strike out "thirty" and insert "ten;" so as to read:

Upon failure at any time for ten days to redeem said coupons in cash, the Postmaster-General may, by order, stop the carrying of said envelopes and cards in the mails of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 5, line 3, after the word "be," to strike out "covered by letters patent of" and insert "patented or now or hereafter owned by;" and in line 4, after the word "association," to insert "or its successor;" so as to make the section read:

That said association shall pay postage upon each and every piece of matter passing through the mails which shall be patented or now or hereafter owned by said association or its successors.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 6, line 4, after the word "weekly," to insert "or monthly;" so as to make the section read:

That said association shall, if required by the Postmaster-General, at all times keep a sum in cash, deposited as the Postmaster-General may direct, sufficient in amount for the redemption of said coupons daily or weekly, or monthly.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 17th instant approved and signed the following act:

An act (S. 3333) to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," passed finally June 3, 1896.

BILL BECOME A LAW.

The message also announced that the bill (S. 361) for the relief of Silas P. Keller, having been presented to the President February 5, 1897, and not having been returned by him to the House of Congress in which it originated within the time prescribed by the Constitution, has become a law without his approval.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. QUAY. Before the motion is put, I will state to the Senate that previously to the notice given by the Senator from Ohio that he would move to proceed to the consideration of executive business to-day, I had given notice that to-day, upon the conclusion of the morning business, I would call up the labor commission bill. But as I understand that the session of the Senate to-day will possibly be productive of results in the business to which it is to address itself, I will not collide with the Senator from Ohio on his motion, but will make my motion as soon as the Senate returns into legislative session.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I think it is my duty to state that I shall try to get up the Indian appropriation bill immediately after the executive session. I gave notice to this effect some days ago.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Ohio, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After six hours spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had disagreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 1501) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Lucy Alexander Payne, widow of Capt. J. Scott Payne, Fifth United States Cavalry; further insists upon its amendment to the said bill disagreed to by the Senate; asks a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. COFFIN, Mr. BAKER of Kansas, and Mr. BLACK managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5490) to license billiard and pool tables in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, February 18, 1897.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a privileged report. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations to report the bill (H. R. 10329) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for prior years, and for other purposes, and I desire to give notice that to-morrow morning I will ask the House to resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the bill, hoping to pass it before the week closes.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to reserve all points of order on the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] presents the general deficiency bill, which will be printed and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with all points of order reserved.

FOREIGN PASSPORT REGULATIONS.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the report which I send to the desk.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Printing having had under consideration House joint resolution No. 257, to print, under the direction of the Department of State, a special edition of 6,000 copies of reports from diplomatic and consular officers of the United States on the passport regulations of foreign countries, 3,000 copies for the Department of State and 3,000 copies for the use of Congress, recommend that the same be agreed to.

The Public Printer estimates the cost of the work called for by this resolution at $340.

Resolved, That there be printed, under the direction of the Department of State, a special edition of 3,000 copies of the reports from diplomatic and consular officers of the United States on the passport regulations of foreign countries for the Department of State, and 3,000 copies for the use of Congress, of which 1,000 shall be for the use of the Senate and 2,000 for the use of the House.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, this joint resolution was introduced by the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and it is accompanied by a message from the President and a letter from the Secretary of State, which probably it is unnecessary to read at this time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There was no objection.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. PERKINS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed joint resolution (S. R. 205) enabling the Secretary of War to detail an officer of the United States Army to accept a position under the Government of the Greater Republic of Central America; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7864) to amend the immigration laws of the United States.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2923) for the better improvement of the Government reservation at the city of Fort Smith, in the State of Arkansas, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendment to the bill (H. R. 10040) granting an increase of pension to George W. Ferree, had agreed to the conference asked by the House of Representatives, and had appointed Mr. BAKER, Mr. PALMER, and Mr. PEFFER as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 8197) for the relief of John J. Guerin.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment joint resolution (H. Res. 239) admitting free of duty needlework and similar articles imported by New York Association of Sewing Schools for exhibition purposes.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. HAGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 10278) to reorganize the judicial districts of Arkansas, and for other purposes.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. ROYSE. I think we had better proceed with the regular order, Mr. Speaker, and dispose of this election case.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. I hope the gentleman will withdraw the demand for a moment, until I submit a conference report.

Mr. ROYSE. I will withdraw it for a conference report, which the gentleman from Iowa desires to submit.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman will permit a bill which is on the Speaker's table, which should have been presented yesterday morning, to be laid before the House?

Mr. ROYSE. Certainly.

JESSE DURNELL.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 3108) granting a pension to Jesse Durnell, late second-class pilot on the gunboat Lexington, with Senate amendment proposing to strike out "twenty-four" and insert "twenty;" so as to make a pension at the rate of $20 per month.

Mr. WOOD. I move that the Senate amendment be concurred in.

The motion was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. WOOD, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

BILLIARD AND POOL ROOMS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I wish to submit a conference report, which I send to the desk.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6599) to license billiard and pool tables in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference agree to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same as amended as follows: Strike out the matter proposed to be inserted; also strike out of section 4 of the bill only the words "or a room connected with or opening out of or adjacent to such rooms;" and that the Senate agree to the same.

G. M. CURTIS,
A. MILNES,
J. H. HULING,
Managers on the part of the House.

ISHAM G. HARRIS,
GEO. PEABODY WETMORE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement of the House conferees was read, as follows:

The bill to license billiard and pool tables in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, was introduced at the instance of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, who desired to obtain a hold over the proprietors of billiard tables and other like games, and also to obtain additional revenue for the District.

The present law provides that no licensee under a barroom license shall employ, or permit to be employed, or allow any female or minor under 16 years of age, or person convicted of crime, to sell, give, furnish, or distribute any intoxicating drinks, or any admixture thereof, ale, wine, or beer to any person or persons, nor permit the playing of pool, or billiards, or other games in the room where such liquors are sold: Provided, That the excise board may, in its discretion, permit the playing of such games, except cards, in duly licensed places.

The bill as agreed to in conference goes further than the existing law, and provides that neither billiards nor any other like game shall be permitted in any room where liquors are sold.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. I move the adoption of the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

APPOINTMENT OF CONFEREES.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. COFFIN, Mr. BAKER of Kansas, and Mr. BLACK as conferees on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 1501) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Lucy Alexander Payne, widow of Capt. J. Scott Payne, Fifth United States Cavalry.

MARY O. H. STONEMAN.

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a conference report——

The SPEAKER. Unless the gentleman from Indiana claims the floor——

Mr. ROYSE. I did not understand that I could claim the floor. But I will yield for a conference report.

The SPEAKER. The conference report will be read.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 205) granting a pension to Mary O. H. Stoneman, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the amount proposed to be inserted insert "fifty;" and the House agree to the same.

HENRY F. THOMAS,
GEO. C. CROWTHER,
C. J. ERDMAN,
Managers on the part of the House.

GEO. L. SHOUP,
JNO. L. MITCHELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The managers on the part of the House make the following statement upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses:

As passed by the Senate, the bill carried $75 per month, which was reduced by the House to $30. The effect of the conference report is to grant the beneficiary $50, being in the nature of a compromise, the Senate making a concession of $25 and the House conceding $20.

The managers on the part of the House have been led to make this concession because of the necessities of the claimant and the long and meritorious service of the soldier, who entered the Army in 1846, and was promoted several times for gallant conduct on the field of battle. He was appointed major-general on March 13, 1865.

The report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. CROWTHER, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

MAJ. GEN. JULIUS H. STAHEL.

Mr. CROWTHER. I send up another conference report.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1694) granting an increase of pension to Maj. Gen. Julius H. Stahel, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amount proposed to be inserted insert "seventy-five;" and the House agree to the same.

HENRY F. THOMAS,
GEO. CROWTHER,
C. J. ERDMAN,
Managers on the part of the House.

J. H. GALLINGER,
J. C. PRITCHARD,
JOHN M. PALMER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The managers on the part of the House make the following statement upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses:

As passed by the Senate, the bill carried $100 per month. It was reported favorably by the Committee of the Whole at that figure, but reduced by the House to $50. The effect of the conference report is to grant the beneficiary $75 per month, being in the nature of a compromise, the Senate making a concession of $25 and the House conceding a like amount.

The managers on the part of the House have been led to make this concession because the pension is for the soldier himself, whose military record is an excellent one. He hold the rank of major-general; is now 71 years of age, and totally incapacitated by reason of disabilities contracted and incurred in the line of duty. He receives $30 per month under a special act passed by the last Congress.

The conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. CROWTHER, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 8037) for the relief of John McLain, alias Michael McLain.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bills of the following titles in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (H. R. 4424) to correct the military record of George I. Spangler; and

A bill (H. R. 1515) for the relief of Hugh McLaughlin.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 3683) to amend the river and harbor act of August 18, 1894; and

A bill (S. 1811) to extend the uses of the mail service.

A bill (S. 2832) to provide for the relief of Daniel T. Tollett;

A bill (S. 1816) granting a pension to Eliza Craig Heckman, widow of Brig. Gen. Charles A. Heckman; and

A bill (S. 2645) granting a pension to Jane H. Vandever.

APPOINTMENT OF CONFEREES.

The SPEAKER announced as conferees on the bill S. 1501 Mr. COFFIN, Mr. BAKER of Kansas, and Mr. BLACK.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. ROYSE rose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ROYSE] desire to proceed?

Mr. ROYSE. I do.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ROYSE] has the floor.

Mr. CATCHINGS. Before the gentleman proceeds, I desire to ask that the Chair lay before the House the bill (S. 3614) to aid in the improvement of the navigable channel of the South Pass by closing the existing crevasse in Pass a Loutre, in the Mississippi River, so that the conferees may be appointed and the bill sent to conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ROYSE] has the floor.

Mr. CATCHINGS. I desire to ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. ROYSE. Well, I desire to proceed now, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE—HOPKINS VS. KENDALL.

The House proceeded to the consideration of the contested-election case of Hopkins vs. Kendall, from the Tenth Congressional district of Kentucky.

Mr. ROYSE. Mr. Speaker, upon one question there is no disagreement among the members of this committee. We all agree that this ballot was fraudulently prepared, that the clerk violated the law in every respect in the preparation of this ballot; and I can not express it in any stronger terms than it was expressed by the gentleman from New York [Mr. DANIELS], the chairman of the committee, who represents the majority, when he said on yesterday:

> Now, there is no doubt of the evidence produced on the hearing that this was an entire fabrication on the part of the clerk; that it was not a genuine execution of the law, but that the tickets were so made up to mislead these people on the morning of election, who would be informed that the Republican ticket would be indicated by the heading of an eagle about to fly, to vote the spurious ticket instead of that which they desired to vote and which actually represented their party. So that here was a transparent fraud on the part of the clerk.

That is the condition of that ticket prepared by the clerk of Clark County in utter violation of the law.

Now, in order to understand the full extent of this fraud, let me recite some of the facts that are uncontradicted in the record. The convention which nominated the contestant was held in June, the certificate of his nomination was filed with the clerk of Clark County. In that certificate of nomination the Republican party that nominated him declared that their emblem was the eagle about to fly.

Prior to that time, in 1892, the Republican party, in its State convention, had selected this as the party emblem, and it had been used from that time until 1894. The law of Kentucky expressly provides that when one party has selected an emblem for its use at a State convention, that emblem shall continue to be used until it is changed by order of a State convention. This fact was well known to that clerk of Clark County, because he has come before us and solemnly sworn that he knew that that emblem was adopted by the Republican party in 1892; that he knew it had been used by that party from that time down until 1894, and when he prepared this ballot he had before him the nomination of the contestant regularly certified, by which he could learn that the Republican party of this district still adhered to the emblem of the eagle about to fly. But in Clark County a small fraction of the Republican party were dissatisfied. This dissatisfaction, however, only extended to the local officers of Clark County. The Democratic leaders of that county, discovering the dissatisfaction, seized hold of it as an opportunity for widening the breach. So they encouraged these dissatisfied negroes to call a county convention of their own, and told them that if they called that convention and nominated their own ticket they would see to it that that ticket had the regular Republican emblem.

That convention was accordingly called. It nominated a ticket and then dissolved. But as soon as the nomination was made it was discovered by the Republicans who went into that movement that it was engineered by the leaders of the Democratic party of that county, and in large numbers they abandoned the movement. It became evident that this ticket could not be gotten upon the official ballot simply by that nomination. That faction had not cast 2 per cent of the vote of that county at the preceding election, and so it could not get its candidate on the ticket by nomination. The only way in which it could secure a place upon the official ballot was by petition, and when it was learned by the Democratic leaders that this faction were abandoning the movement because it was engineered by the Democratic leaders of that county, they called together some of the leaders of this faction. They met in the office of one Mr. Pendleton, then the chairman of the Democratic county committee. He called this committee together and said to them that they must go ahead with their ticket, and promised each one of them $10 if they carried it through. Afterwards, it is said, some money was paid upon this agreement, but how much the evidence does not disclose.

Accordingly, petitions were drawn up asking that this ticket be placed upon the official ballot, and the evidence discloses that these petitions were drawn up in the handwriting of some Democratic leader of that county. These petitions were circulated, and in the body of these petitions they asked that the name of the contestant be placed upon the ticket as the candidate for Congress.

It is perfectly clear from the evidence that this faction of the Republican party were friendly to the contestant. They all wanted to vote for him and expected by means of that petition to get his name upon the ticket. But they were ignorant. They were unacquainted with the law or with the steps to be taken in order to get their candidate for Congress upon the official ballot. The law of Kentucky only requires a hundred names to a petition for county officers, but 400 names shall be signed to a petition before a candidate for Congress could go upon an official ballot. It is perfectly clear from the evidence that these ignorant negroes did not know that was the law, for they circulated their petitions and only obtained 104 signers to all the petitions they circulated. In that case the candidate for Congress could not go upon the official ballot, notwithstanding the petition recited that fact. These petitions were filed with the county clerk, and nobody knew what action he was about to take.

It is stated by the gentleman from New York, who represents the majority, that all these petitions asked for the emblem of the "eagle about to fly." It is not true. They did not ask for that emblem. Doubtless they expected to secure it; doubtless they thought their petitions were sufficient to secure it; but yet they were not. I want to read to the House what they say in each one of these petitions. Only three of them were circulated. I want to read to you just what they say in these petitions in reference to this emblem. They describe the emblem in the first petition that it be "delegated under the flop of the picture of an eagle." That is their petition. Does that show that they wanted the "eagle about to fly?" Remember this petition says, "and the ticket shall be 'delegated.'" What does that mean? I do not know. The ticket shall be under "the flop of the picture of an eagle." Remember, it is the "picture" that is to "flop" and not the "eagle" itself. And then we come to the next petition, "Straight Republican ticket, designated under the picture of an eagle." That is all it says. By the "picture of an eagle;" and the same description is given in the third and last petition. Now read the certificate of nomination made up by the officials of the Republican convention that nominated Mr. Hopkins, the contestant. "Title of the party, Republican; device, the 'eagle about to fly.'" There is no uncertainty about the Republican selection. It is the "eagle about to fly."

Now, these were the petitions filed by the county court clerk, and notwithstanding that fact he goes to work and puts the Republican emblem upon the ticket that was petitioned for, and he leaves the place where the name of a Congressman should appear entirely blank, so that every man that voted that ticket could not vote for Congressman, although he intended to vote for him.

INAUGURATION CEREMONIES.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman to yield to me—not to be taken out of his time, just for a moment—to pass a Senate joint resolution on account of the inauguration? We can do it in two minutes.

Mr. SAYERS. It will not take two minutes.

Mr. ROYSE. Very good; I yield for that purpose.

Mr. HENDERSON. It is necessary to pass it so as to get good stands.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations to report back a Senate joint resolution to enable the Secretary of the Senate to pay the expenses of the inaugural ceremonies, and I ask unanimous consent to place it upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois, chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, reports back Senate joint resolution 201, and asks unanimous consent for its present consideration. The Clerk will report the joint resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Resolved, etc., That to enable the Secretary of the Senate to pay the necessary expenses of the inaugural ceremonies of the President and Vice-President of the United States, March 4, 1897, in accordance with the programme adopted by the committee of arrangements appointed under resolution of the Senate of the 10th day of December, 1896, including the pay for extra police for three days, at $3 per day, there is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, the same to be immediately available.

Mr. CANNON. I have only to say that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] informed me that they have looked into this matter, and that it ought to pass, and it carries about the usual amount. I ask that the resolution may be put on its passage.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, there is no possibility that anybody here has the slightest knowledge of what that resolution is.

Mr. CANNON. I will tell the gentleman in just a moment.

The SPEAKER. One moment. The gentleman is right, and the House is not in order. It is impossible to hear what is said while members do not preserve order. Gentlemen will please take their seats. The Clerk will read the resolution again.

The resolution was again read.

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Speaker, if there is no question about it, I ask that it be placed on its passage.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I do not see that any question that was sought to be raised can be raised upon this resolution.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the resolution.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, before the resolution is passed, I see the appropriation there is $5,000 for the purpose of paying police at $3 a day. Now, it does seem to me that the resolution ought to be qualified and say, "or so much thereof as may be necessary."

Mr. SAYERS. That is in there.

The SPEAKER. That is in the resolution.

The question was taken on the passage of the resolution; and it was accordingly passed.

On motion of Mr. CANNON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LACEY. I ask the gentleman if he will not yield to me long enough for the presentation of a conference report?

Mr. ROYSE. I think I can not do that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE—HOPKINS VS. KENDALL.

Mr. ROYSE. Mr. Speaker, I was stating the fact that these petitions were not sufficient to secure the emblem of the "eagle about to fly." I want to state another fact. These petitions were not sufficient to admit this ticket upon the official ballot at all. The law of Kentucky provides that, in order to get the ticket for local offices upon the official ballot, the petition shall be signed by 100 legal voters of the county, and then it expressly provides that no signer of the petition shall be counted unless he gives his post-office address and residence. Ten of the men who signed their names to these petitions failed to give their post-office address, and, under the express language of the statute, those names can not be counted. The total number of names attached to these petitions is 104. Strike out the 10 that can not be counted and you have left only 94; so that the petitions were not sufficient. Though they had recommended the proper device, they were not sufficient to warrant that ticket being placed upon the official ballot, and the act of the clerk in placing that ticket upon the official ballot was entirely unwarranted.

Now, the Republican party knew nothing of this transaction of the clerk until the morning of the election. Every Republican in that county of Clark believed that the emblem of his party would appear at the head of his ticket. These ballots, under the law, were to be distributed and sent to the precincts three days before the election. The law provided, also, that accompanying these ballots should be eight "instructive ballots"—ballots prepared for the instruction of the voters, sample ballots, and that these also should be sent out three days before the election.

Mr. MOODY. If the gentleman will pardon a correction, it is "within three days," not "three days before."

Mr. ROYSE. Well, within three days. I do not care whether it is within three days or, as I stated it, three days before. These ballots should have been at each precinct three days prior to the election, and the sample ballots should have been sent with them, but the ballots were not sent out until the morning of the election, and even then not a single sample ballot was sent with the bundles of ballots—not one. There were no sample ballots at a single precinct in Clark County except one, and the way they got there was that the officers of election went to the clerk on the morning of election day and obtained the sample ballots and took them out to the precinct. That was the condition of things on the morning of the election as the Republicans marched to the polls to vote their ticket.

Now, the question is, first, How many votes did the contestant lose by this fraudulent transaction? I shall maintain hereafter that this ticket was wholly invalid, that it was not prepared according to the directions of the law, and therefore was unofficial and consequently invalid, but for my present purpose I propose to discuss it upon the theory presented by the majority of the committee, and the question is, How many votes did the contestant lose by this fraudulent transaction? And remember one thing before we approach that question: Remember that the Republican party had a right to their emblem. It was the eagle. It was the emblem of our country. There is a degree of majesty and grandeur in that bird. It inspires patriotism in the bosom of every American citizen. The Republicans had a right to that emblem and they had a right to the use of that emblem as an appeal to the patriotism of every citizen and voter in Clark County. But that emblem was torn down from the head of their ticket and in its stead was placed the odious raccoon. [Laughter.]

Mr. HYDE. If a question will not interrupt the gentleman, I would like to ask one. What is and has been the attitude of the contestee toward these frauds, or alleged frauds?

Mr. ROYSE. I do not know. The evidence is silent upon that subject. He has got the profit of them. That is all I know.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman will modify his language with reference to that famous animal of 1840, "the same old coon." [Laughter.]

Mr. ROYSE. Mr. Speaker, if that was the only thing in question here, I would modify it, but in the particular region where this election occurred there is an odium attaching to the name of that animal. [Laughter.]

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. Let me ask the gentleman whether that substituted emblem was not simply used as a burlesque upon the "coon?"

Mr. ROYSE. There is no question about that. It was used as a burlesque, and even the darky will fight if you call him a "coon." [Laughter.]

Mr. RAY. The gentleman has stated that he proposes to discuss the question of how many votes the Republican party lost by reason of this substitution of emblems.

Mr. ROYSE. Yes.

Mr. RAY. I would like to know whether there is any mode by which it is possible to ascertain the exact number of votes lost, or whether it must be left to pure conjecture.

Mr. ROYSE. I think it is capable of a fair demonstration.

Mr. RAY. Then is it demonstrated that enough votes were lost to change the result for member of Congress?

Mr. ROYSE. Yes; I think so. Mr. Speaker, when the Republicans went to the election on that morning they found only this ballot for them to vote. This fraudulent ballot, this iniquitous thing, was the only ballot they had. On the reverse side of this paper is the ticket as it ought to have been prepared, with only two columns to it, the rooster at the head of the Democratic ticket and the American eagle at the head of the Republican ticket; but when they came to vote, there is the ticket [exhibiting it] they were required to vote. This was not discovered until the Republican voters had gone into the booths to mark their ballots. Then there was the wildest consternation among the Republican voters. They returned from the booths and refused to vote that ticket. They gathered in groups around the polls and were harangued by Republican leaders, many of whom were indignant, chagrined, and mortified at the tremendous fraud, and advised the honest voters to go home and not vote at all. That this was done is unmistakable and indisputable. The proof of it is abundant in this record. One man says that he privately went to 12 or 15 men and advised them to go home and not to vote the ticket.

The same witness says, on another occasion, that he publicly addressed some 75 or 100 Republicans and told them to go home and not vote the Republican ticket on that day. And I want to read what another Republican leader says on the subject. The question was asked him:

> What did you do, after having discovered the character of said ballot, in advising Republicans not to vote?
> A. I advised them not to vote. I left that precinct and went to the Court-House precinct, Winchester precinct, and Fairfax precinct, and at each of these precincts advised the Republicans not to vote; also advised all Republicans I met on the streets not to vote.

It is unquestionable, Mr. Speaker, that a large number of the Republicans went to their homes and refused to vote that ticket. It is true that later in the day the Republican leaders undertook to rally the Republican forces and get them to the polls and have them vote the ticket. A great number did return, but how many we can not tell, nor how many were deterred from voting. But here is a significant fact——

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. ROYSE. Yes.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Is it not a fact, in connection with the question the gentleman has now suggested—that is, as to the inability to tell how many Republican voters were prevented from voting by reason of this alleged fraud—that this House passed a resolution in the last days of the last session of Congress, in which they extended the time within which the contestant might take such testimony as would give to the Committee on Elections every particle of information that was available on that subject? We extended the time until the 1st of November, 1896. And yet is it not true that the contestant came back without a word of testimony on the subject to which the gentleman is now referring?

Mr. ROYSE. Part of the question of the gentleman from Georgia I will answer in the affirmative, that we did give the time; and as to the balance I will answer that in the time so extended he did bring forward substantial proof that would convince any reasonable man that the contestant did lose a large number of votes by reason of this fraudulent ticket. [Applause on the Republican side.]

One witness testified that he believed that the contestant lost from 300 to 400 votes by reason of this fraudulent ticket; and that evidence was not contradicted by any other single witness who was brought forward.

But there is another fact that I wish to be brought out specially. This Congressional district for several years prior to this election had been carried by the Democrats with a majority of from 2,000 to 3,000. At this election in 1894 the majority returned for contestee was only 253. Now, how was this accomplished? By the Republican candidate, the contestant in this case, gaining votes in every county in the Congressional district except this county of Clark. In every one of them there was a uniform gain. In the county of Floyd, for instance, the home of the contestee, the Republican candidate gained over 600 votes. He gains on an average uniformly through the various counties of the district 31 per cent; but when it comes to the county of Clark, he did not keep up with the average Republican vote.

Mr. RAY. Now, in that very connection, I would ask the gentleman, how do you connect the loss, or the gain, as you claim—how do you connect the loss with the fraudulent tickets or emblems?

Mr. ROYSE. I will show you presently.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Now, if the gentleman will permit me——

Mr. ROYSE. I must decline to be interrupted for the present.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I know you do not wish to misstate the evidence to the House.

Mr. ROYSE. No, sir; and I am not doing anything of the kind.

Now I will show how I make the connection to which the gentleman from New York has referred. It is only reasonable and proper to suppose that the Republican candidate, gaining in every other county in the district, should have gained in this county also. There is no reason in the world why he should not gain here, except for the presence of this fraudulent ballot. The interests of the people are the same; the county of Clark is the "blue-grass" county, and is similar in interest to all of the other counties of the district. Therefore it will be only reasonable to suppose that the same sentiment would prevail in reference to this election throughout that county that is found so clearly demonstrated in all of the others.

Now, I wish to speak of another matter right here.

Mr. DANIELS. Before the gentleman leaves this point, I would like to ask if it is not agreed to by the counsel for both sides that the Republican voters in Clark County attending the election and desiring to vote were given fair and full opportunity to do so and that the votes were counted and certified as cast?

Mr. ROYSE. Yes; it was agreed that all of the Republican voters who went to the polls and wanted to vote that ticket voted it, and there was nothing to hinder them. That is the agreement, and nothing else.

But I do not care what the agreement is; I do not care a straw for it. There is no contradiction in this evidence. There is no contradiction anywhere of the evidence that fraud of this character was permitted. The majority of the committee agree that it was committed. The majority of the committee agree that the contestant lost 79 votes by what had occurred, and I agree to that; but I insist that he lost more than 79 votes.

I want to state another fact—that there was a larger vote cast in this Congressional district by nearly 4,000 than had been cast since 1884, so that it shows that in this Congressional district for ten years prior to this election there had been a large number of voters who did not go to the polls and vote, but at this election of 1894 these people turned out. They increased the Democratic vote of the district and the Republican vote of the district, notwithstanding this ballot. There was an increase of 3,155 Republican votes. Why was it that these men were going to the polls and voting, and uniformly, or with only rare exceptions, voting the Republican ticket? And why would they not do it in the county of Clark? Simply because they were compelled to vote a ticket at the head of which was this odious coon; and it was placed there for the purpose of preventing them from voting that ticket. Now, I am surprised that the contention should be put forth here that the injury to this man shall be measured by the average Republican vote of that county. If you would measure it by the average Republican vote of that county, why not measure it by the vote of all the other counties, and throw out the 3,155 votes which were gained in the balance of the district, if that rule applies?

If that rule applies, why go to the polls to vote at all, on the Republican side? Why not leave their ticket off of the ballot entirely? The county clerk can do it if he wants to be corrupt. He can leave the Republican ticket off of the ballot, and when he leaves it off, the Republicans who go to the polls can not vote any ticket except the Democratic ticket. If the clerk should do it, then our friends upon the other side would come in here and say, "Why, no harm is done; you could not elect your man anyhow." That is the logic of their reasoning. What I maintain is that the Republicans of Clark County have a right to vote, whether they win or lose. [Applause on the Republican side.] They have a right to vote their ticket, and no villainous clerk of Clark County or any other county of this district has the right to hinder them from casting their ballots to express their honest sentiments.

Mr. BRODERICK. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question there?

Mr. ROYSE. Yes.

Mr. BRODERICK. I understand that under the law of Kentucky it is the duty of the clerk to prepare the tickets and send them out to the several voting precincts.

Mr. ROYSE. It is, unquestionably.

Mr. BRODERICK. Were there any legal Republican tickets at any of the precincts in this county?

Mr. ROYSE. None at all. There were no tickets at all except that bogus ticket. That is the only ticket that was voted in Clark County at all.

Mr. RAY. Now, right there, I should like to ask the gentleman a question. The gentleman states that he thinks voters remained away.

Mr. ROYSE. Yes.

Mr. RAY. Who did not go there at all, by reason of this ticket, simply because if they went to vote they would be compelled to vote under the emblem of this coon?

Mr. ROYSE. Yes.

Mr. RAY. Now, I want to ask this simple question: Is there any evidence that Republicans stayed away from the polls by reason of that, or is it mere conjecture?

Mr. ROYSE. It is not mere conjecture. I have already gone over this evidence and shown to you that the contestant uniformly gained 31 per cent in every other county.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Now, if he had gained that per cent in Clark County, would he have been elected?

Mr. ROYSE. Why, if he had only gained 10 per cent, he would have been elected. [Applause on the Republican side.] That is all that he required. Ten per cent of gain would have elected him.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Will it interrupt the gentleman if I ask him a question?

Mr. ROYSE. I must proceed with my remarks. Now, the majority returned for the contestee is only 253, and that comes from the certificate of the secretary of state, but the clerk of Clark County certifies to us the total vote of that county, and it does not agree with the certificate of the secretary of state. By the evidence certified to us by the clerk of Clark County there ought to be 50 deducted from the majority of the contestee, and that reduced his majority down to 203. Then, if you deduct from that the 79 votes which the majority of the committee say ought to be deducted from it, you have a majority of only 124 for the contestee, only a small majority to overcome, only a gain of 8 votes to the precinct, only a gain of 10 per cent in this county.

I want to refer to another thing. There was a registration law in force at the four precincts of the town of Winchester. When that registration was taken, in one precinct—that of Fairfax—there were 104 Republican voters registered, and the election returns show that only about 60 of the 104 voted, a loss of 40 per cent in one precinct alone. That is the condition of this thing. If we had had a registration all over the county, the same figures would appear.

Now, that is the condition of this thing. We have certified to us in the record from the clerk of Clark County that the assessor of that county reports that there were 4,045 voters in that county in 1894. Four thousand and forty-five legal voters in the county; and yet at this election only 3,300 and a little over voted, leaving 700 voters who stayed at home and refused to vote. Why was this? On the morning of the election, as soon as this was discovered, these Republicans returned to their homes, and the burden of proof is upon the other side to show that they came back and voted. I want to say further than this, the Republican party has the right to go among Democrats of that county and electioneer for their candidates. It is wrong to say that his injury can be measured by the extent of the Republican vote of that county. The Republicans had the right, and ought to have the privilege, to appeal to every single Democratic voter in that county and ask them to vote that ticket; but a white Democrat in that county would have his right arm torn off before he would vote under a "coon;" and he would have to vote under a "coon" or not vote the Republican ticket. That is the reason why the Democratic candidate fell behind his average vote, and that is the reason why the Republican candidate fell behind the average Republican vote.

Mr. PEARSON (exhibiting a ballot). This is a "coon about to steal," instead of an "eagle about to fly." [Laughter.]

Mr. ROYSE. That was what the coon was doing—stealing the votes of the Republican party in that county. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.] Now, then, there is another question about this. Here is the evidence, uncontradicted in this record; and they propose to measure the extent of this man's injuries by simply comparing it with the average Republican vote of that county.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I wish to approach another phase in this case, and that is in reference to this ballot. It was fraudulent, all admit; prepared in contravention of the law, all admit.

Mr. COLSON. Does not the majority report say that?

Mr. ROYSE. Both reports say it was prepared in violation of law, not under any mistake, not under any innocent misconstruction of the law by the clerk, but a corrupt plan to cheat and to defraud the Republican voters. That is absolutely manifest and uncontradicted from the evidence in this case. What will we do as to this ballot? The evidence of the clerk who prepared that ballot was taken; and, as I said a while ago, he testified that he knew that the Republican party was using the emblem the "eagle about to fly." But I will tell you that clerk has the forehead to sit down and solemnly swear in the presence of God that he thought he was doing right. [Laughter.] That is the conscience of that clerk. In the hands of such a man as that, is the elective franchise of the honest voters of Clark County safe?

Mr. HOPKINS. That clerk was a Democrat?

Mr. ROYSE. That clerk was a Democrat.

Mr. COLSON. And a Democratic clerk in Kentucky does not consider it any wrong to swear to a lie in an election, if it affects a Republican.

Mr. ROYSE. Not only that; the majority report gives this clerk a sound scolding, and says he was extremely "naughty" for doing this thing.

Mr. PEARSON. Did they use that word "naughty?"

Mr. ROYSE (continuing). And practically said, "Don't you do this thing again." Now, how do you know he will not? Why, let me tell you one thing which is outside the record. That clerk was the next year elected secretary of the Democratic central committee of Clark County and rewarded for his fault. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.] He was whitewashed, and this report of the majority of the committee proposes to whitewash him further for the crime he committed. Now, should that ballot be counted at all? It was the only ballot voted in that county. The condition of the State of Kentucky is peculiar. Prior to 1891 voting was done viva voce, so that if any ballot had been used in voting by any party it would have been illegal, and would not be recognized. But she concluded to adopt the Australian ballot system, and did so, and in order to do that she had to ingraft it in the constitution of her State. So in 1891 she remodeled her constitution, and she said by the fundamental law of that State:

All elections by the people shall be by secret official ballot, furnished by public authority to the voters at the polls and marked by each voter in private at the polls, and then and there voted.

Kentucky is ahead, perhaps, of any other State in the Union, because she has put this reform into the fundamental law of the State. Part of the same law provides that at the meeting of the first assembly after the adoption of this constitutional provision the general assembly of the State shall provide laws to carry into execution this provision. The legislature went to work to provide laws to carry out this constitutional provision. It is a very elaborate election law, and as carefully prepared as any other election law in any of the States of the Union. It is systematic, uniform, and logical in all of its arrangements. I want to read to you the first section of the law in reference to that ballot:

In all elections—

Mark you—

In all elections hereafter held in this State on any subject which may be submitted to a vote of the people for all State, district, county, and municipal offices, except school trustees and other common-school district elections, the vote shall be by secret official ballot, furnished and distributed as hereinafter provided, and no other ballot shall be used.

The law proceeds and gives the most minute and careful directions to the clerk as to the preparation of the ballot. He acts ministerially in the preparation of that ballot. He has no authority to put anything in that ballot except what the law says shall go into that ballot. He has no right to leave out anything which the law says shall be there. Now, it is admitted on all hands that the clerk did not construct that ballot according to the law of the State of Kentucky. And at this point let us settle one thing—the people of Kentucky have no right to vote except as prescribed by the laws of that State. The Constitution of the United States grants no privilege to the citizens of Kentucky to vote. The regulations of voting are wholly provided for by State authority, not by the Constitution of the United States. That is well settled. It has been decided by this House in a case from the State of Missouri, from which I will read an extract. This case arose under the reconstruction acts of Missouri. Every reconstructed State had the same law prohibiting men from voting unless they could take an oath that they had never entered into rebellion or insurrection against the United States or the State. It was contended that that law was unconstitutional, and that the citizen had a right to vote notwithstanding the law, but this House solemnly affirmed its opinion to the contrary. I read:

Each of the States of the Union have hitherto regulated suffrage within their own limits for themselves, and in such a manner as the people of the State deemed most conducive to their own interests and welfare. Suffrage is a political right or privilege which every free community grants to such number and class of persons as it deems fittest to represent and advance the wants and interests of the whole. No State grants it to all persons, but with such limitations as the interests of all and the interest of the State require.

Kentucky had the right to say just how her elections should be conducted and just what a man must do in order to be entitled to vote. It is not sufficient that the constitution and laws of Kentucky say that a man may vote. It is just as important that the law provide some solemn method by which his vote shall be cast and counted.

Now, the State of Kentucky has provided that no other ballot than the official ballot shall be used in her elections. That is a constitutional provision. In obedience to that, the legislature of the State of Kentucky provided for this official ballot, and then, in express terms, said that no other ballot should be used at elections. What is the "use" of a ballot? It is not simply that it may be voted. That is one use of a ballot, but another use of that ballot is to count it, and the law of Kentucky says that a ballot shall not be "used," either in voting or in counting, unless it is the official ballot.

Mr. PEARSON. I would like to ask the gentleman a question at this point: What majority is given to the contestee in this county of Clark if the ballot in question was not a legal one?

Mr. ROYSE. I can not answer that exactly at this moment, but I will state that if the county of Clark is entirely thrown out the contestant is elected.

Mr. PEARSON. That is what I wanted to know.

Mr. ROYSE. No man can vote in Kentucky unless he votes as the law directs, and the ballot which he votes must be the official ballot. The legislature could not provide for anything else. Any law that would authorize anything else than an official ballot would be unconstitutional. And when you leave the constitution and the law of Kentucky you have nothing upon which you can base the right of the citizen of Kentucky to vote. It will not do to say that he can vote any way or in any manner, because if a voter of the State of Kentucky should step up to the polls and should undertake to vote viva voce, as they used to vote prior to the enactment of this law, his vote could not be counted. It might express the honest sentiment and conviction of the voter, and it might be honestly counted (if it could be counted at all), but, not being a legal vote, it could not be counted. How does the voter in Kentucky vote? By ballot. What kind of a ballot? Any kind of a ballot? No; nothing but an official ballot, prepared as the law directs. No other ballot can be voted legally in the State of Kentucky. It will not do to say the clerk can simply stamp this as an official ballot. It will not do to say the clerk can put his initials on the back of the ballot, as the law requires, and that then it becomes equivalent to an official ballot. What makes an official ballot? Not simply the certificate of the clerk, but the substance of the ballot, and in substance the ballot in question here was a fraud. In substance that ballot was in violation of the law. Now, there must be some law to support this ballot, or else it can not be counted. Under the law of Kentucky it can not be counted. What law, then, have you to support it? None in the world.

The honorable gentleman from New York [Mr. DANIELS] cited one case yesterday which appeared to be in point, but had he gone back two or three years further he would have found another case absolutely contradicting that. That case was simply this: The law of New York provided that in sending out the official ballots the number of each precinct should be put upon the back of the ballots, and in sending out the ballots at the election in question precinct No. 1 got the ballots that were intended for precinct No. 2, and precinct No. 2 got the ballots intended for precinct No. 1. Those ballots were voted, and the supreme court of New York held that they were not official ballots, and refused to count them. There you have two cases in absolute conflict so far as principle is concerned. I have been unable to reconcile them except upon one proposition. In the case I have just referred to, where the votes were thrown out, one of the judges of the court says there was proof that this was fraudulently and criminally done, and the authorities all draw a distinction between a thing which is done fraudulently, unlawfully, and criminally and a thing which is innocently done. But in this Kentucky case the thing was not done innocently. It was done fraudulently and criminally. In the report of the minority attention has been called to a number of authorities holding this ballot illegal.

I simply want to call the attention of the House again to the cases reported from the State of Connecticut. There were two cases decided by the supreme court of that State which, if applied to the case now before us, would cast out these ballots as invalid. In the one case, cited in the minority report, the clerk in making out the official ballot added the words "ex officio registrar of births, deaths, and marriages," and put into the ticket a man's name as candidate for probate judge, when no such judge was to be elected. In that case the supreme court of the State of Connecticut held that the ballot was illegal because the words "ex officio registrar of births, deaths, and marriages" had been added, and because the name of some man as a candidate for probate judge was placed on the ticket, when there was no such office to be voted for.

Other cases have been cited in the minority report. One extremely strong case, originating in the State of Montana, is cited, where the supreme court of the State reviewed all the English authorities from which we derive our Australian ballot system, and the provisions are held to be mandatory in all of these cases.

We have cited a large number of other cases in the minority report which relate directly to the matter, but it seems that the majority of the committee have been able to find only a single case which squints toward maintaining the validity of these ballots.

It is said, too, Mr. Speaker, that if we throw out the vote of this county we disfranchise some legal voters. True, we will, perhaps, disfranchise some of those who voted the Democratic ticket innocently. But you must remember that when the Democratic voters came to the precinct nothing was wrong with their ticket. Soon after the opening of the polls, however, it became noised about that this fraud was perpetrated. But every Democrat who voted the ticket knew that his ballot was not properly prepared, and it was no secret to the majority of the men who voted it, because they had full knowledge of the fact.

But we must not look alone to this election. The law of Kentucky proposes to secure an honest ballot. Kentucky is to be commended for the course she has sought to pursue in order to secure the purity of elections in that State. Kentucky should not only be commended but encouraged in her efforts. If you maintain the law in its integrity, if you enforce every provision of the law, there will be honest elections in Kentucky. [Applause on the Republican side.] Break it down and you break down all hope of honest elections. Break down the law, throw aside these provisions, destroy all of these principles by judicial construction, and you open the door to the widest and most glaring frauds, and no man can tell hereafter whether there can be an honest election in that State or not. [Applause.] What will be the effect of the action proposed here on the part of the majority? What will be the effect in making up the ballots hereafter in the State of Kentucky? The clerk of the court next year in making up the ticket may leave off entirely from the official ballots the Republican candidates, and he can do it under the principle sought to be enforced here. It is no greater violation of the law than he has already committed. He leaves the Republican ticket off altogether and no Republican can vote. A contest is had over the fact that the Republicans were deprived of the privilege of voting, and when they come to the House and claim that they should have had that privilege, we refer them to the action here to-day proposed to be taken. We hold up in their faces the majority decision here and tell them it does not matter whether they voted or not, they could not have elected their candidate, and hence they have no right to vote unless they can elect their man. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, there is but one way to secure purity of elections throughout the country, and that is to uphold the law. It can not be otherwise accomplished. Let the word go forth that if the clerk of that county violates the law, willfully and corruptly, and disfranchisement should result to the voters of that county, the people will see to it that no such clerk can hold that office again. They will see to it that the law is obeyed. It is useless to have courts to prosecute offenders, it is useless to have prosecuting officers or to enact penal statutes. What we want is a strong moral public sentiment behind the law. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has consumed one hour.

Mr. ROYSE. I would like to have about three minutes longer, with the consent of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks consent to be permitted to proceed for three minutes longer.

There was no objection.

Mr. ROYSE. I want to say now, Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, that the only way to secure honest and pure elections in that State is to uphold and maintain the law. When you violate it in one respect, there is no place where you can stop. The clerk of that county can leave off the Republican ticket, or place on the ballot, instead of it, men of his own selection. He can violate the law in all directions and in any respect he pleases; yet the ballot must be an official ballot. But let it be known to the men who vote that ticket—let it be known that if the clerk of the county tampers with the official ballot it means disfranchisement to the voters, and they will put that man into the penitentiary the next time he undertakes to commit such a crime. That will stop this infernal abuse, and they will not elect such men as their county clerks in future. [Applause.]

That is the only way in the world to secure pure and honest elections in that State. I am in favor of the enforcement of the law. The time has come in this country that the law should be rigidly enforced, and it should be upheld, for outside of the law there is nothing but chaos and anarchy. [Applause.]

Within the pale of this law every voter of Kentucky is secure. Within the pale of this law and its rigid enforcement every man can vote his honest sentiments. Outside of it no man's right is secure, and if you want to secure the elective franchise and prevent the disfranchisement of legal voters, see to it that the laws of Kentucky are faithfully executed. [Applause.]

Mr. DANIELS. I yield twenty minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DINSMORE].

Mr. DINSMORE. Mr. Speaker, my distinguished friend and colleague on the Committee on Elections [Mr. ROYSE] who has just taken his seat has exhibited a most laudable desire in his expressions for the purity of the ballot and fair elections, and the administering of punishment to those who violate the laws; but in his peroration he included also the statement that he wanted the enforcement of law.

The law should not only be enforced rigidly in the conduct of elections, but the House of Representatives, when it comes to consider a case like the one before us, should endeavor to proceed under guidance of the law, and not be influenced by partisan appeals.

I only desire to ask the indulgence of the House for a very few moments, and I want briefly and succinctly to get before the House, or such members of it as will honor me with their attention, a few points in this case.

In the first place, seven of the committee have presented the majority report and two have offered their views in a minority report.

It is agreed by the majority that the action of the clerk in Clark County is unlawful, that he did not proceed according to the direction of the statute. That is as far as I, a member of this committee, have agreed. I have never consented that it was done for the purpose of defeating the contestant, who was a candidate for Congress at that time. On the other hand, I have found it to be the view of almost the whole of the committee that nobody, in the conducting of the election in question as to the ballots complained of, had in view the Congressional election.

Mr. Speaker, neither the clerk of Clark County nor any other Democrat inaugurated the proceedings under which this ticket which is complained of was put before the people to be voted by them. I want the House to understand the beginning of it. The negroes of Clark County became dissatisfied with the conduct of political affairs in that county. They became so because they were excluded from participation in the benefits of party organization, and I want to read the very beginning of it all. A Republican paper, published in the county seat of that county, edited by K. J. Hampton, who was a witness in this case and who was the chairman of the Republican committee of that district—in the columns of his paper he published this editorial:

THE NEGRO VOTE.

We hope we have made ourselves clearly understood upon the subject in the articles that have heretofore appeared, but to recapitulate: The negro vote, as a dominant factor in the Republican party, arrays Southern majorities against that party, it makes no difference what are its principles. The same influence makes pure local government impossible. Then, what course should Republicans pursue toward this vote? Cease to make special appeals to it. Do not attempt to organize it. The colored men who are at heart Republicans will vote their sentiments, and those who are inclined to drift can do so. The great Republican party owes the colored vote of the South no debts. The debt is all the other way, and the nomination of a negro to public office is not good policy under present conditions. It is not good for the negro race, and offends the just sense of propriety in the South.

That is what caused the dissatisfaction among the Republicans, Mr. Speaker. Immediately the negroes became dissatisfied. They recognized a movement not inspired by any Democrat to deprive them of any participation in the fruits of possible victory, and they held their meetings and passed resolutions, and agreed to put a straight Republican ticket in the field, and protested against the action of white Republicans. They did this of their own motion, and without instigation of Democrats. They got out their ticket under the law, and petitioned for a ballot and for the emblem of the eagle.

Now, that brings us down to the point where the tickets were put out and where, I have already told you, the clerk did not act in conformity with law; but when you read the whole election law of the State of Kentucky, you can readily see where that clerk might have made an honest mistake, because in one provision of that law it says that where two parties claim the same emblem, or two sets of petitioners claim the same emblem, that the clerk shall decide between the two and give it to the party which claims it first. It is true that the Republican party had adopted that emblem in 1892, and it was the duty of the clerk to make that the emblem of the Republican party on this occasion. He did not do so. Therein he failed to conform to the law. But, Mr. Speaker, even if he did this willfully and intentionally, as many of the committee believe he did, but as I will not say he did, we still hold that it does not make that ticket void, and it should have been counted, provided it can be ascertained from it what the true sentiments and intentions of the voters of the district was in the election.

I desire to call attention to the conditions which existed in that district at the time. It has been stated by my friend who has just taken his seat [Mr. ROYSE] that there were Republican gains all over Kentucky; that if there had been a gain of 10 per cent in that district, the Republican contestant would have been chosen.

I would call attention to the fact that this county has cast approximately its normal vote through all the elections during the last ten years in Kentucky. The gentleman says if there had been an increase of 10 per cent it would have elected the Republican. I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that two years before, in 1892, Mr. Lisle, the Democratic candidate for Congress, had a majority over his opponent greater than Mr. Kendall got over Mr. Hopkins in that contest. Mr. Kendall's majority in this county was 356, and Mr. Lisle's was 375 the year before. In 1892 Mr. Lisle's whole vote in the county of Clark was 1,974. Two years thereafter Mr. Kendall's whole vote was 1,844. In the election when Bradley carried the State of Kentucky over his Democratic opponent, Hardin, Bradley's vote, notwithstanding he was elected by 10,000 in the State, was 254 behind Hardin, his opponent, in the county of Clark—more than 100 votes less than Kendall received. This does not show any increase of Kendall's vote caused by the confusion that gentlemen insist resulted from the changing of the emblems.

Mr. Speaker, I say that this majority is about the same in different elections. Mr. K. J. Hampton, who was then the district chairman of the Republican committee, testified on oath that 1,600 was the normal Republican vote in that county, and the returns showed that Mr. Hopkins received 1,488 votes—an unusual approximation to the whole vote of a county, Mr. Speaker. It is seldom that a county makes a vote as full as this in an election; and in the same election there was a Democrat running against another Republican for a short term in Congress, and his Democratic majority in that county was not equal to Mr. Kendall's, and yet no complaint was made on the other side and no contest instituted. It has been said by my friend who has just concluded his remarks that it was admitted by a majority of all the committee that at least 79 votes were taken from Mr. Hopkins. We do not admit that. It may possibly have been so, and therefore we gave Hopkins the benefit of the doubt, and we credited him with 79 votes upon that ticket, under the "eagle" here, where Mr. Hopkins's name did not appear. I want to ask the House not to forget that there was an opportunity for those who voted this ticket to vote for a candidate for Congress by inserting it in the place provided for that purpose, and that those who wanted to vote their ticket could do so by making the change.

Mr. COLSON. How would the voter do that? You say he could vote for Hopkins by inserting his name. How could he do that?

Mr. DINSMORE. I state this to the gentleman: There is a blank left on the ticket for that purpose, and all he would have to do would be to write in his name.

Mr. COLSON. But under the law of Kentucky a name is not put on more than once.

Mr. DINSMORE. Certainly, but——

Mr. COLSON. I say that the name of a candidate is not allowed upon the ticket more than once.

Mr. DINSMORE. Surely, if it had been, it would have been printed twice.

Mr. COLSON. Then you say the voter could write it in.

Mr. DINSMORE. He could not write in the name in the blank, but, voting the ticket under the eagle, could cross over to the other and vote for Hopkins by placing a mark opposite his name, mark the part opposite Hopkins's name on the ticket, legally, and thereby cast a vote for him. I can not yield further to the gentleman for interruption, as my time is so limited.

Then, putting that all aside and giving him the 79 votes, which we have done, it is insisted here that there is evidence to show that many of the voters would have deposited their votes, but for this ticket, who failed to do so.

Mr. Speaker, when we were considering this question in the committee we adjourned it, as was stated by one of my colleagues on the floor, and obtained an order of the House in order that Mr. Hopkins might go home and secure testimony to show how many votes he had lost by these means. After months of time had elapsed he comes back, and all the evidence he has is the testimony of a preacher who has been proved to have been bribed in this case, who said, "in his opinion, he had lost several hundred votes," without being able to state a single man that failed to vote for him who wanted to vote for him. In addition to that, an agreement was made by both sides in this contest—by contestant and contestee—as follows: "It is agreed by both parties hereto." This is a part of the record, Mr. Speaker, and I want to call gentlemen's attention to the fact that this is in the record—an agreement signed solemnly and deliberately by the parties to this contest.

It is agreed by both parties hereto that all the Republican voters in Clark County who attended the election and desired to vote were given a fair and free opportunity to do so, and that their votes were counted and certified as cast.

Yet my friend says that the people who attended that election were driven away, turned off, advised by the Republicans there on the ground not to vote. The contestant agrees in this paper that everybody who attended that election who wanted to vote had an opportunity to do so, and that their votes were counted and certified.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Will the gentleman allow me to call his attention to one point?

Mr. DINSMORE. Not just now. If my friend will excuse me, I desire to pursue the course of my argument on the line of my present thought. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman has three minutes remaining.

Mr. TURNER of Georgia. There must be a mistake about that.

Mr. MCCREARY of Kentucky. You have seven minutes. You commenced at half past.

Mr. DINSMORE. It is suggested to me that I have seven minutes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was in doubt about it. The Chair is now informed that the gentleman has six minutes.

Mr. DINSMORE. Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to address myself to what I conceive to be the only point in this case, because the record is absolutely barren of evidence here that this contestant has been injured. He has had the scope of the whole time that he had originally by law, and it has been extended by the House and fully used. The only point that the minority make is that he has been injured, and when he fails by sufficient testimony to establish it they say that he should not be required to make much testimony, if any. The minority may prate of injury done to the contestant by what they are pleased to term wicked and glaring fraud; but, Mr. Speaker, there is positively no evidence that would be received in any court that he was injured at all. Search the record and find, if you can, where he lost a vote. The witness Hadley, the corrupted and bribed negro, swore that, in his opinion, many Republicans had gone away and not voted. He swore this before the Fifty-fourth Congress convened, and when the Congress said to contestant, "Go home and procure evidence, if you can, of how many went thus away, who were they, and bring us satisfactory proof," he comes back with nothing. No, Mr. Speaker; he was not injured. It is he who seeks to injure the people of Kentucky, and take an office which they said he should not have.

The question is, Was this a void ballot? The gentleman who took his seat a moment ago [Mr. ROYSE] said, with some derision, in his manner at least, that the venerable and distinguished chairman of this committee could find only one authority to support his contention, barely one. Why, sir, repeatedly have I heard my friend himself say that in his investigations he had found the authorities about equally divided upon this question, but when he comes into court, when he comes here armed for the contest in behalf of the contestant, he presents in his report three decisions of high judicial tribunals, and not one of them supports his contention. Mr. Speaker, the law, as is recognized by all courts, is, as stated by McCrary in his work on elections, substantially that—here is what he says; I read from McCrary on Elections, third edition, pages 124, 125, and 126:

If the statute expressly declares any particular act to be essential to the validity of the election, or that its omission shall render the election void, all courts whose duty it is to enforce such statute must so hold, whether the particular act in question goes to the merits or affects the result of the election or not. Such a statute is imperative, and all considerations touching its policy or impolicy must be addressed to the legislature. But if, as in most cases, the statute simply provides that certain acts or things shall be done within a particular time or in a particular manner and does not declare that their performance is essential to the validity of the election, then they will be regarded as mandatory if they do and directory if they do not affect the actual merits of the election. Ignorance, inadvertence, mistake, or even intentional wrong on the part of local officials should not be permitted to disqualify a district. Those provisions of a statute which affect the time and place of the election and the legal qualifications of the electors are generally of the substance of the election, while those touching the recording and return of the legal votes received and the mode and manner of conducting the mere details of the election are directory. The principle is that irregularities which do not tend to affect results are not to defeat the will of the majority.

That is the law, and every case which the gentleman from Indiana referred to in the minority report—I have them all here and would be glad to submit them to any gentleman who desires to examine them—every case that he submits is upon these lines. In every one of them it is held that where there was not an express provision to the contrary in the statute, the law is directory merely, but that where the statute itself says in definite terms that certain provisions must be complied with or else the transaction will be void, then the law is mandatory and must be so construed by the courts.

So, Mr. Speaker, my friend has held the attention of this House with emphasis and prolixity upon this question, and has brought into court here authorities which, instead of supporting his contention, are absolutely destructive of it. There is not an authority that I have been able to find pointing to any other conclusion, not one. All the authorities bear out the law as recognized by the adjudications of this House, and stated by those who have written with learning upon the subject of elections. The cases in the courts support that view, and if this House now turns out the sitting member in this case and seats Mr. Hopkins, it disfranchises the people of one of the districts of the State of Kentucky without just cause and in defiance of precedent and of law.

I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY].

Mr. ROYSE. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time, thirty minutes, to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. LINNEY].

Mr. LINNEY. Mr. Speaker, the House in this case is relieved almost entirely of the drudgery, as I shall denominate it, of wading through the evidence and of sifting it. The report of the majority of the committee is something like a report of facts on the part of a referee in a case referred to him and his conclusions of law upon the same, and therefore for the purposes of an intelligent discussion of the matter, in order to arrive at the facts in this case, it is only necessary, in my humble judgment, to look at the findings of facts in the majority report.

I call the attention of the House to those findings of facts. On the first page of the report it is found by the majority of the committee that the device under which the names of the candidates of the Democratic party appear was legally placed there. It is also found that the device under which the names of the candidates on the regular Republican ticket appear was legally placed there, to wit, the eagle about to fly. But it is found, on the second page of the report, that the action of the clerk in attempting to put another ticket upon that ballot was a fraud. Let us see if this statement is not correct. The gentleman from New York [Mr. DANIELS] who presented this report—and I understand it to be concurred in by the gentlemen who are now trying to sustain it here—the gentleman from New York says in this report:

> The object of framing this last ticket was to deceive illiterate persons intending to vote the Republican ticket and to lead and induce them to vote it, supposing and believing that in so doing they were voting the regular Republican ticket. And it did so deceive Republican voters, as it was intended it should deceive them.

Mr. DANIELS. The gentleman, of course, does not intend to suppress any part of the statement in the report.

Mr. LINNEY. Oh, no. I am going to read it all.

Mr. DANIELS. You will find that it proposes to transfer the 79 votes to the Republican ticket.

Mr. LINNEY. I am going to read it all, my friend. The more light we have on this case the more "transparent," as you said in your speech yesterday, will this miserable fraud appear to this body. [Laughter.] The report goes on to say:

> The ticket so framed on said petitions had no names or name of candidates for Representative in Congress, but at its head there was placed for its device or emblem the "eagle about to fly," and at the head of the Republican ticket was placed the "raccoon," in place of the selected device or emblem of the "eagle about to fly." And that was done by the clerk of Clark County for the purpose of further deceiving and inducing persons intending to vote the Republican ticket and to induce them to vote the said ticket framed on the authority of the said petitions.

Mr. HYDE. May I ask what the gentleman is reading from?

Mr. LINNEY. I am reading from the majority report filed in this case. I am reading the defense set up for the contestee. [Laughter and applause.] And I submit that if it were presented in the shape of a plea, and a demurrer had been filed thereto, and the question had been referred to the distinguished gentleman from New York, Judge DANIELS, who makes the report, and his judicial fairness called upon to deal with the matter, he would have sustained the demurrer. [Laughter and applause.]

What else? Here is a statement in the majority report that the action of this clerk was the result of a "conspiracy." It goes on to say, in the report to which I have already referred:

> That no notice or information of this change in the devices or emblems was given by said clerk prior to the morning of the election, and no sample tickets were posted or in any form had at either of the election precincts, as the law of the State of Kentucky required to be done within three days of the day of election; but the county clerk of said county, J. B. Ramsey, retained said sample ballot in order to avoid the discovery of his deceptive and unlawful act until he believed it would be too late to correct his act by informing the persons intending to vote the Republican ticket of this change and substitution in the device or emblem selected by the Republican party. When the change in the party device or emblem was discovered, on the morning of the day of election, the Republicans were requested by one or more of their leaders not to vote at the said election, because of the said change in their party device or emblem.

And then, further, he concedes that the Democrats in that county joined in this unlawful, unhallowed, ungodly device and purpose. [Applause and laughter.] And yet gentlemen say that the majority report is the foundation on which the contestee in the case claims the right to hold the high office he now occupies and that he has occupied for so long a time!

But what else? Why, he goes on further and says:

> That he—

That is, the county clerk—

> on account of that result, is none the less deserving of the severest censure for his fraudulent and official misconduct, and he really deserves to be punished for his crime.

[Laughter and applause.]

Why, of course he did, Mr. Speaker! Certainly he ought to have been punished for his crime. He ought to be in the penitentiary. [Renewed laughter and applause.] And why? Because he committed this fraud. Because he was guilty of the fraud which my dignified and learned friend from New York characterizes as a vicious and transparent fraud. [Laughter.] Now, what is the meaning of the word "transparent?" Webster, as one of the definitions of transparent, says it is "a painting on glass, so that you can see it by the natural light, without gas or artificial aid." [Laughter and renewed applause.]

But the majority of the committee propose to sustain this conspiracy, and by sustaining it the result is to deprive the contestant of his election. They tell us that the result of this conspiracy and this fraud was to affect his vote to the extent of only 70. I believe it is 70, is it not, Judge? [Laughter.]

Mr. PEARSON. Seventy-nine.

Mr. LINNEY. Seventy-nine. Well, let us see, now, what that means.

Mr. DANIELS. We say in the report of the majority of the committee that 79 voted on that ticket or disclosed clearly their intention to vote for the Republican candidate, and that number was transferred, therefore, from the Democratic ticket to the Republican ticket, and thus gives to contestant the full number to which he was entitled.

Mr. LINNEY. In other words, you admit that you stole, but did not steal enough. [Great laughter and applause.] You admit that you are a thief, but a sort of a baby thief, and did not exercise all of your ability. [Renewed laughter and applause.] Now, we of the minority take the position that this ballot is absolutely void. We will give you reasons for this opinion. Now, let me show you what the authorities say on this subject. I bottom my position on the high authority of McCrary on Elections. Listen to the following words:

> SEC. 402. Where a statute prohibits the marking of ballots so that they may be distinguished by others than the voter, and declares such ballots void, there is good reason for construing such statute as mandatory. Such marks destroy the secrecy of the ballot, and it is well known that the plan of voting by ballot, instead of viva voce, was adopted for the very purpose of securing to every voter absolute secrecy if he desires it, and protecting him therein, and this was thought necessary in order to place the poor and dependent voter in a situation where he may act according to his own judgment and without intimidation from the rich or powerful.

And again, I give you a citation on page 402 of the same authority:

> The court held, and we think upon the soundest reason, that as to those things over which the voter has control the law is mandatory, and that as to such things as are not under his control it should be held to be directory only.

I find that position sustained here by the learned argument of the distinguished gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND], made a few days ago in the case of Yost vs. Tucker. Now, let me see; and I want to see also whether gentlemen are going to blow hot and cold. The gentleman in that argument said:

> In this effort I insist that the law of the State of Virginia (there being no law of Congress to contravene) is the law of the Union in this case; is now the imperative rule of this House, from which there is no escape, of which there should be no evasion, and can be no evasion except by bodily, boldly, recklessly disregarding the Constitution.
>
> The election law of Virginia is the law of Congress for the time being with reference to this case. The law of Virginia as to how these elections should be conducted, how the returns should be ascertained, how the result should be declared, is the law of Congress upon the subject.
> The gentleman from New York asks me whether I am trying to maintain that Congress has no power to get at the intention of the voter—contrary, I suppose, to the express provision of the Virginia law, which, for the purposes of this case, is also our law. When he asks me whether this House has no power to get at the intention of the voter outside of the Virginia law, I say clearly the House has the power, but it is not the power of Constitution or law, it is the power of numbers. If the House acts within the law, it must ascertain results according to the law. If the House sees proper to disregard the law, then the question is one of power, is a matter determined by votes, and by nothing else.
> Then I say to the gentleman from New York that within the law, to the practice of which he and I were bred—within the law as it applies to this case, the Constitution of our common country and the statute law of the State of Virginia, untouched and unaffected by any legislation of the Federal Congress—within this supreme law of the land and this lesser but otherwise supreme law of the State of Virginia with respect to this case, there is no rightful authority in this [illegible]y to determine the case except by following the high law of the Constitution and the only less high law of the State of Virginia.

Further on he says:

> But what, Mr. Speaker, would be the result if the contention of the gentleman from New York be the correct one? I am speaking now of power. I concede, if you please, that the matter of power may be determined in this body upon a roll call. But I am addressing the House in the belief that it will endeavor to determine this question according to the Constitution and according to law.

But there is the idea of the learned gentleman, the logical and able gentleman from Missouri, prominent on this floor for his legal learning. It reflects credit upon him, and marks him as one of the most able lawyers to-day, even if he had done nothing else to justify that claim.

Now, Mr. Speaker, here, I maintain, is a legal proposition, tersely and clearly stated, which sustains the position that I take, and that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ROYSE] and others who agree with me take, that this ballot is an absolute nullity. Why do I say so? My friend the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DINSMORE] admitted that wherever a statute prohibits an act and says that if that act takes place the ballot shall not be counted, then the ballot is to be thrown out; that then it is mandatory; but he maintains that this statute has no such provision. In that my friend is mistaken, and there is the error into which the majority of the committee have fallen. I am satisfied that if the learned gentleman from New York [Mr. DANIELS]—who, by the way, is one of the most conscientious gentlemen I ever saw; he is getting too old to be otherwise now, you know [laughter]—if he had closely read this Kentucky statute, he never would have got himself into the trouble he is in by signing a report in favor of the contestee, when he says that the conduct of the election upon its face contained a transparent fraud in favor of the contestee. He never would have done that in the world. Now, what is the language of the Kentucky statute? In the first place, here is the language of the constitution of the great State of Kentucky, containing the provision for a secret ballot. Let me read a little of it:

> But all elections by the people shall be by secret official ballot, furnished by public authority to the voters at the polls, and marked by each voter in private at the polls and then there deposited. The word "election" in this section includes the decision of questions submitted to the voters as well as the choice of officers by them. The general assembly shall make provision so that persons illiterate, blind, or in any way disabled may have their ballots marked as herein required.

Here is a declaration in the constitution providing for the secrecy of the ballot, or rather securing every elector in his constitutional right, in the secrecy of the ballot, and all constitutional provisions are mandatory. There never was one which was directory unless it was so stated upon the instrument itself, because it is the fundamental law of the community, and all other statutes must conform to it.

Now, in pursuance of this provision or principle of the Constitution—which was intended to provide absolute secrecy to the voter, and which absolutely repeals the old viva voce system that previously existed—the legislature passed an act, and that act provides that a ticket shall be furnished as directed in the statute, which was not done in this case. That statute says that no other ticket shall be used. Now, the gentleman from New York [Mr. DANIELS] did not see that provision at all:

> Shall not be used.

My learned friend from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY] and everyone else will admit the force of my contention. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY] will admit it. You see if he does not; he can not help it; he is an honest man. He will admit, when he comes to argue this case, that if this statute contained the provision that such ballots shall not be counted, that that would be mandatory, and therefore the whole ballot would be a nullity. I know he will admit that, because he is too good a lawyer to destroy his reputation, and to rank only as a constable, which he would do by contending otherwise. [Laughter.] Then I maintain that this statute does more than that, or at any rate it comes fully up to that high standard which rests in the mind of my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY]. What does it say?

> Shall not be used.

Well, what is meant by the word "use?" Webster says it means to employ. When applied to a ballot, what does it mean? It means to be put into the box and counted. In other words, the performance of the function which the ballot is intended to perform, and every part thereof, is a use thereof. So, here we have the words—

> Shall not be used.

A term large enough to embrace the words—

> Shall not be counted.

If you have one term which is bigger than another, does not the greater always include the less? And yet gentlemen have been unable to see that. If they could have seen it, they would have been all right. But somehow or other they failed to see it. It may possibly be my bluntness, my stupidity, but I do not think it is in this case, upon an examination of it. So, Mr. Speaker, it turns out that this statute is mandatory, and it being admitted in the report of the majority of the committee that the proceeding was contrary to law and that it was founded in fraud, how can we possibly escape the conclusion that it is void—a void ballot?

Let me illustrate further. The old statute provided that the vote should be taken by viva voce at all elections. Now, suppose instead of holding this election by ballot it had been held by a viva voce vote. Would any lawyer contend that it would have been valid? The authorities all say it would have been void, utterly void. Suppose, on the other hand, the tickets that were voted had been printed upon leather instead of paper. Would anybody contend they would have been valid? Why, no; they would have been absolutely void. Suppose the election had been held at a place different from that stated in the statute. Does anybody claim it would have been valid? Certainly not. It would have been absolutely void. Suppose it had been held the day after the election, or at a time different from that stated in the statute. Does anybody claim that it would have been valid? Certainly not. Why? Because the statute is mandatory as to all those things, and therefore the election is an absolute nullity and is of no effect whatever. Let me go a little step further. We have finally a case from the State of North Carolina—noble North Carolina, as it will always be when represented by such fine, handsome men as my friend Mr. SETTLE and my talented and good friend Brother PEARSON. [Laughter.] Yes, the judiciary of North Carolina is equal to that of any in the Union, not excepting even Massachusetts, and there is this decision from that State.

Our statute says "such ballots shall not be counted." That is, where it has a distinct mark upon it. The name of J. E. Boyd was upon one, placed there, no doubt, for the purpose of being able to identify it, probably by some illiterate man; and when that vote came to be counted the election officer threw it out as being a nullity. There was no fraud in connection with the ballot. The ballot was exactly what it was intended to be, an entry made upon it. It could not have been for any other purpose. No fraud was suggested. And our supreme court held that that ballot was a nullity and threw it out, and it had no effect whatever in the result. What is this? Why, good gracious! let me show you. Where is that "coon" now? [Great laughter.]

What is this [exhibiting]? Here is a legal ballot. The gentleman from New York [Mr. DANIELS] admits in his report that this is the legal ballot. Well, now, if the pencil mark, with the name of "J. E. Boyd," on a ballot, in opposition to the express language of the statute, destroys it in North Carolina, and has that effect in Mississippi—and we quote the Mississippi case there—what would be the effect if we find a "coon" on it? [Laughter.] Gentlemen of the House, this man was actually cheated out of his votes, and I think I could establish it beyond controversy if my time would allow me. Why, it was contended by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DINSMORE] that there is no evidence here as to how many votes were lost. It is admitted in the majority report that there were 79. Let us see.

The contestant in this case made gains in that election in all of these counties: Breathitt, 153; Elliott, 190; Estill, 208; Floyd, 460; Johnson, 250; Knott, 162; Lee, 116; Magoffin, 204; Martin, 103; Menifee, 62; Montgomery, 257; Morgan, 233; Pike, 445; Powell, 97, and Wolfe, 215, being an aggregate of 3,155 votes; and in every one of those counties this legal ballot made its appearance and was voted by Democrats and by Republicans, in effect having no such infirmity as the result of a conspiracy or anything of that sort upon it. A clean ballot, a fair and honest vote, and it resulted in a gain in each and every one of these counties. But when you come to the county where the "coon" performed his part, what is the result? [Laughter.]

The result was a fall off of over 700. Does it look likely that he would lose 700, or a little over, when he had gained in each of the other counties? But the contestant gained none there. How was it? The same cause that operated in the other twelve counties would operate here. What was it? The "coon" played his part in Clark County, and did not in the other counties. What caused the change? A county presided over by the same God, watered by the same streams, moistened by the same dew, fully educated under the same influences, the same type of manhood—a noble type of manhood; a noble, grand American type—because I believe if there is a State that has a distinct type of people it is the Kentucky type—and yet there was a change. What produced the change, and that to the detriment of the Republican party? What cause operated? Nothing in the world but this illegal, fraudulent change, recognized by the majority of the committee; and here is the result. [Applause.]

It is here; proven beyond question. Besides, here is a witness who testifies that he knows something of that county, and he is of the opinion that the contestant lost over 400 votes, I believe it is, or upward of 300 or 400 votes. Does it not appear to the House of Representatives what caused that loss? Why, the Democratic party was represented by a splendid game rooster, the game cock. What does he represent? Superb courage; and courage is the highest quality of the soul. It is true he has not got much sense, but in that respect he does not lose much in the Democratic camp. [Great laughter.] He does represent the courage of the lion, no question about that; and our Democratic brethren went to battle under that emblem. That was the device selected by the Democrats in this district, in the great State of Kentucky, where they grow these six-footers, and I hardly ever saw one under that unless it is the contestee. [Laughter.] They marched proudly to the ballot under that emblem which represents courage, superb courage, which is the highest quality of the soul, to wit, the gamecock.

How did the Republicans in these other counties do? They marched under the eagle. What does the eagle represent? He represents not only courage and patriotism, but he is the best philosopher in the world. [Laughter.] Did you ever think of that? Lord Bacon says that the eagle would never die at all but for a wise provision of Congress [laughter]—I do not mean Congress, but by a slip of the tongue I said Congress, as being the next thing to what I did mean. [Laughter.] Lord Bacon says the eagle never would die at all but for a wise provision of the Almighty that when age comes upon him his bill crosses, and so he dies. The eagle has learned somehow or other that atmospheric pressure makes war upon his vitality, and therefore, unlike the gamecock, that knows nothing but to fight, he soars above the atmospheric elements that make war upon his life, and he would live eternally but for the edict of the Almighty providing for the crossing of his bill.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. Is not that frequently the fate of a Congressional "bill" also? [Laughter.]

Mr. LINNEY. I do not know about that. Under that proud emblem of the eagle the Republican party marched, and it marched victoriously wherever it had the eagle for its emblem unassociated with the miserable, thieving coon. [Laughter.] The gamecock was an inspiration to every Democrat, as the philosophic king of birds was to every Republican. What about the coon? What does he represent? He is a miserable, thieving rascal. [Laughter.] He never would have been selected by any party as an emblem. You could not have insulted our Democratic brethren more than to propose to place a coon at the head of their ticket. Why? Because it would necessarily affect the cause that they advocated. A coon at the head of your ticket would give just about as much inspiration to the voter as if you put a wet dog around the neck of a man and sent him up to vote. [Laughter.] The coon represents everything degrading. His greatest power is to climb and rob the nests of the singers of the heavens. He loves to feed on frogs and lizards. That is his highest office in the world. [Laughter.] Yet he was placed on that ticket as an emblem; he was placed there illegally; he was placed there as the result of a conspiracy through the use of money, and he was placed there in such a way—we have it on the authority of the majority report in this case—as to constitute a "transparent fraud." Is this House ready to sustain that fraud? [Cries of "No!"]

I do not think it ought to get one vote in this House. I believe that the contestee himself, in the majesty of that glorious form which God has endowed him with, would reflect such honor upon himself and his children to come, five hundred years from now, as would not be earned by any other act he ever performed, by rising up here and saying: "Gentlemen, I will not take any benefit under a proceeding which the majority of the committee has stamped as 'a transparent fraud.'" [Applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LINNEY. Give me two minutes more.

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from North Carolina have his time extended five minutes.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. LINNEY. Now, gentlemen, I think the legal proposition is established by an examination of the authorities that this ballot is absolutely void. If the ballot is void, then Clark County goes out, because that ballot was used there in every precinct, and the result is that the contestant is elected. Nobody disputes that. On the other hand, even if it should be held by this House that this ballot was not an absolute nullity, still, by reason of the fact that the introduction of the "coon" was violative of the original purpose of the statute—which is founded upon the constitutional provision of secrecy and in that point of view becomes mandatory—I claim that the contestant is entitled to the seat.

But, gentlemen, if I am wrong in both these legal propositions, then, coming to the merits of the case, the surrounding circumstances, especially when we take into consideration the result of the vote in the adjoining counties, make the inference irresistible that the contestant in this case lost a greater number of votes by reason of this "transparent fraud" than, if added to the votes counted for him, would have entitled him to the seat.

Oh, this was an unfair contest. The performance of Jacob, in taking Abner aside in the gate to speak to him quietly, and smiting him there under the fifth rib, will rank as an act of robust Christian courage in comparison with this transparent fraud.

Now, gentlemen, one other idea. It has been said that these contested-election cases are important. They are, indeed. There is no question about that. That was a grand sentiment which was presented to us the other morning by the Chaplain of this House when he associated the price of the things that tend to righteousness in the human soul and the price of human liberty. To quote him more accurately, he said: "As eternal vigilance is the price of all that stands for righteousness in the human soul, so eternal vigilance is the price of human liberty." Why, sirs, in these contested-election cases every righteous decision adds an additional safeguard, an additional sentinel, around the citadel of our liberties. If a stronger sentinel should be placed at any one point more than another, he should be placed, with glittering bayonet and shining sword, at the weakest gate of the temple of our liberties.

Frauds in election constitute the weakest gate. Frauds in elections constitute the enemy's most deadly weapon. Let me ask this House, in view of the frequency of frauds in elections, to join in placing a sentinel at that gate of the citadel, and thereby strengthen the foundations upon which our Republic rests. Our friends on the other side talk beautifully about this innocent fraud; but recollect that words have been denominated the "daughters of earth"—they may be treacherous; while good deeds have been denominated the "crowned sons of the heavens," and the good deeds that are brought into play in the vindication of the purity of the ballot box should have and will have a double coronation at the hands of this House. [Prolonged applause.]

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Speaker, my colleague from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER] has asked to be permitted to occupy five minutes upon this case. As he proposes to address the House on the other side of this question from that which I shall sustain, I ask unanimous consent that he be allowed the privilege of presenting his views for the time I have specified without taking it out of the time allowed on this side.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, it will be remembered that in the case of Yost vs. Tucker the House decided in favor of Mr. TUCKER, the sitting member, because the letter of the law supported his claim to the seat and was followed in settling the election in question, as on the face of the returns Mr. TUCKER was elected. I am surprised that that rule is reversed, confessedly so, by the report of a majority of the Committee on Elections in this case. Let me ask, What should be the action of the House in a case of this kind?

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that that action should be such as to secure the lawfully expressed will of the voters in the election; our action should not encourage the violation of the law by making the perpetration of a fraud successful. If the law is violated innocently, even then the election is invalidated. But when it is violated deliberately and for the deliberate purpose of perpetrating a fraud, then the House can not too emphatically condemn the fraud, and certainly it should never permit deliberate violation of law to be successful.

What are the facts in this case? This political party or individual should not by any means be allowed to profit by its own fraud. This fraud was committed in the interest of a party, and deliberately planned in the interest of that party. They violated—and they violated successfully—the law in not printing the ballots properly, as prescribed by the law, and again in not distributing the ballots for the contestant properly and as the law directed. The question of the extent of the deception, it is said, is susceptible of proof. I think that "it is susceptible to proof," and that it has been clearly proven, and against the sitting member. Now, what is the proof? It is because of this fraud that this contestant was not elected on the face of the returns and is not now in his seat. Why do I say that? It is shown that in 1895 there were over 1.3 per cent more votes cast in the district than in 1894. In 1895 there were more than 5 per cent more votes cast in that particular county than were returned in 1894 in that county. In 1891 there were over 7 per cent more votes cast than were reported in 1894 in that county. In 1894 the Republican gain in the whole district was over 30 per cent, and yet the Republican candidate is claimed to have been defeated by an opposite vote in this one county. In 1894 the Republican vote in this county was 12 per cent less than in the years of 1891 and 1895, if the official returns are to be accepted.

Now, I ask, does not this show conclusively that something prevented the honest voters of the Republican party in that district from casting their ballots? Is there the slightest evidence, on the contrary, that the voters desiring to vote for the sitting member failed to have an opportunity or failed to cast their votes? The evidence seems to be conclusive that the voters failing to cast their ballots were all Republicans. Is it not a remarkable fact that only Republicans refused to vote if the raccoon ballot was not the cause? The law of Kentucky does not disfranchise illiterate voters; and yet it is clear that these voters and many others were disfranchised.

Further than that, Mr. Speaker, I repeat, that in 1894 the Republicans cast in that district a vote which showed a gain of 30 per cent, while this county showed the reverse. From this evidence it seems to be conclusive not only that the law was violated, but that it was violated deliberately and for the purpose of perpetrating a fraud, and in the third place, that this fraud was made successful in giving to the defeated party a majority, and temporarily at least seating him in this House.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. DANIELS. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY].

Mr. MOODY. How much time have I?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has forty minutes.

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Speaker, I believe the task I am now about to perform is a most ungracious one. I realize when I look about the House, and especially in the faces of those who sit on this side of the Chamber, that gentlemen have already made up their minds on this question. They have made up their minds, too, without hearing the other side of the case. They have made up their minds without giving consideration to the views of the majority of the committee which they have appointed for the consideration of the question.

I had no desire or purpose to speak to this question. I did not make this report. It was made by the distinguished and able chairman of the committee, the gentleman from New York, Judge DANIELS, but I joined in it. I did so as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. COOKE] joined in it and as the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. LEONARD] joined in it; and it represents the result of the labors of the majority of the Republican members of the committee. I find no fault if the House sees fit not to accept it. Yet I want gentlemen to consider the position that members of the committee are in. You impose upon the committee the hardship of going through these big volumes of testimony on contested-election cases, and then gentlemen come into the House here, take into consideration one aspect of the evidence and one only; and then make up their minds and shut their ears to the other side.

I tell you, sir, that there are some things in the case that have not yet been alluded to by any gentleman who has spoken upon the floor, and to which I wish now to attract the attention of this body for a few moments. I joined in that report. I have heard the able argument of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ROYSE], and it is an argument the ability and force of which can not be denied. I have heard the forceful speech of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. LINNEY], who always fortifies his arguments by the wit which is peculiar to himself, and which no one enjoys more than myself.

Facts do not make very much difference to him. If there are not any facts at his command, he goes around and picks up any facts that he finds lying around loose. I do not accuse the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. LINNEY] of misrepresenting anything to the House, but he reminds me of the old story of the negro who was charged with stealing wood. Some friend of his said, "Why, no; he would not steal wood. He is not a thief; but when he sees a wood pile in the night, it is his wood pile." And when the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. LINNEY] sees any facts lying loose which are necessary to the symmetry of his argument, he adopts them, and they are his facts. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, it must be sufficiently clear what the precise question in this case is. The question is whether we shall throw out 3,411 votes that were honestly cast by the men who voted the only ballot which they could obtain and seat the Republican candidate by so doing. It is agreed that if you do throw out the vote of Clark County the Republican would be seated. It is agreed, on the other hand, that he can be seated in no other way. You can make no computation, you can take no view of this evidence which will warrant the seating of Mr. Hopkins, except by disfranchising those 3,411 voters.

Mr. LEWIS. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY] yield for a question?

Mr. MOODY. Yes; for a question, but not for an argument.

Mr. LEWIS. Did you not, in the case of Rinaker vs. Downing, oppose the report of the majority of the committee and vote against it?

Mr. MOODY. Yes; I opposed the report of the majority of the committee, and I succeeded in bringing a majority of the House around to my view, and that is my sin, which has been held up against me ever since. But I want to say to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LEWIS] that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RINAKER] is now present, and I will ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RINAKER] if he did not come to me at the end of the contest, when by my voice at last he was finally seated upon this floor, and say that he believed that I had acted with the purpose to procure honest justice to him. If he did not say that after it was all over, he can contradict me now.

I say that the disfranchisement of this county is the only way in which that result can be brought about. Gentlemen of the House are aware of the position of the committee. We all agree that that ticket which was placed on the official ballot was wrongfully placed there. I can not add a word to what was said so cogently by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ROYSE]. The eagle ticket ought not to have been on the ballot. It was a wrongful ticket, and we all agree on that. The question is, What is the result which ought properly to follow from that wrong on the part of the county clerk?

Mr. CONNOLLY. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. MOODY. Certainly.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Was there any other ballot used in Clark County but that one?

Mr. MOODY. Oh, no. That was the only ballot that any voter could use. It has been said by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ROYSE] that the people who voted that ballot knew that they were voting an illegal ballot. They did not. They had not the knowledge which the House now has in reference to the placing of that ticket upon the ballot. They voted the only ballot that they could vote, and there was nothing in the world to put them on their guard and to make them believe that they were voting an illegal ballot.

Mr. GROSVENOR. That is exactly the point that I want to ask the gentleman a question about. Now, if that be true, if the legislature prescribes the form of ballot to be used, and another form is used with the intent to defraud, what remedy is there for an act like that except to treat that vote and that election as a nullity?

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Speaker, the rest of the time which I shall occupy will be in an attempt to answer the question of the gentleman from Ohio. It may not be successful, but it will be an attempt made in good faith, and there will be no purpose on my part to evade a fair consideration of any aspect which this case presents.

Now, the minority of the committee ask you to throw out the vote of Clark County on two grounds: First, on the ground that the whole ballot was absolutely void, that it ought not to be counted; second, upon the ground that it was a fraud, and had such an effect upon the election that we can not trust to the returns as a true representation of the will of the people.

These two grounds, in order to be intelligently considered, must be treated separately and distinctly. They are utterly distinct, and I address myself first to the claim that that ballot is an absolutely void ballot and can not be counted for anybody.

The law of Kentucky, which has been quoted so many times before the House, is this. It will take but a moment to read it. There is but a line to read. It provides that the voting—

> Shall be by secret official ballot, printed and distributed as hereinafter provided, and no other ballot shall be used.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I agree with the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. LINNEY] that the words—

> No other ballot shall be used—

Are equivalent to the words—

> No other ballot shall be counted.

And if this is not, within the meaning of that law, an official ballot, then the contention of the minority is correct, and Mr. Hopkins is entitled to a seat upon this floor.

But the majority of this committee, having given that subject all the attention which they could, have come to the conclusion that the meaning of the law is to prohibit all ballots except those furnished at the public expense as the official ballot; to prohibit a ballot written out by the voter himself; to prohibit a ballot which is furnished by the organizations of the party; because anciently in Kentucky the votes in Congressional elections were by ballot printed by the party.

On the other hand, the minority of the committee say that if the official ballot in any degree, no matter how small, departs from the requirements of the statute that it invalidates the whole ballot, so that it becomes no longer an official ballot, and a vote that is uttered by it can not be counted anywhere; and the question before this House is, Which is right? Now, I say to the House, and I say it believing it to be true, that there is no authority anywhere that can be produced to sustain the contention of the minority, be it either in the House of Representatives or in the courts. I propose briefly to allude, and only briefly, to one or two authorities.

Mr. COLSON. Will the gentleman allow me one question?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HEPBURN). Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. MOODY. Yes; for a question.

Mr. COLSON. The gentleman states that the statute of Kentucky requires that this secret official ballot "shall be printed as hereinafter provided."

Mr. MOODY. Oh, yes.

Mr. COLSON. Let me ask the gentleman if that ballot was printed as the statute provided?

Mr. MOODY. It was not, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. COLSON. Then the gentleman gives his whole case away.

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Speaker, if this House desires to consider this question intelligently it will not be governed by mere verbal quibbles of this kind. Let me refer to the Montana case, that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROYSE] referred to. It was this case, and this only: The statutes of Montana provide a certain way in which a candidate must be nominated in order to be put on the Australian ballot. A man was nominated without legality, in a manner entirely outside of the law. His name was put upon the ballot. He had a majority of the votes; but the supreme court of the Territory of Montana declared that, not being legally upon the ballot, he could not hold the office to which he was elected. In one word, that the ballot was void as to no other candidate upon the ticket. In one word, that it was not void because it was not an official ballot, but simply that a man who had been unlawfully nominated and wrongfully put upon the ticket could not obtain an election thereby; and the gentleman from Montana [Mr. HARTMAN], who is familiar with the case, nods assent to my construction of it.

As to the case from North Carolina mentioned by our genial friend Judge LINNEY. I wish I could return to him all the compliments he gave to me. Mr. Speaker, it is in my heart to do it, but words fail me. I have not words enough to do justice to the gentleman from North Carolina, and can only do it in esteem. The North Carolina case, the gentleman himself concedes, has no relation to the case under consideration in the House, because the case in North Carolina was one where a man marked the ticket so that it would be known. It was provided in the statute of North Carolina in so many words that if a man did that thing his ballot should not be counted, and that is all that the court in North Carolina said. It said that and nothing more.

Now, then, the case in New York to which the gentleman from Illinois alluded. It was this case: The law of 1890 gave a Republican ticket, a Democratic ticket, and any party ticket in separate sheets, not on a blanket ballot. The Republicans had a ticket marked and numbered wrongfully; the number of one election precinct went to another election precinct, and vice versa; so the effect of it was that whenever a Republican stepped up to the polls it would be seen exactly how he was voting. The court of appeals of the State of New York held that a ballot of that kind could not be counted. Why? Because it broke down the enforced secrecy, which is the fundamental principle of the Australian ballot; and because the statute in New York expressly said that no such ballot should be counted, in so many words. It was in direct violation of the terms of the statute, which says that a ballot wrongfully numbered must not be received, or, if received, afterwards counted.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the only authority upon this subject is the authority to which the gentleman from New York [Mr. DANIELS] alluded last evening. The latest word of the court of appeals in New York covers this case, and this case precisely. There is no question about it. If you decide this case against the contention of the majority, you decide it against the views of the court of appeals of New York.

Mr. Speaker, I am not speaking now about the effect of the fraud. Not at all. That is a separate question and I will consider it later. It makes no difference, as to the validity of the ballot, whether the device is there wrongfully or whether it is there fraudulently. The question is whether the presence of the eagle ticket upon the ballot, and the transposition of the Republican device, all in violation of the statute law, renders the whole ballot void and disfranchises every man who votes it. I can not stop to read the whole of the opinion. The law of New York says that none but official ballots shall be counted. The court of appeals held that that language meant that none but a ballot which was provided by the public authorities at the public expense should be counted, and that although there were names upon the ticket which ought not to have been there, that fact of itself should not disfranchise any honest voter who used the ballot in good faith.

There is something in this case which I do not conceive to be a compliment either to the knowledge or the fair-mindedness of this House. That ticket went to an election. Upon it the whole of the county officers of this county were elected for a term of four years. The courts of Kentucky were open. I never heard that they were anything but pure courts. Every man who desired to contest the election of a successful candidate upon that ticket had the right to go to the courts, and he would have got his decision a long while ago. The offices were valuable. The term of office is four years.

Why, Mr. Speaker, if the contention of gentlemen is right, and that ballot is a mere piece of waste paper, then there is not a decision made by the county judge of Clark County that is within his jurisdiction, there is not a criminal prosecuted by the county attorney but who is prosecuted by a man holding his office unlawfully. The sheriff, the constable who serves the writ, the jailer who retains the prisoner, the assessor who assesses the taxes, each of them has his right to act only upon the ground that he is a de facto officer. I say again, it is no compliment to the understanding of this House that gentlemen base their case upon an assertion which they dare not take into the sunlight of the courts in their own State of Kentucky. That is all I care to say about that branch of the case.

It is said, however, that this was a fraudulent ballot; that it had the effect not only of deceiving the people who voted the "eagle" ticket, but also of deterring a great many other Republicans from going to the polls. Now I am going to say something which has not yet been said to this House by anybody. This argument is made, and it has found lodgment in the mind of nearly everybody who has heard it: "There was a great Republican gain in every other county of this Congressional district. In this county of Clark alone there was no gain, or no substantial gain, and how can it be that the Republican party should gain in every other county in the district and only hold its own here? What is the cause of it? What can be the cause of it except this fraudulent ballot?"

Now, if I can not meet that question, my cause ought not to prevail in this House. But I shall show you, Mr. Speaker, and show this House, that there was a cause for it, and a good cause, and that it was not the existence of this fraudulent ballot. Let us see how this trouble started.

Here is where the trouble began in Clark County. Here is the reason why the Republicans did not get the full Republican vote in that county; and, as I have said, nobody has yet alluded to it in this discussion: In April preceding this election the editor of the Winchester Sun, a leading Republican paper, who was himself a candidate for Congress upon this very ticket, published an editorial which I will read. It is in relation to the negro vote:

We hope we have made ourselves clearly understood upon this subject in the articles that have heretofore appeared. But to recapitulate. The negro vote as a dominant factor in the Republican party arrays Southern majorities against that party, it makes no difference what its principles. The same influence makes pure local government impossible. Then, what course should Republicans pursue toward this vote? Cease to make special appeals to it. The great Republican party owes the colored vote of the South no debts. Do not attempt to organize it. Then colored men who are at heart Republicans will vote their sentiments, and those who are inclined to drift can do so. The debt is all the other way, and the nomination of a negro to public office is not good policy under present conditions. It is not good for the negro race, and offends the just sense of propriety in the South.

That was addressed by a candidate for Congress to the people of that county, where three out of every five Republican voters were negroes, as appears on the contestant's own showing. Why, Mr. Speaker, has the negro no eyes, no hands, no senses, no passions? Is he not fed with the same food, is he not warmed by the same summer, as the white man? Do you suppose he could view with indifference that attack upon his race? Observe; it was not against the men; it was against their color. It would have made no difference whether the negro was such a wretch as was strangled here during the last session of Congress, or whether he was the great novelist Alexander Dumas. The declaration was against the color of those who made up the body of the Republican vote in that county.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Did the contestant write that language?

Mr. MOODY. No; not this candidate, but one who was by his side on that ticket, a candidate for the unexpired term. Is it any wonder, I submit to the candor of this House, that the Republican vote fell off in Clark County? The negroes were indignant. They expressed their indignation. They held a meeting. They appointed a committee to go to the Republican convention and ask that three, only three, of their number should be nominated to county offices.

Mr. ROYSE. Let me ask the gentleman does not the proof in the case clearly show that the dissatisfaction of the colored men did not extend to the contestant at all, but that they were all friendly to him, and that they put his name in their petition and asked that he be nominated?

Mr. MOODY. The gentleman anticipates what I was about to say. This was a county fight. It was nothing but a county fight. The negroes felt that their race had been insulted, and when they asked for fair representation upon the ticket they were turned away by that county convention with contempt and without a hearing. Is it any wonder, then, that there was disaffection in that county among the Republican voters?

The negroes nominated their ticket. The story of that ticket has been fully explained, and clearly explained to the House. I am not going into it again. It is not necessary. It received 79 votes throughout the whole county of Clark, and no more. We propose to rectify any possible wrong done to the Republican candidate by adding to the 1,479 votes which he got on the other ticket the 79 that were cast for this "eagle ticket." But our friends go further, and say it had such effect that we can not measure the result of the fraud, and therefore must throw out the whole vote. If that be true—if it had such an effect—I say again that the Republican contestant ought to have the seat as a result of his contest.

But, Mr. Speaker, what are the facts? It is not true. That is the answer to it. It is measured in the evidence taken by the contestant himself.

I wish to call your attention to the minority report for a moment, to some language which, if it be true, authorizes the seating of the contestant. If I thought it were true, I would vote to do so myself, and I would not have joined in the report which the gentleman from New York has made. But let us see whether it is true or not. It says—I allude now to the minority report:

The evidence shows that the character of this ballot was discovered by the Republicans soon after the polls opened on the morning of the election.

That is true.

This news spread rapidly, and caused great consternation among the Republican voters. They were astounded, bewildered, and indignant.

Mr. Speaker, without the risk of contradiction, I say now that in the original record of this case, eliminating the additional testimony, there is not a word to sustain that statement, and if I am wrong I invite contradiction now.

I do not get it. I can not get it, because there is nothing in the record which would warrant a contradiction.

Mr. BRUMM: If the gentleman will permit me, I understand him to say that this is in the additional evidence presented in the case.

Mr. MOODY. I am coming to that presently. I will show the only evidence to sustain any such statement. That statement of the minority of the committee in this report is imagination, and nothing else. It rests on no surer foundation than the mere assertion of counsel.

But let us go further.

Mr. ROYSE. If the gentleman will permit me——

Mr. MOODY. I would prefer, with the gentleman's consent, not to be interrupted now. I have but a very few moments. I would certainly yield, however, if the point the gentleman desires to make is very material.

Mr. ROYSE. I will not interrupt my friend from Massachusetts.

Mr. MOODY. I read further from this report:

Party leaders advised them to go home and not to vote at all.

Mr. Speaker, outside of the additional testimony, there is not a word of evidence to justify that assertion. One man, they say, says he gave advice privately to 12 or 15 and publicly to 75 or 100 voters "not to vote." Now, that is not true. There is no testimony in the record that warrants it in any possible degree whatever. The only testimony in the record, and I will call attention to and read it now, is the testimony of one Bohen, who says—I read from the testimony:

Q. 5. Were you asked by voters to give information to voters of that voting precinct as to how to vote for N. T. Hopkins, Republican candidate for Congress? If so, what direction did you give them?

A. Yes; and believing "the eagle about to fly" was the device under which the name of N. T. Hopkins was placed, I instructed them to mark their ballots under "the eagle about to fly."

Q. 6. What led you to believe that his name would be under the device of the "eagle about to fly?"

A. That was the device adopted by the Republican Congressional convention which nominated him, and had been heretofore used by the Republican party throughout the State, district, and county.

Q. 7. About how many voters did you so advise?

A. Privately, I advised 12 or 15; publicly, about 75 or 100.

There is no word of testimony there as to advising voters not to vote. What he did advise them was to vote under the emblem of the eagle. Yet the minority in their report state to the House that one man advised the voters, 75 or 100 of them, to go home and not vote at all. He says he gave this advice to 75 or 100 voters, but there is not a word of testimony to show that it was advice not to vote at all. Therefore there is a misrepresentation of the testimony. The advice was to vote under the eagle, and if anybody was misled by that advice we have corrected the error by giving every vote cast under that ticket to the Republican candidate. The evidence shows, in fact, that in the very precinct where that advice was given the eagle ticket did not receive a single vote. So it did not mislead anybody.

Now, what is the evidence upon which it is asserted that people were repelled from the polls by this ticket? There is not a word of it in the record. The minority go on to say in their views:

It is undisputed that large numbers of Republicans did leave the polls and refuse to vote.

That is not true. It is not sustained by the evidence in any manner whatever.

Why, Mr. Speaker, what is the evidence upon this subject? I can only be very brief about it. In the first place, there is the evidence of one Hatton, who says that the effect of this ballot was "to disorganize the Republican force and cause a great many voters"—to do what?

To ignorantly vote the straight Republican ticket—which was this illegal ticket, and that thereby—that is, by causing them to vote the straight Republican ticket—thereby, he says, the Republicans lost three or four hundred votes, not by Republicans staying away from the polls, no such language, but by their "ignorantly voting" this illegal ticket; and we have corrected every result which possibly could flow from that.

That is all that that witness says. I have read for you all that the witness Bowen says. There is one man who testifies that in point of fact by mistake he voted the illegal ticket. There is another witness called, and I call the attention of the House to his statement. Mr. K. J. Hampton, who was a member of the State central committee, who was the chairman of the Republican district committee, was called as a witness. He has been here this winter, and he was here last winter. He is evidently an intelligent, honest, and upright man. He was called by the contestant in this case. He was at the polls all day long as a challenger at this election, and in his testimony he never said one word about a single Republican being repelled from the polls by this ticket.

Upon cross-examination he says in reply to a question that was put to him that he could not name a single Republican in Winchester precinct who did not vote. I believe that was the testimony of every witness who was called originally to prove this great exodus of Republicans on account of the fanciful reason that has been given here for it. It failed. It is not true, and the result is shown by the agreement which was entered into by the parties in this case, which I want to read. It is found on page 60 of the record in this case. When the contestant found that he had not proved that a single Republican was repelled from the polls by this ticket, that he had absolutely failed to do so, and had shown that the only way in which the ticket did harm was by getting men ignorantly to vote the eagle ballot, he entered into this agreement:

That all the Republican voters in Clark County who attended the election and who desired to vote were given a fair and a free opportunity to do so, and that their votes were counted and certified as cast.

That was the agreement that was entered into by the parties. It is said that it is not binding upon us. True, it is not binding upon us, but it is persuasive evidence. Who knew better than the contestant and his counsel whether there had been any Republican votes lost by the existence of that ticket?

Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has seven minutes remaining.

Mr. COLSON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MOODY. I know my friend from Kentucky will pardon me. He knows that I have only seven minutes remaining, and that I am arguing against the views of this side of the House. He ought to recognize my difficulty, and not take my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. MOODY. Now, it is said that the vote in this county at other times shows that this was an abnormal election. It shows nothing of the kind. In the year 1894, in this election, giving the contestant the 79 votes which we give him, he carried the county by 277. The next year Governor Bradley was beaten in the county by 263. The same conditions were existing. The same dissatisfaction, perhaps a little lessened in its intensity, existed among the negro voters, and yet there was a difference of only 14 votes.

Mr. Speaker, another test which shows that the correction which the majority make shows that we do full justice to this contestant and that we are not obliged to go any further. The same Mr. Hampton to whom I referred testifies on this subject. Who could know better than he what the Republican vote of this county was? He testifies in the record, and does not attempt to correct it, that the full Republican vote was 1,600, and the brief of the counsel for the contestant shows, on page 13, that he accepted 1,600 as the full Republican vote, and he so stated in his brief. By adding these 79 votes to those which Hopkins received by the returns of the election officers, we come within about 40 votes of the total Republican vote of that county.

Now, the cause stood that way toward the close of the last session. It appeared clearly that the committee were not intending to seat the contestant by any report of theirs. A report against him, and a unanimous report against him, appeared certain. I myself drew the resolution and presented it to the House, which gave this man the full opportunity to prove what he claimed. It was a subject which was capable of proof. If Republicans were turned away from the polls, they knew it, and it could be proved by their testimony and by the testimony of other people. We gave him the opportunity to take that proof and he came back with his so-called additional testimony. And how little it amounts to. He comes back, under the leave which this House gave him, with this testimony upon this subject, and this testimony alone; and I am going to read it all, because it is in a question or two. A man by the name of Perry was called as a witness, and he was chairman of the Republican committee in Winchester, and he said that when he came to find out what this ticket was, he advised the Republicans not to vote; and he went to several other precincts in town and did the same thing. He said further, upon cross-examination, that within an hour he changed his mind; and he was asked this question, Mr. Speaker, on cross-examination, which gave him the right to put his own opinion and his own judgment into the case, and this was his answer:

Q. I will ask you now to give your honest judgment as to whether you think your advice to the Republicans that morning lost the contestant, Hopkins, a single vote in the city of Winchester?

That was put to him, an adverse witness, by the counsel for the sitting member, and he said in reply:

I do not know whether my advice to the Republicans lost any votes for Hopkins or not.

Although the man is right on the spot and could tell, he could not answer the question which the contestant now asks you to answer in his favor affirmatively. Now, that is all. What is the excuse that we are given for the absence of testimony? Everybody knows that if Republicans did not vote it could be proved, and proved easily. The House had extended the time for this contestant for the mere purposes of allowing him to prove it. He comes back without any proof whatever, and the excuse presented to the House is that the court of appeals of Kentucky has decided that a man can not be compelled to state——

Mr. COLSON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MOODY. Do not interrupt me in the middle of a sentence. The court of appeals of Kentucky has decided that a man can not be compelled to tell how he voted; and therefore, for that reason, it was impossible to compel a witness to testify that he did not vote and why he did not vote.

Mr. COLSON. Now will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. MOODY. One single sentence, and I will. The excuse presented was an insult to the intelligence of the committee. Now I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. COLSON. Does the gentleman not know that the testimony shows that 40 Republican votes in one precinct were not cast in that election?

Mr. MOODY. I am very much obliged to the gentleman for his question. There were 40 Republican votes not returned in one of those precincts; and that is a precinct which had a majority of these "eagle" tickets in it; and we added these "eagle" tickets to the vote of the Republican party. It was the precinct where one of the colored men lived. He was upon this ticket; and that is the reason why the ticket fell behind.

It is said that Republicans refrained from voting on account of the fraudulent ticket. An opportunity was given the contestant to present evidence before the committee and before the House of the fact that voters had refrained from voting, and when he comes back to us he does so without any proof.

Mr. COLSON. Does not the gentleman know that 700——

Mr. MOODY. Why, Mr. Speaker, am I making this speech or the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. COLSON. Does not the gentleman know that 700 Republican votes were not cast?

Mr. MOODY. Now, Mr. Speaker, I have but few words more to say upon this question. I have gone over it hastily. I have gone over it imperfectly, with hostile faces all around me. I will not descend to lobby a report in which I join through this House. If I have anything to say on it I will say it upon the floor, upon my responsibility as a member of the House and of the committee.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOODY. Will the House allow me a few more minutes?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I ask that the gentleman be allowed ten minutes more.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Unanimous consent is asked that the time of the gentleman from Massachusetts be extended ten minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. HARDY. I object.

Several MEMBERS. The other side had ten minutes.

Mr. LEWIS. I hope the gentleman will be yielded the courtesy of five minutes. Let him have five minutes more to conclude his remarks.

Mr. MOODY. I hope gentlemen will accord me that courtesy.

Mr. PEARSON. I think there must be some mistake about the objection.

Mr. HARDY. I withdraw the objection; but I believe that Massachusetts has slobbered over enough in this House. [Cries of "Ah!"]

The SPEAKER. The objection is withdrawn.

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Speaker, I should have preferred that the gentleman would have persisted in his objection rather than to have yielded to me and accompanied that yielding by an insult to the State which I have the honor in part to represent. [Great applause.] I have no apology, Mr. Speaker, to make for my State, nor to make for myself, for any vote which I have cast or any voice that I have uttered upon this floor. What I have done has been done simply because I believe that the duty which this House itself imposed upon me compels me not only to come to a conclusion which I believe to be the true one, but to support it by argument in the House.

There is but one word more I want to say, and it is this: Mr. Kendall, the sitting member, is not guilty of any of the misdoings that have been shown. The evidence is that it was a mere county trick. It was not directed against Mr. Hopkins; it was not engineered by Mr. Kendall, and the evidence shows that Mr. Kendall and this county clerk did not even know each other by sight. If the construction of the law and the preservation of the purity of elections require that the sitting member should suffer for the wrongdoing of another, so be it. It will not be the first time that that result has been brought about. But, gentlemen, when you are asked to inflict upon a man who is guiltless the consequences of the misdoings of another, when you are asked to disfranchise 3,411 honest citizens who voted according to their convictions, I call upon you in the name of fairness to hesitate, whatever your opinions may have been up to the present time.

You can do this thing. You probably will do it. You can do it by the power of numbers; but if there ever was a case that was clear to a man who has examined the whole evidence, this is the case. If you do this you run on the one hand against the decisions of the court of appeals of the State of New York, and you run on the other hand against the law and the evidence and the agreement of the parties, and, as the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. MURRAY] now stands before me, let me say that you ratify the insult which was put upon his race by a man whose name was upon this ticket as a candidate for Congress. You not only ratify that insult—an insult which asserted that the negroes were not fit to hold office; that no matter how good they were, a just sense of propriety would confine their political activities to voting for white men—you not only ratify that insult, but you declare that the negro in Kentucky is so debased and degraded, so lost to all self-respect, that he had not even the courage to resent it. Mr. Speaker, I submit the case to the sober consideration of the House. [Prolonged applause.]

Mr. DANIELS. Mr. Speaker, I demand the previous question on the resolutions.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HEPBURN). The Clerk will read the resolutions reported by the majority of the committee.

The resolutions were read, as follows:

Resolved, That N. T. Hopkins was not elected a Representative to the Fifty-fourth Congress from the Tenth Congressional district of the State of Kentucky, and is not entitled to the seat.

Resolved, That Joseph M. Kendall was duly elected a Representative to the Fifty-fourth Congress from the Tenth Congressional district of the State of Kentucky, and is entitled to the seat.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will now report the substitute proposed by the minority.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Joseph M. Kendall was not elected a member of the Fifty-fourth Congress from the Tenth Congressional district of the State of Kentucky, and is not entitled to a seat therein.

Resolved, That N. T. Hopkins was elected a member of the Fifty-fourth Congress from the Tenth Congressional district in the State of Kentucky, and is entitled to a seat therein.

L. W. ROYSE.
R. Z. LINNEY.

The question being taken on the adoption of the substitute resolutions, the Speaker pro tempore declared that the ayes seemed to have it.

Several members called for a division.

Mr. EVANS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Speaker, I would ask the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ROYSE] if, for the convenience of both sides of the House, he will not agree that the vote upon the pending roll call shall be final, so that members when they vote on this call may go home if they desire, and that the remainder of the proceedings, if any, may be taken without a further vote?

Mr. ROYSE. I consent to that.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 197, nays 91, present 1, not voting 66; as follows:

So the substitute resolutions were agreed to.

The following pairs were announced:

On this question:

Mr. MAHON with Mr. HART.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas with Mr. PENDLETON.

Mr. MILLIKEN with Mr. LESTER.

For this day:

Mr. KULP with Mr. SHAW.

Mr. CHARLES W. STONE with Mr. DE ARMOND.

Mr. HULING with Mr. DENNY.

Mr. ARNOLD of Rhode Island with Mr. RUSK.

Mr. WELLINGTON with Mr. TATE.

Mr. GOODWYN with Mr. BUCK.

Until further notice:

Mr. MCCALL of Massachusetts with Mr. JONES.

Mr. DINGLEY with Mr. STRAIT.

Mr. CORLISS with Mr. COWEN.

Mr. PICKLER with Mr. MINER of New York.

Mr. HARMER with Mr. HUTCHESON.

Mr. THOMAS with Mr. TUCKER.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that leave of absence be granted to my colleague, Mr. TATE, indefinitely, in consequence of a death in his family.

There was no objection.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

[Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The question now is on agreeing to the resolutions as amended by the substitute.

The resolutions as amended were agreed to.

Mr. ROYSE. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the contestant, who is now present, be permitted to appear at the bar of the House to take the oath of office.

Mr. Hopkins of Kentucky having appeared at the bar of the House, was duly qualified, taking the oath prescribed by law. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. DINSMORE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. Hopkins, the contestant in this case, and the contestee, Mr. Kendall, have leave to print remarks in the RECORD upon the election case just disposed of.

The SPEAKER. Within how long a time?

Mr. DINSMORE. I should say in ten days.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

REPEAL OF TIMBER-CULTURE LAWS.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up from the Speaker's table a Senate bill with House amendments which I ask to have laid before the House for action at this time.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 3328) to amend an act entitled "An act to repeal the timber-culture laws, and for other purposes."

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that it is utterly impossible to understand what is going on.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires the House to be in order, and wishes to say to the House that under the rule not only ex-members but members-elect are permitted to come into the Hall, and they avail themselves of the privilege to a larger extent in the closing days of the session, perhaps, than at any other time. The addition of so many more gentlemen to those already on the floor increases very greatly the difficulty of maintaining order; and the Chair desires now to appeal to each member of the House, and to those gentlemen who are on the floor by permission of the House, to assist him in maintaining order and restrain themselves a little more, especially with reference to conversation on the floor. If gentlemen will, while on the floor, bear in mind this suggestion of the Chair, I am sure we will have very little difficulty hereafter in maintaining order. But it is absolutely impossible to transact the business of the House under circumstances where neither the Speaker can hear a member presenting a question to the House, nor can other members hear him, no matter how close attention they may pay to the proceedings. The Chair hopes, therefore, that order will be maintained hereafter. [Applause.]

The Clerk will read the bill called up by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY].

The bill was read at length.

The amendments were read at length.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House insist upon its amendments disagreed to by the Senate, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER appointed Mr. LACEY, Mr. ELLIS, and Mr. MCRAE as conferees on the part of the House.

IMPROVING MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (S. 3614) to aid in the improvement of the navigable channel of South Pass by closing the existing crevasse in Pass a Loutre, in the Mississippi River.

The bill was read at length.

Mr. CATCHINGS. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the reading of the House amendments be dispensed with, and move that the House insist upon its amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

There being no objection, the reading of the House amendments was dispensed with.

The motion of Mr. CATCHINGS was then agreed to.

JOSEPH P. PATTON.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Speaker, I desire unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 10290) for the relief of Joseph P. Patton.

The SPEAKER. The House will please be in order. The Chair would like to have the attention of all the members of the House during the presentation of matters by unanimous consent. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to correct the record of the War Department in the case of Joseph P. Patton, late first lieutenant of Company C, Fifth Regiment of Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, by revoking the order of his dismissal and granting him an honorable discharge, to date September 21, 1864.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say about this bill that there was a trial of this officer; that he was not found guilty on a single specification; that the Secretary of War ordered his release and restoration to duty. The Judge-Advocate-General disapproved of the proceedings against him. The officer in the meantime had been sent home by his corps commander, and it was too late for the order of the Secretary of War to be operative.

Mr. MILES. Is there a report in the case?

Mr. STEELE. There is a report, but it is very long.

Mr. LOUD. What was the charge against him?

Mr. STEELE. He was charged with having disposed of two mules. The court found him not guilty. He had two mules belonging to a contractor.

Mr. LOUD. Were these Kentucky mules?

Mr. STEELE. No; not Kentucky mules. The mules that the contractor had were very large ones. This officer substituted two small mules that he had captured, in the place of the larger mules. He used the larger mules to ride, and when he came to the end of his trip he was not able to make the exchange. The contractor got two worthless, small mules in place of the Government's two large mules. As I have said, the court found this officer not guilty on any specification, and the Judge-Advocate-General and the Secretary of War ordered his discharge from arrest and his restoration to duty. Those are the facts in the case.

Mr. ERDMAN. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. STEELE. Certainly.

Mr. ERDMAN. How does it come that he has remained under this stigma for thirty years?

Mr. STEELE. Simply because he was a poor man and never has asked for relief.

Mr. ERDMAN. Does he expect relief in a pecuniary manner now?

Mr. STEELE. Not at all.

Mr. ERDMAN. Has he applied to the Department?

Mr. STEELE. Yes; but the Secretary of War held that he could not get relief in that way. It does not come within the provisions of the law.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. LOUD. I should like to ask if the bill carries the usual provision that no pay, bounty, or emoluments shall follow by reason of the passage of this act?

Mr. STEELE. No; it does not contain that provision. I will say to the gentleman that this applicant is a very poor man——

Mr. COX. What is the relief which is afforded by the bill?

Mr. STEELE. It gives him the relief which the Secretary of War and the Judge-Advocate-General both ordered he should receive, in an indorsement that appears upon the proceedings of the court. They both ordered his release from arrest.

Mr. COX. What is the relief they give him?

Mr. STEELE. The bill gives him an honorable discharge instead of dismissal by a corps commander.

Mr. HENDERSON. It cleans up his record.

Mr. STEELE. It cleans up his record.

Mr. LOUD. That would entitle him to pay for a year or so?

Mr. STEELE. Not at all, because there is no such time involved. It will give him pay for a month or so.

Mr. LOUD. I hope the gentleman will offer that amendment himself. I do not believe in reviewing the acts of a court-martial thirty or thirty-five years afterwards and then paying a man for some imaginary claim that he may have had. I hope the gentleman will offer the usual amendment.

Mr. STEELE. Let me say to the gentleman that this man was not found guilty on a single specification, and that the Judge-Advocate-General and the Secretary of War both disapproved of the proceedings, and the Secretary of War ordered his release from arrest and restoration to duty.

Mr. LOUD. If the findings were not approved, I can not imagine how they could have had any effect, but I wish to say that it seems to me that the court which was convened at that time was more competent to decide this case than Congress is to decide it thirty years afterwards. Unless I had understood that this carried the usual provision, I should not have given consent to its consideration. Of course, it has gone beyond my power now to prevent the consideration of the bill.

Mr. STEELE. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. GRIFFIN] reported the bill.

Mr. LOUD. I hope the gentleman will offer the amendment which I suggest.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Speaker, this is rather a peculiar case. This officer was on detail duty, having in charge a squad of men, taking the cattle on the line of march for General Smith's army. The contractors were Cincinnati parties. Before he started on his line of march these contractors requested him to take with him a span of mules belonging to the contractors, a double harness, and a wagon. On the way to reach the command a span of mules, or two mules used by two of his men for saddle mules, gave out because they were small and unable to carry the men on such a long march. The officer concluded that the only way to get his men through was to exchange the weak mules, owned by the Government, for the mules owned by the contractors, and he did so, attaching the small mules, which were tired out, to the wagons and taking the mules of the contractors for the men to ride. Before he got to his destination even these mules succumbed to the fatigue and exhaustion of the trip, and they were turned out to die or recover, as often occurs on marches of that kind. When he reached his destination, he sold the small mules for $50, and supposing that, having taken the contractors' mules for the use of the men, and having abandoned these, it was his duty to restore them as far as he could, and having received $50 for the small mules, he proposed to send that $50 to the contractors at Cincinnati, as he agreed to do.

Pending these steps, he says that some one, who was a little miffed because of something he had done, had him arrested, preferred charges, and a court-martial ensued. He was found guilty; and it is surprising that under the proofs in the case any court-martial should have found the man guilty. Yet such was the case, and as the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE] says, the subsequent recommendations were for his release, but before, mark you, the order of the Secretary of War for his release reached the command, the Major-General Commanding the Army had caused him to be dismissed from the service, and there was no case. Hence this measure is brought here.

Mr. STEELE. Allow me to correct one statement the gentleman has made.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Why could not the Secretary of War simply have vacated the order under which the General had dismissed him from the service, and in three lines have restored him to duty at the time?

Mr. GRIFFIN. Why, if the Secretary of War was here to hear, and I could address the question and he would give his reason, I could answer the gentleman from Ohio, but as he is not, I do not know what answer he would give to the inquiry put by the gentleman.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Did he refuse?

Mr. GRIFFIN. He was at home at the time the order reached him.

Mr. HULL. Let me say to the gentleman from Ohio that the Judge-Advocate-General of the Army ordered the man reinstated and all proceedings vacated, and the Secretary of War approved it, but when the finding of that kind went back the man was out, and although the War Department took no action on it, the charge stands that this was a court-martial and not a desertion, and it takes an act of Congress to grant the relief.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Oh, no; the Secretary of War could have restored him.

Mr. STEELE. Even the President could not have restored him.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The President has done it a thousand times.

Mr. STEELE. The gentleman from Wisconsin says that he was found guilty of the charge. Under neither of the specifications of the charge was he found guilty, showing the inconsistency of the proceeding.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Speaker, I wish the House to understand it just as it is. He was found guilty of taking the mules and selling them and making the exchange, and not of selling the wagon or the harness, and he was not found guilty of converting the money to his own use. He did not profit by it in any way.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I offer the usual amendment, "that no pay, emolument, or bounty shall accrue to him by reason of the passage of this act."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

The Clerk read as follows:

That no pay, bounty, or emolument shall be paid to Joseph P. Patten by reason of this act.

Mr. STEELE. I hope that will be voted down.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, if this was a wrongful conviction, as it appears, and if it was a wrongful retention of the charge—and that is the only ground upon which we could pass the bill, if we ought to pass the bill—we certainly ought to restore this man to whatever he lost by reason of the wrong that was done to him.

Mr. STEELE. That is right.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, there is a question of doubt, I will say to the gentleman from Ohio, whether this bill should pass at all or not.

Mr. GROSVENOR. That is another question.

Mr. LOUD. This House assumes to do a portion of equity in a good many cases as it sees it. I say to this House that that court at that time was much more competent to determine this question than this body is to-day; and while we remove charges of desertion from time to time and give large bounties to people, yet, if we could review the facts surrounding the service of this gentleman and know the exact facts, possibly this House might conclude it was a case of desertion. The court found this man guilty. Those findings were approved. The assumption is that he was guilty. This legislative body, having the power, of course can set everything aside; but it is a question whether they should go beyond the point which is gone in all cases, beyond the point of removing the bar that would prevent him from receiving a pension; and that is the sore spot of this applicant, undoubtedly. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to suggest, in reference to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from California, that such amendment ought not to be adopted in its present form. That is not the usual provision which we attach to bills of this kind. If it is to be adopted in any form, there should be added at the end of the amendment the words, "under the provisions of this act."

Mr. LOUD. I made that suggestion.

The SPEAKER. That is in the amendment.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I hope the amendment will be voted down.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. GRIFFIN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Several members addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAY] on a matter of public business.

PROTECTION OF PUBLIC RECORDS.

Mr. RAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill which I send to the desk, H. R. 8212, for the preservation and protection of public records and documents, and providing for the use of copies thereof as evidence.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That a copy of any document, record, paper, or map in the official custody of any public officer of any State or Territory of the United States, or the Indian Territory, or the District of Columbia, or of the United States, certified under the hand and official seal of such officer or officers, where there is a seal, or of the State or United States, as the case may be, or verified by the oath of the public officer having the custody of same to be a true, correct, and full copy of the original, may be admitted and read and used in evidence in any action or proceeding, civil or criminal, in the courts and before special tribunals of the United States in the like manner and with the same force and effect as the original if produced and put in evidence.

SEC. 2. That no document, record, paper, or map in the official custody of any officer of the United States shall be produced or introduced in evidence except upon the order of a court or of a judge thereof or special tribunal, made upon application supported by affidavit showing that for good reasons specified the production and inspection of the original is essential to the protection of the rights of the parties and the just determination of the cause or proceeding in which same is to be used, and that a copy will not suffice, or when the trial or hearing is being conducted in the same building where such original is kept.

SEC. 3. That whenever the original of any such document, record, paper, or map is required to be and is produced in court, same shall not be taken from the custody of the officer required by law to keep same, but after inspection and at the close of the trial or hearing shall be returned to the office from which taken.

Mr. MEREDITH. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman a question. This bill, as I understand it, permits a copy of a document or record to be used as if it were the original, even in criminal cases. Suppose a man was indicted for forgery, is there any provision that the original paper shall be produced?

Mr. RAY. Certainly. That is all taken care of in the bill. Mr. Speaker, permit me to say that this bill is the unanimous report of the Committee on the Judiciary. There is no objection to it at all, though one or two amendments are recommended. It was introduced by me at the request and solicitation of the Attorney-General of the United States. Papers are taken under a subpœna from the public officers of the Government and then get lost, and this has happened so often that it has led to great inconvenience and difficulty. This bill permits the use of a copy duly certified or sworn to in place of the original, but at the same time if either party desires the production of the original in court, it must be produced.

Mr. MEREDITH. The gentleman's explanation is perfectly satisfactory to me. I was unable to see how, in a prosecution for forgery, you could prevent the production in court of the original papers.

Mr. RAY. Certainly not; and under the bill as it stands now either party may have the original produced in any case on filing an affidavit that its production is necessary. He does not have to make a motion. It is simply an ex parte proceeding. The design of the bill is to protect and preserve public records and documents.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

Amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to, as follows:

Add at the end of section 2 the following:

"Or when the officer or Department having the official custody of same refuses or neglects to furnish a copy on request."

In line 3, section 3, strike out the word "same" and insert the word "it" in lieu thereof.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. RAY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

P. S. CORBETT.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 6) for the relief of P. S. Corbett.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the accounts of P. S. Corbett, formerly United States marshal of the State of Nevada, be readjusted by the Treasury Department, and that the services rendered and expenses incurred by said Corbett in his various attempts to arrest George E. Spencer, and for attempting to arrest persons charged with selling liquor to Indians, be allowed under the head of "Extraordinary expense account;" and also that the said Corbett be credited with full mileage, as provided in section 837 of the Revised Statutes of the United States applicable to the marshals of Oregon and Nevada, from the place of arrest to the place of commitment: Provided, That no allowance shall be made except for money actually expended and services actually rendered in good faith.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I shall be glad to hear a statement as to this bill.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will make a brief statement.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nevada can make a statement, subject to the right of any member to object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. NEWLANDS. With reference to this bill, I wish to say that it involves only a few hundred dollars disallowed in the accounts of the United States marshal for Nevada.

Mr. SAYERS. What does the gentleman call "a few hundred dollars"?

Mr. NEWLANDS. The amount disallowed is $467.76.

Mr. SAYERS. On what ground was it disallowed by the Department?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Upon the ground that the expenditures did not come under the "extraordinary expense account." These expenditures were incurred in the arrest of George E. Spencer, who was conspicuous in the star-route cases. The United States marshal for the district of Nevada received telegrams from the Attorney-General of the United States requesting him to spare no effort to make the arrest.

Mr. SAYERS. At what time were these services rendered?

Mr. NEWLANDS. In 1884. The Attorney-General of the United States has recommended the payment of this claim. It has been passed upon by the Senate, and has been approved by the Committee on Claims of the House. The expenses, the report says, were incurred in good faith and in the discharge of the marshal's official duties, and ought in equity to be refunded.

Mr. SAYERS. When does the gentleman say the services were rendered?

Mr. NEWLANDS. In 1884.

Mr. SAYERS. The star-route cases were some time before that.

Mr. NEWLANDS. A telegram from "Brewster, Attorney-General," is dated November 29, 1882, and in it he says:

Do not delay your efforts to find him so long as you have reason to believe he is in your district.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, the services performed by this marshal were performed under the direction of the Attorney-General of the United States. The claim came to the Committee on Claims, and it was there shown that the expense was incurred under the direction of the office of the Attorney-General.

Mr. SAYERS. Has the Attorney-General approved the claim?

Mr. COX. Yes.

Mr. NEWLANDS. That appears in the report.

Mr. LOUD. If the Attorney-General has approved the claim, why was it not regularly submitted to the Committee on Appropriations as a deficiency?

Mr. COX. I will tell the gentleman why. On an examination of the claim before the Committee on Claims, it was found that there was no appropriation for these star-route expenses.

Mr. LOUD. But why should it ever have gone to the committee? If it is approved by the Attorney-General as properly chargeable to his office, I ask the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] if the usual course would not be to send it to the Committee on Appropriations and ask an appropriation for it as a deficiency.

Mr. SAYERS. Unquestionably, if these were deficiencies incurred under the law, they would have come to the Committee on Appropriations. I suspect that if the matter were investigated it would be found that these expenses were incurred outside of the law and that the Attorney-General had no power to authorize them.

Mr. COX. As a member of the committee, I "suspect" that the point decided in the Committee on Claims was that the Attorney-General had held that he had no authority to pay the claim, and had sent it to the committee with the recommendation that it be allowed.

Mr. LOUD. But it is customary for the Attorney-General in these cases to appeal to Congress for an appropriation as a deficiency. These deficiencies are occurring every year. This is no extraordinary case, if it has any merit——

Mr. COX. That is true.

Mr. LOUD (continuing). And why has it not gone in the regular way of all such matters? Does not the gentleman think that that gives it at least a tinge of suspicion?

Mr. COX. I do not think so.

Mr. LOUD. Then will the gentleman tell us why it has not gone through the regular channels, and been paid as other claims of this character are paid?

Mr. COX. Oh, my friend, since he has ceased to be a member of the Committee on Claims, is getting a little suspicious about all these matters.

Mr. LOUD. Oh, no; we have always agreed there.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, the trouble seems to be that the gentleman from Nevada is seeking to secure a double allowance for this man. He has already been paid his expenses of travel to the city of Washington. He is allowed 10 cents a mile. But under the statutes providing for the expenses of the United States marshals for Oregon and Nevada, they were allowed double there, while in coming to Washington they are not so allowed. Now, it occurs to me that this man, having been allowed a 10-cent rate per mile, has had enough, and I therefore object.

MARY E. HERD.

Mr. COLSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 8086) granting a pension to Mary E. Herd, widow of Lieut. Col. A. J. Herd.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 1984) to provide for the use and occupation of reservoir sites reserved was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

REMOVAL OF POLITICAL DISABILITIES.

The bill (H. R. 10102) to remove the political disabilities of Col. William E. Simms was read the first time by its title.

Mr. HOAR. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be put on its passage without a reference to the Judiciary Committee.

The bill was read the second time at length; and by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to state, before the final vote is declared, that this gentleman was a gallant officer of the Mexican war, and belongs to a family that had served the country for several generations. He is quite old and in feeble health. Although I have no formal application, yet I have here a very touching letter written by him to Mr. Justice Harlan, in which he expresses his love of country, his regard for the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] and other old associates, and his desire to become fully a citizen of the United States again.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed (two-thirds of the Senators present voting in the affirmative).

JAMES W. DUNN.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 321) granting a pension to James W. Dunn.

The amendment was, in line 6, before the word "dollars," to strike out "sixty" and insert "thirty."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment will be concurred in.

AGRICULTURAL EXPERIMENT STATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of Agriculture, transmitting a report of the work and expenditures of the agricultural experiment stations, established under the act of Congress of March 2, 1887, for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1896; which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of Agriculture, requesting that if the report of the work and expenditures of the agricultural experiment stations for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1896, be printed, 2,000 copies be furnished for the use of the Agricultural Department; which was referred to the Committee on Printing, and ordered to be printed.

It is important that this correction should at once be made, and I am directed by the committee to report a joint resolution correcting the statute. I ask unanimous consent to have it considered at the present time.

The joint resolution (S. R. 206) to construe Senate joint resolution No. 148, Fifty-fourth Congress, second session, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Be it resolved, etc., That Senate joint resolution No. 148, Fifty-fourth Congress, second session, shall not be construed as reviving the statute, chapter 69, August 23, 1871, of the First District legislative assembly, but only so much thereof as exempts from license tax persons bringing marketing to the District or selling produce of their own raising.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. GALLINGER introduced a bill (S. 3713) to regulate the service and fix the hours of labor for persons employed as policemen in the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. BLANCHARD (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3714) for the relief of E. A. Givens, sr., Arcadia, La.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3715) for the relief of Lemuel Tanner, of Lafourche Parish, La.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3716) for the relief of A. E. and M. E. Goodrich; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3717) for the relief of Mrs. Ozeine Boudreau, of St. Martin Parish, La.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. MORGAN introduced a bill (S. 3718) to authorize the Montgomery, Hayneville and Camden Railroad Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Alabama River between Lower Peachtree and Prairie Bluff, Ala.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. COCKRELL introduced a bill (S. 3719) for the relief of A. F. Fleet, superintendent of the Missouri Military Academy, Mexico, Mo.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SEWELL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CHANDLER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. COCKRELL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. LODGE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HANSBROUGH submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PLATT submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CARTER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Territories, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CALL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

CHAMBERS C. MULLIN.

On motion of Mr. CAMERON, it was Ordered, That the Committee on Pensions be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 873) granting an increase of pension to Chambers C. Mullin, and that leave be granted to withdraw the papers in the case from the files of the Senate.

PAY OF STENOGRAPHER.

Mr. CHANDLER submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the stenographer reporting the hearings on the Loud bill, before the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, on January 16, 23, and 30, 1897, be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

READING OF WASHINGTON'S FAREWELL ADDRESS.

Mr. HOAR submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That on Monday, February 22, current, immediately after the reading of the Journal, Washington's Farewell Address be read to the Senate by Mr. DANIEL, a Senator from the State of Virginia, and that thereafter the Senate will proceed with its business.

NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD GRANT.

Mr. CARTER submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, requested to furnish for the information of the Senate a statement as to what deficiency, if any, existed in the grant to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company under acts of Congress of July 2, 1864, and May 31, 1870, at the dates of the various definite locations of said road.

DAVID SAMPLE.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (H. R. 3926) to correct the war record of David Sample. It is a short bill, and will take but a moment.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to so amend the records of the War Department as to remove the charge of mutiny, conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman, and disobedience and defiance of orders from his superior officers, from the record of Second Lieut. David Sample, late of Company E, Fifteenth Michigan Infantry Volunteers, and to grant him an honorable discharge.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MONONGAHELA RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. QUAY. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the last bill on the Calendar, the bill (H. R. 1694) to authorize the construction of a bridge over the Monongahela River from the city of McKeesport to the township of Mifflin, Allegheny County, Pa.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MEMORIAL OF HEROES OF THE REVOLUTIONARY WAR.

Mr. GEAR. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3608) setting apart a plot of public ground in the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia, for memorial purposes, under the auspices of the National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to set apart a plot 200 feet square, at the intersection of Fourteenth street and B street, for the purpose of a memorial building to commemorate the services and perpetuate the memory of the heroes of the Revolutionary war, to be erected and owned by the National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution, and provides that when it ceases to be used for that purpose it shall revert to the United States, and all rights hereby granted shall determine and cease.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY O. H. STONEMAN.

Mr. SHOUP submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 205) granting a pension to Mary O. H. Stoneman, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amount proposed to be inserted insert "fifty;" and the House agree to the same.

GEO. L. SHOUP,
JNO. L. MITCHELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
HENRY F. THOMAS,
GEO. C. CROWTHER,
C. J. ERDMAN,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

BILLIARD TABLES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. PROCTOR submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5490) to license billiard and pool tables in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference agree to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same amended as follows: Strike out the matter proposed to be inserted; also strike out of section 4 of the bill only the words "or a room connected with or opening out of or adjacent to such rooms;" and that the Senate agree to the same.

ISHAM G. HARRIS,
REDFIELD PROCTOR,
GEO. PEABODY WETMORE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
G. M. CURTIS,
A. MILNES,
J. H. HULING,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

MAJ. GEN. JULIUS H. STAHEL.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1694) granting an increase of pension to Maj. Gen. Julius H. Stahel, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amount proposed to be inserted insert "seventy-five;" and the House agree to the same.

J. H. GALLINGER,
J. C. PRITCHARD,
JOHN M. PALMER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
HENRY F. THOMAS,
GEO. C. CROWTHER,
C. J. ERDMAN,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House insisted upon its amendments to the bill (S. 3328) to amend an act entitled "An act to repeal the timber-culture laws, and for other purposes," agrees to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. LACEY, Mr. ELLIS, and Mr. MCRAE managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 3623) granting a pension to Mrs. Mary Gould Carr, widow of the late Brig. and Bvt. Maj. Gen. Joseph B. Carr, United States Volunteers, deceased; further insists upon its amendment to the said bill disagreed to by the Senate; asks a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. CROWTHER, Mr. THOMAS, and Mr. LAYTON managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 8312) for the preservation and protection of public records and documents, and providing for the use of copies thereof as evidence;

A bill (H. R. 10290) for the relief of Joseph P. Patton; and

A joint resolution (H. Res. 357) providing for printing the reports from diplomatic and consular officers of the United States on the passport regulations of foreign countries.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After seven hours and forty minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 8 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until tomorrow, Saturday, February 20, 1897, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, February 19, 1897.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MRS. MARY GOULD CARR.

Mr. FISCHER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill 3150.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I wish to submit a conference report.

The SPEAKER. The conference report will be read.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2023) granting an increase of pension to Mary Gould Carr, widow of Brig. and Bvt. Maj. Gen. Joseph G. Carr, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendment.

H. F. THOMAS,
F. C. LAYTON,
Managers on the part of the House.
J. H. GALLINGER,
DAVID B. HILL,
GEO. L. SHOUP,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement submitted by the House conferees is as follows:

The managers on the part of the House make the following statement upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses:

As passed by the Senate, the bill carried $75 per month, which the House reduced to $50. The effect of the conference report is to grant the beneficiary $75 per month.

The managers on the part of the House have been led to make this concession for several cogent reasons. As brevet major-general the soldier commanded a division from October 4, 1863, to August, 1865. He participated in nineteen of the most important battles of the war, and his military record is a brilliant one. Though really entitled to a pension for about twenty years, he did not apply until late in life, and was then pensioned for disabilities contracted in the line of duty. During all his campaigns the beneficiary named in the bill was by his side and heroically ministered to the sick and wounded without distinction of rank. She is now aged, is in dependent circumstances, and has an incurable, invalid daughter who looks to her for support.

A bill to pension Mrs. Carr at $75 per month passed both Houses of the present Congress and was sent to the President December 16, 1896, but failed to become a law on account of the holiday adjournment.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I only desire to detain the House for a few moments in explanation of this report. The report involves a bill granting a pension to Mrs. Carr, the widow of Bvt. Maj. Gen. J. B. Carr. The only question of difference between the two Houses is as to the amount of the pension which should be allowed to the widow.

Ordinarily, in view of the fact that General Carr was a gallant soldier and although but a brigadier-general commanding a division for over two years, and participating in nineteen battles, and the further fact that although clearly entitled to a pension he never applied for it until twenty years after the war, when a small pension was allowed for disability incurred in the service and in line of duty, and the further fact that his widow was a war widow, married to him long before the war, and virtually participating with him in all of the exposures and trials of the war, as well as the further fact that she is now aged and feeble in health, comparatively, and totally dependent, without means, having neither income nor property of any kind, there should be no question in the mind of any member here I apprehend, under the precedents recently established, that she should be allowed the sum of at least $50 per month. And in fact that was the sum allowed her by the action of the House.

I am frank to say, however, that if that were the only reason, and if these were the only facts involved, I would be one amongst the last to accede to an addition of $25 a month to the pensioner. But, Mr. Speaker, it is true that a majority of the conferees on the part of the House think that there are at least three other great moving causes that induced us to yield to the Senate bill and increase the usual allowance in such cases $25 a month, making the sum $75. These three reasons are the following: In the first place, a similar bill identical in language with that now under consideration was introduced in the House and passed the House and the Senate, granting $75 per month. It was introduced by Governor Black, the distinguished gentleman who is now the chief executive of the State of New York, and who at that time was a member of Congress. The bill passed the House and the Senate just before the holiday recess, but by reason of that holiday recess it was supposed by the friends of the bill that it became dead, and therefore the friends of the bill, out of abundant precaution, introduced another, the one now under consideration, identical in words and figures with the one that had already passed Congress, allowing this poor widow $75. That is one of the causes that induced your committee to accede to the Senate.

Mr. LACEY. What rate of pension is she now drawing?

Mr. LAYTON. I am sorry to say that I can not answer the gentleman from Iowa as to that, but my impression is that she is not drawing any.

Mr. LACEY. Is she entitled to any under the general law?

Mr. LAYTON. Yes; she would be entitled to the ordinary pension of $8 or $12 a month, or perhaps $30.

Mr. MILES. Thirty, I think.

Mr. LACEY. There was nothing in the service disability which produced death, so that she could get $30 a month under the general law, was there?

Mr. LAYTON. The testimony adduced before the committee was that it was at least an indirect cause of death.

Mr. LACEY. He died twenty or thirty years after the war.

Mr. LAYTON. Yes. I will state to the gentleman that he drew a pension for disabilities incurred in the war, having made application therefor some twenty years after the close of the war.

Mr. LOUD. He died, anyway.

Mr. LAYTON. He died about two years ago, and I am informed that the widow is not receiving any pension.

The second great moving cause that induced us to make this extra allowance to this widow is the fact, established by the testimony, that she was with her husband at all times during the war, frequently on the field of battle. While there she nursed and took care of the soldiers without regard to rank, privates as well as officers, for which she never asked or received any compensation.

A third reason, above all the ordinary ones that I have mentioned, that induced us to yield to the Senate was that this poor widow, who is without means, has dependent upon her an invalid daughter, who, having no other relatives or friends to support her, is now dependent upon this old mother. For these three reasons we thought that the House ought to depart from the rule recently adopted, and allow this widow the sum of $75 a month. I repeat, first, because Congress has already during this session made her this allowance; second, because of the fact that she served as a nurse during the whole period of the war, and third, because she has an invalid daughter—the daughter of this old soldier—entirely dependent upon her for support. When you take these things into consideration, Mr. Speaker, it will readily be seen that the small sum of $75 per month will not more than afford a very reasonable support for these two individuals. For these reasons, we have acceded, very reluctantly, perhaps, to a departure from the ordinary rule which I understand has been adopted by the House, believing that the case is one of exceptional merit. Therefore we were constrained to yield to the Senate and recommend the adoption of the Senate bill.

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Speaker, I had the honor to partly represent this House upon the conference committee which presents this report. I dissent from the report of the majority, because I believe there is no merit, justice, or equity in granting to the widow of a brigadier-general the sum of $75 per month, when this House has gone upon record, time and time again, in cases equally meritorious, in granting pensions at the rate of $50 a month.

I stand here and say frankly to this House that you are making a record in regard to these special pension bills that will become a curse to the members of the Fifty-fourth Congress. There has been no system in granting these pensions. They have been granted recklessly and extravagantly in the cases of the widows of those soldiers who happened to wear shoulder straps, and I stand here, Mr. Speaker, in the interest of the thousands upon thousands of widows and the old soldiers of the late war who made it possible for those men whose widows are now asking these exorbitant pensions to wear shoulder straps.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the only reason that was advanced in the committee of conference for presenting this report at $75 a month was that the bill had passed the House and the Senate at that rate some time ago, and that it would embarrass the gentleman representing the State of New York in the higher branch of the National Legislature to reduce the pension at this time to $50 per month. But I stand here and say that it is simple justice—and it is never too late to do right—that I am asking in these cases. I never have opposed any legitimate, honest pension bill upon this floor, and if I had the power I would be in favor of granting a pension to every man who bore a gun in the defense of his country and his country's flag, and to the widow of every man who carried a gun. But I am not in favor of granting these extravagant pensions to the widows of general officers, and making these great distinctions between the widows of the officers in comparison with those pensions granted to the widows of private soldiers, especially when this House has placed itself so squarely upon record by saying, time and again, that $50 per month is sufficient.

Mr. LOUD. The gentleman seems to be familiar with this and other cases. I will ask him if the services rendered by General Carr were any more meritorious than those rendered by General Stoneman?

Mr. CROWTHER. I will say frankly that there are no more meritorious circumstances surrounding this case than surround many others, except perhaps the fact that the widow is in a necessitous condition and has an invalid daughter dependent upon her for support.

Mr. LAYTON. And has an invalid daughter dependent upon her, and also that the widow herself served as a nurse during the war.

Mr. LOUD. Just the same condition as General Stoneman's widow; and did not General Stoneman hold a higher rank than this general?

Mr. CROWTHER. He did not hold as high a rank as General Stoneman, and I will say further, in reply to the gentleman from California, that a few days ago this House passed a bill pensioning the widow of General McKibben, of Philadelphia, a woman who was absolutely helpless, who requires the constant care and attention of another person, and she is the widow of two brave generals of the last conflict, at the rate of $50 per month. I want to say also, Mr. Speaker, in this connection, that there are no disabilities that the soldier incurred in the service that would entitle him to more than $30 a month, even though he had obtained a pension under the general law, and I submit to this House whether or not it is either fair or just to grant a pension to the widow more than double that the soldier himself would have received.

Mr. CANNON. Does the gentleman expect to get an early vote? Will the gentleman from Ohio allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. LAYTON. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. Does the gentleman expect to get an early vote upon this conference report?

Mr. LAYTON. I desire to have it as expeditiously as possible. The House is familiar with the case.

Mr. CANNON. I hope the gentleman will demand the previous question.

Mr. CROWTHER. I yield five minutes of my time to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY].

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I believe I have the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman in charge of the bill is entitled to the floor. Did the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Missouri, or has the gentleman obtained the floor in his own right?

Mr. LAYTON. I did not on the floor; but I had, prior to the consideration of the bill, an understanding with the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Missouri has the floor in his own time, he has the right to yield it under the custom of the House. The gentleman from Iowa is recognized.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I will only occupy a very few minutes. The difficulty about these bills is this: Where the widow of a brigadier-general is entitled to a pension under the general law she makes the usual application for it to the Pension Bureau, and does not come to Congress. When not entitled under the general law, she comes to Congress to make an application for a special act, instead of asking for such a rating as the general law would allow her if she had come within its terms, and she usually asks double or treble that amount. Now, I have a bill upon this Calendar (that of Mrs. Rice) and have not thus far been able to get it considered. Why? Simply because in the case of the widow of some general killed in battle her claim has been allowed at $30 a month, and in that of the widow of some other general, who died of old age, the widow's claim is allowed by special act at $50 a month or $75, and in some cases even at $100. I have presented a bill for a widow whose husband was killed in battle, a brigadier-general, brevet major-general, and being killed in battle his widow was placed on the roll at $30 a month under the general law.

A bill has been reported giving her $50 a month, on the assumption that it has been the general consensus of opinion in this House that a brigadier-general's or a major-general's widow should have a higher rate of pension allowed than that of a lieutenant-colonel, which is $30 a month. The rate of pension allowed under the law for a brigadier-general, a major-general, or colonel, is $30 a month, the same as lieutenant-colonel. This being the case, I introduced this bill with the understanding that the House had adopted a general rule. I find myself confronted with the proposition that her bill can not be reached for consideration because so many bills have gone through at $75 a month, an unreasonable rate; and I can not get this bill considered, which is a reasonable rate, because of the objection against bills that are giving an unreasonable rate, over $50 a month, in order that the widow of a man who died of old age thirty years after the war shall have a pension of $75 a month.

Mr. LAYTON. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. LACEY. Certainly.

Mr. LAYTON. Does not the gentleman from Iowa believe that, in accordance with the policy that has been adopted by the Congresses ever since the war, that of pensioning an officer over and above lieutenant-colonel, it ought to stand upon its own merits as to the amount his widow should obtain?

Mr. LACEY. There has been no fixed policy. The policy of this Congress has been to recognize the uniform rate of $50 per month to the widows of general officers. Of course exceptions have been made, but the exceptions have given us a great deal of trouble. We made an exception in the case of General Blunt's widow. General Carr died, I am told, of cancer, long after the war, and this bill stands in the way of the passage of another bill where the soldier was mortally wounded in battle. Now, we ought to have some uniform rule upon this and not exceed $50 a month in any case; and there should be some means of passing other bills, rated at $50 or less, for the widows of brigadier-generals and those who contracted the disease from which they died in the service or were killed in battle, as in the case to which I have referred.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. LACEY. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Suppose the widow of General Carr had applied for a pension under the law and had obtained it, how much would she have got?

Mr. LACEY. Eight dollars a month.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I do not mean under the act of 1890; I mean under the old law.

Mr. LACEY. She could not have got to exceed $30. That would have been the limit. In other words, the lady to whom I have referred gets a pension of $30 a month. Why? Because her husband was killed in battle, leaving her with five little children to care for. The other lady is recommended for $75 a month. Why? Because the general law does not cover her case and it is given by a special act.

Mr. CROWTHER. If the gentleman will permit me to correct his statement, had she obtained a pension through the Pension Office she would have got only $8 a month.

Mr. LACEY. Yes; the death of her husband not having been caused by army service.

Mr. WATSON of Ohio. Does the gentleman from Iowa think that the lady he speaks of, who has five children to take care of and gets $30 a month, gets enough?

Mr. LACEY. I do not.

Mr. WATSON of Ohio. Then why do you not take steps to have it increased?

Mr. LACEY. I have done so, but these other bills crowd in, giving other widows of officers $75 a month, which is an unreasonable amount, and which prejudices deserving cases, so that legislation in their interest is sidetracked because of the pressure of these claims for excessive amounts beyond the $50 a month which has been the amount granted in such cases under the established policy of Congress heretofore.

Mr. HULL. I want to ask my colleague a question. The question of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WATSON] implies that my colleague is opposing any increase above $30 a month——

Mr. LACEY. I am not. I am in favor of giving this applicant $30 a month.

A MEMBER. Fifty dollars?

Mr. LACEY. No; $30; because if we give her the utmost that she could get under the general law when the disability of her husband was contracted in the service, that certainly ought to be enough. On the other hand, the widows of general officers who died in the service should have $50 a month. I hold that the one who has a valid claim under the general law should be rated at $50 a month, while the one who would be rated at $8 a month under the act of 1890 may properly be rated at $30 a month under a special act.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CROWTHER] yield the floor?

Mr. CROWTHER. No, sir; I reserve the balance of my time. I do not propose that anybody shall take me off the floor. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. BLUE].

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman from Missouri if he will not yield to me to move to postpone the consideration of this case until Monday next, after the reading of the Journal? My object in making that request is that I may ask the House to take up immediately the deficiency bill, so that we may dispose of it and send it to the Senate.

Mr. LAYTON. If that is done, it will result in the entire defeat of this bill. We want the case decided one way or the other. This widow ought to have either $75 or $50 a month, and unless the bill is disposed of now it will probably fail entirely.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Move the previous question, then.

Mr. LAYTON. If I can get the floor I will do so.

Mr. CANNON. Can not we have an agreement that the debate shall close in twenty minutes?

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires the House to understand the status of the bill and the question that is pending. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LAYTON] presented this conference report. He yielded the floor and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CROWTHER] took it in his own right, and is therefore entitled to an hour, and may yield his time under the custom of the House. After the expiration of the hour the Chair will recognize the gentleman who has charge of the bill, in order that he may take what course he sees fit.

Mr. CANNON. I will ask the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CROWTHER], and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LAYTON], whether it will not be satisfactory to them if the House will agree to close the debate in twenty minutes?

Mr. LAYTON. I have no objection to that.

Mr. CROWTHER. I will agree to that, but I submit to the gentleman from Ohio that if he will consent to make this $50 a month, the bill can go right through now.

Mr. LAYTON. Let the debate be limited to twenty minutes and the time divided equally. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CROWTHER] will bear me out in the statement that it was virtually the understanding before the conference report was taken up that the time should be equally divided.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LAYTON] asks unanimous consent that the debate upon the conference report be closed in twenty minutes, the time to be equally divided. Is there objection?

Mr. MILNES. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. BLUE] is recognized.

Mr. MILES. Mr. Speaker, is it in order to move that debate close in twenty minutes?

The SPEAKER. It is not in order.

Mr. BLUE. Mr. Speaker, if I can have the attention of the House for a few moments, I shall not occupy very much of its time on this question.

It seemed apparent a few days ago that it was settled by the House at least, as something in the nature of a rule for the government of pension cases, that we should fix the limit of pensions at not exceeding $50 per month in the case of the widows of general officers. In accordance with that understanding, we gave to the widow of General Stoneman a pension of that amount. His record is a part of the history of this country. His services as an officer are surpassed by few of the leaders of the Federal Army.

For his efficiency he was made the commander of one of the two grand divisions of Sherman's army in its march to the sea; and he rendered to the country a glorious as well as a valuable service in that memorable campaign. Fifty dollars a month is the pension fixed by the House as sufficient in that case for his widow.

Now, why should the widow of this general, inferior in rank, with services far less extensive and far less glorious and valuable, be made an exception to break what was sought to be established as a rule, and give her $75 per month instead of $50? The excuse is that she is old; that she is dependent upon her exertions; that she has also dependent upon her a daughter, and, if I caught the statement correctly, another argument was made that the daughter had served as an army nurse. If that is true, she should be pensioned in her own right.

Mr. HULL. That is a mistake. It was his widow who was an army nurse.

Mr. BLUE. Gentlemen around me tell me that it was the widow who was the army nurse and that I did not hear the statement correctly. Now, I do not know, Mr. Speaker, why that should be any good reason for increasing this pension. But even if it be so, I see no reason why this pension should be any larger than the usual pension in such cases. To be accurate about it, and strictly accurate, if she is entitled by reason of service as an army nurse to a pension, let it take its course and be adjusted as the pension of an army nurse. Twelve dollars is the limit we have fixed in such cases as that at all times, and that would make her pension, with $50 per month as the wife of a general officer, but $62 per month. If we are to adhere to the rule, we should certainly not go beyond that.

Further than that, the House, acting in behalf of widows in absolutely destitute circumstances, considered the case of the widow of a former member of this body, General Vandever, and gave her a pension of but $50 per month. If this bill is to become a law after the repeated efforts to fix its rate at $75 a month, it must stand before the country as a case of invidious discrimination or preference in behalf of a particular widow rather than a pension along the line of what is just, equitable, and fair under all of the circumstances.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE] said, and well said, the other day, that the difference in pensions this body is making—that is, the difference between the pensions of the widows of general officers and the widows of enlisted men—is bringing discontent throughout the land. The fact is deleterious and injurious to the whole system of pensions. The effect will come back to the House hereafter, as suggested by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CROWTHER] to-day, whose remarks I heartily approve, and in whose views I heartily concur. I say, sir, if this rule is to be preserved, let us stand by the $50 per month pension, and limit it to that sum, in cases of widows of general officers.

It is better, Mr. Speaker, to settle the matter now than at any time in the future. If this is to be made an exception, in the case of a widow of a brigadier-general, then other exceptions will be found to follow this, and other excuses made to pay other pensions no more meritorious than the one now under consideration.

So, Mr. Speaker, I trust that the House will adhere to its action heretofore taken and refuse to support the views of the committee of conference.

I yield back to the gentleman from Missouri the remainder of the time accorded to me.

Mr. CROWTHER. I yield seven minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LAYTON], and then three to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL].

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I wish to submit a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LAYTON. The gentleman having yielded to me seven minutes, would it be in order for me to yield a portion of that time to my colleague?

Mr. CANNON. I thought we were to have a twenty-minute arrangement?

Mr. LAYTON. The gentleman from Illinois does not seem to have had a distinct understanding with the gentleman from Missouri. At all events, seven minutes have been yielded to me, and I desire to yield so much as my colleague wants——

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suppose that the gentleman could yield to his colleague with the consent of the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. CROWTHER. I have no objection whatever to the gentleman occupying the time in such way as he sees proper.

Mr. LAYTON. Then I yield of the time accorded to me such part as the gentleman from Ohio, my colleague [Mr. WATSON], may desire to occupy.

Mr. WATSON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I believe I have not spoken upon a question of this kind since I have been a member of the House, but I have a deep interest in this kind of legislation, and have been pained almost beyond expression at some of the sentiments which I have heard uttered upon this side of the House in reference to some pension bills.

I want, in the first place, to say that I concur most heartily in the language of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CROWTHER] when he says that if he had the power he would pension every man who bore a gun and fought in defense of the Republic. So would I. But I say also to the gentleman from Missouri and to the gentlemen of the House that when the widow of a brave general, who is to-day absolutely without means of support, who is past 70 years of age, who is herself almost an invalid, who has an invalid daughter depending upon her for the necessities of life, and nothing with which to meet those necessities, comes before the American Congress and asks this body to give her during the few remaining years she shall live the meager pittance of $75 per month, it is small business for the American Congress to refuse the request.

I appeal to the patriotism as well as the judgment of this House to pass this bill. Gentlemen tell us that the men who fought in the ranks, the men who bore the muskets, will resent this kind of legislation. In behalf of every man in all that mighty host who battled for the Stars I resent that statement as an unfair insinuation. There is not a single soldier who did battle for the flag of the Republic, if he knew all the circumstances of this case, would object to this bill. There is not one who would not say that he would be glad to have this Congress put the name of this widow upon the pension roll at $75 per month. I want to say, in reply to a suggestion made by the distinguished gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY], in speaking of a case which he had a short time ago, that the trouble is with his case and not with this one. The widow to whom he refers does not receive what she ought, but that is no reason why the gentleman should vote against the allowance provided for in this bill. The fact that his constituent does not receive what she is entitled to receive does not justify the gentleman in attacking the amount which this bill proposes to give. And I regret that the gentleman is willing to withhold a proper allowance in the one case because he can not secure a proper allowance in the other.

Such logic should not commend itself to either the judgment or the patriotism of this House. I would guard the Treasury of this nation with as much sacredness and as much integrity as any man upon this floor, but it is not a useless waste of the nation's money to pay the amount provided for in this bill, when all the circumstances of the case are considered. On the other hand, I think the fairness of the proposition will commend itself to the mind of every member upon this floor. This nation is great enough and rich enough to pay $75 per month to the widow of every general who is situated as this unfortunate widow is. She has passed the seventieth year of her life, is in feeble health, and has dependent upon her an invalid daughter of middle age.

If we should grant this widow $75 per month, our action would be sustained by the sympathy and judgment of the entire nation. I do not believe that any soldier would complain of it, but, on the contrary, would rejoice at the generosity and patriotism of Congress in doing what the necessities of the situation demanded.

Mr. LAYTON. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. CROWTHER. I yield the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] five minutes. Then I shall ask for the previous question.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, there is no pretense on the part of the advocates of this bill that General Carr's life was shortened one single day by his service in the Army, or that, as a result of his service in the Army, his wife was left a widow one single hour sooner than she would have been if he had never enlisted. He had rendered distinguished service in the Army, but his service in civil life was probably more distinguished than his service in military life. There is nothing in this case which takes it out of the general rule established by the House on repeated votes of giving a maximum of $50 a month to the widows of general officers.

Under the general law, if his death had resulted from the service, his widow would have been entitled to a pension of $30 a month. Under the law of 1890, which applies to soldiers and officers alike, his death resulting from causes entirely outside of his army service, she would be entitled to $8 a month. And I want to say to my associates and colleagues in this Hall that when the Congress of the United States goes from $8 a month to $50 a month, as is proposed in this case, it is dealing not only justly, but generously with the widow of this soldier.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WATSON] has gone out of the record in this case to speak for the soldiers of the United States, and quote them in favor of highest pensions to officers' widows. I think I am entitled to speak somewhat for the soldiers myself. I doubt not, Mr. Speaker, that I associate with them more intimately than does my friend from Ohio [Mr. WATSON], and I want to say to him and to this House that he is mistaken when he says that the private soldiers of the United States do not resent this constant and growing tendency on the part of Congress to draw such a marked distinction between the widow of the soldier and the widow of the officer. They recognize a proper distinction, but this House in every case of the widow of a private soldier, with possibly one exception, has limited the pension to $12 a month—the largest amount given to the widow of a private by general law. Now, in the case of this widow, if we make her pension $50 per month, we increase the pension that she is entitled to under the law $42. I say that the charge of our being ungenerous or parsimonious with the widows of general officers, when we grant them $50 a month, does not lie against this House.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I can not get any time to speak on this question, and I want to ask the gentleman if it is not true that he is getting letters from the widows of soldiers in his district, and others who have read of our passing these bills at $75 a month, asking him to introduce bills for them, and if it is not true that this legislation has created great dissatisfaction among pensioners who can only get $12 a month?

Mr. HULL. It is not only true that I am getting letters, but I am also getting resolutions adopted by Grand Army posts, protesting against this continual discrimination against the widows of private soldiers in favor of the widows of general officers.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I will again ask the gentleman if there is any excuse for making a departure from the precedent of $50 a month in this case except attempted liberality with an overflowing Treasury, which everybody knows we have not got?

Mr. HULL. The gentleman can answer that question about as well as I could. But I want to say again, Mr. Speaker, that if we adhere to the rule we have adopted by vote after vote, especially where the soldier's life was not shortened a day by disease contracted in his army service, of granting $50 a month to his widow, we are dealing generously with her.

Mr. LAYTON. Will the gentleman permit me, before he demands the previous question? I desire to say, and have the RECORD show, that I submitted this conference report in the absence and at the special request of my colleague from Michigan, the chairman of the committee [Mr. THOMAS].

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Speaker, I hope the House will reject this report of the committee of conference, and send the bill back to conference with instructions to the conferees to stand by the House amendment.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Which was $30 a month.

Mr. CROWTHER. Which was $50 a month. I now demand the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The question was taken on agreeing to the conference report, and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. LAYTON. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 44, noes 100.

So the report of the committee of conference was rejected.

Mr. CROWTHER. I move that the House insist upon its amendment and ask for a further conference upon the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CROWTHER. I move that the conferees be instructed to insist upon $50 per month.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman moves that the conferees be instructed to insist upon the House amendment for the payment of $50 per month.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. CROWTHER, Mr. THOMAS, and Mr. LAYTON.

GENERAL DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering general appropriation bills, my intention being to call up the general deficiency bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. PAYNE in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the bill H. R. 10329.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] how much general debate is desired?

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, I suggest to the gentleman in charge of the bill that this bill be read and considered by paragraphs, with the understanding that there are two amendments which will be offered touching the appropriation for the Southern Pacific Railway Company.

Mr. CANNON. Southern and Union.

Mr. SAYERS (continuing). That these amendments be considered when the consideration of the bill shall have been concluded, and that an hour and a half be allowed upon a side. I would also suggest to the gentleman that in the consideration of this bill paragraph by paragraph latitude be allowed for the discussion, and I think we can get through quite rapidly.

Mr. CANNON. Do you think you want an hour and a half?

Mr. SAYERS. I do not know that we shall.

Mr. CANNON. I now ask unanimous consent that general debate may be considered as closed upon this bill, with the exception that in the consideration of the bill we may pass the item carrying an appropriation for the Southern Pacific Company, and at the conclusion of the bill we may recur to that item, and that there may be, if desired, an hour and a half general debate thereon.

Mr. SAYERS. On each side.

Mr. CANNON. On each side.

Mr. GROW. I object, for the purpose of making a statement.

The CHAIRMAN. A statement would hardly be in order. If there is no objection, the gentleman will proceed.

Mr. GROW. I only need a minute to do it. The House in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union is the only place for general debate upon questions affecting the whole country—general questions. Unless it is understood I can have thirty or forty minutes to speak upon an important question that the whole country is interested in, I shall object to this unanimous consent.

Mr. SAYERS. Just a moment. I think if this agreement which the gentleman from Illinois proposes is effected, there will be no question about the gentleman from Pennsylvania being able to get thirty minutes.

Mr. GROW. Mr. Chairman, it was after ten years' contest that this House passed a free-homestead bill. A similar bill is pending in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and unless it is understood that on this bill I can have thirty or forty minutes, which is the only opportunity I can get to discuss it, I shall object.

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Chairman, I will not be placed under bond. This is public business, and in the closing days of this session I want this bill to go to the Senate at the earliest possible minute; and I want to say to the gentleman I have every disposition to accommodate him, but I will not now agree that forty minutes of any time for general debate shall be given.

Mr. GROW. There is no danger of general appropriation bills failing. Not at all. I have seen four or five passed in the last twenty-four hours of a session? If there is no disposition to yield that to me, I oppose any agreement.

Mr. CANNON. Very well.

Mr. GROW. Thirty or forty minutes is just of as much importance on a public question at one time as at another.

Mr. SAYERS. Let me suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that there is great danger of some of these appropriation bills failing.

Mr. GROW. Not a bit of it.

Mr. SAYERS. All right.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, this general deficiency bill carries $8,441,029.43. The estimates are $9,325,915.21. The bill, therefore, is a reduction of the estimates of $884,885.78. The bill contains a great many items which can best be considered under the five-minute rule, and now, if it is satisfactory to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS], I will yield to him what time he desires, or, if he does not wish to address the committee, I will move to close general debate.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to consume the time of the committee. I am entirely confident that at the proper time there will be sufficient opportunity given for debate upon the important items, and I do not wish to delay the consideration of the bill by taking the floor now.

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise.

Mr. GROW. All right. If the House wants to vote down all discussion on an important question, it can do so.

Mr. CANNON. I have every disposition to give the gentleman from Pennsylvania the time he desires, but——

Mr. GROW. Then grant it now by unanimous consent; or, if you think you can spend forty minutes in a better way, try it.

The motion of Mr. CANNON was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. PAYNE, from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that they had had under consideration the bill H. R. 10329, the general deficiency bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for further consideration of general appropriation bills, and pending that motion I move that all general debate upon the general deficiency bill be limited to one minute.

Mr. GROW. I hope that motion will be voted down.

The question being taken, the Speaker declared that he was in doubt as to the result.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 79, noes 94.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for tellers.

Mr. GROW. I demand the yeas and nays, Mr. Speaker.

The yeas and nays were ordered, 76 members voting in favor thereof.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 92, nays 126, not voting 137; as follows:

During the roll call the following took place:

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to interrupt the roll call to ask a unanimous consent. As it is perfectly evident that, in deference to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GROW], the majority of the House desires that he should have his time, I ask consent that the further calling of the roll be dispensed with, and that the House go into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the general deficiency bill. If that be agreed to, I will yield the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GROW] forty minutes of my time. [Applause.]

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. I object.

The Clerk resumed and completed the call of the roll.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that general debate upon the deficiency bill be closed at the end of forty-two minutes, and give notice that, if that be agreed to, when we go into Committee of the Whole I will yield forty minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I further ask that the bill may be read through, and that we may pass over the Southern Pacific Railroad item, recurring to it at the end of the bill, and that we may then have an hour and a half for general debate on that item.

Mr. GROW. Mr. Speaker, I object to that arrangement. If the House goes into committee and I am allowed to take the floor, when I get through the gentleman will have the floor, and we will then agree to anything he desires about the bill. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for further consideration of general appropriation bills.

The motion was agreed to; and the House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. PAYNE in the chair.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I believe I am recognized for debate?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for general debate if he desires to occupy the floor.

Mr. CANNON. I think I exhausted about two minutes of my time heretofore.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair's recollection is that the gentleman occupied three minutes. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Chairman, the House evidently desires to hear the eminent gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GROW] in general debate upon the pending bill. I am exceedingly anxious to get on with the bill. It is now the last days of the session, and the Senate ought to have this important bill promptly. But the House, out of courtesy to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, with which I have no disposition to quarrel—and if I had it would not avail anything [laughter]—the House evidently desires to give the gentleman an opportunity to be heard. Gentlemen are evidently disposed to hear discussion from the gentleman from Pennsylvania. That being the case, I shall be a most interested auditor, and would be very glad now to yield to the gentleman, if it suits his convenience, as much time out of the time remaining to me as I have at my disposal—that is to say, as I understand it, about fifty-six minutes.

Mr. GROW. I thank the gentleman from Illinois for his kindness, but I ask to be recognized to take the floor in my own right, without prejudice to the rights of the gentleman from Illinois, and leave him the right to occupy the floor, with his time, if he chooses to do so hereafter.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman desires more than forty minutes, then, I suppose?

Mr. GROW. I do not think I shall wish to occupy the entire time, but I do not care to deprive the gentleman from Illinois of any of his time.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman now declines to accept the fifty-six minutes?

Mr. GROW. I think my proposition is better.

Mr. CANNON. I ask if the gentleman declines to accept the fifty-six minutes?

Mr. GROW. No.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman will accept, I will yield it to him.

Mr. GROW. No. I suggested that I be allowed to speak in my own time, and the gentleman can take the floor in his own time. If I do not occupy the entire hour accorded to me by the rules, I will yield the balance, if any remains, to the gentleman from Illinois. I do not expect to trespass on the patience of the committee very long.

Mr. CANNON. Now, the gentleman has had his own way in substance up to this time, and if he will not take my fifty-six minutes, out of respect to the gentleman's reputation, and he having the House clearly with him, he shall have it in form as well. I therefore reserve the remainder of my time. If the Chair chooses to recognize the gentleman from Pennsylvania, he can now proceed.

Mr. GROW. Mr. Chairman, when compelled to assert my rights on this floor, I do not propose to take them by the courtesy of anybody. [Applause.]

I appealed to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, stating to him that I wanted to speak some thirty or forty minutes on the general question of free homesteads, the bill now pending in the House. It was a ten-years steady and constant struggle in the House to pass the first free-homestead bill, and when I asked the privilege of being allowed thirty or forty minutes' time on that question I was informed that it was uncertain whether there would be time for that.

Do I understand, Mr. Chairman, that I am now recognized in my own right to speak, under the rule?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. SHERMAN in the chair). That is correct. The gentleman is so recognized.

Mr. GROW. I was simply explaining, Mr. Chairman, why I did not make the effort in a factious spirit. I am ready to advance the business of the House; but when I made my appeal to the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, that I would like thirty or forty minutes to speak on the general question of homesteads—a subject that could not excite any opposition or discussion of importance—I received no answer except that he did not know whether there would be time. I was then forced to assert my own rights on the floor. I thought it was my duty to assert my right as a representative of the people to speak on a public question, interesting to the whole people of the country, without the consent of anybody, and I have taken the floor for that purpose. [Applause.]

Forty-five years ago it was my privilege in this presence to advocate the right of the pioneer settler to his home; and now it is my privilege in the same presence to advocate his rightful ownership in the soil. In 1889, and immediately thereafter, treaties were made with various Indian tribes for their lands in Oklahoma, Nebraska, Minnesota, North and South Dakota, Idaho, Montana, Washington, and Oregon. After the ratification of these treaties, and entirely independent of them, Congress passed laws relative to each of these acquisitions, requiring persons who should settle upon them to pay into the Treasury at the end of five years from $1 to $3.75 per acre. This was an abandonment, so far as these lands are concerned, of the free-homestead policy which applies to all other public lands. The price exacted by the Government for these lands is greater, and in some cases much greater, than the price which existed for any of the agricultural lands of the Government previous to the passage of the free-homestead law. The object of this bill is to put the lands acquired by these treaties under the same homestead provisions as now exist for all other lands heretofore acquired by treaties with Indian tribes or in any other way, and relieve them from imposition of greater hardship and injustice than was ever imposed upon the actual settlers under our land system since the foundation of the Government, when the lands were sold to the highest bidder. This was an innovation on the provisions of the free-homestead policy, and that is the reason I desired to call the attention of the House to the bill now pending as a Senate amendment to the House bill.

This House, in the last session of Congress, passed a bill relieving the settlers in Oklahoma, and it went to the Senate. It was amended there by including all settlers similarly situated on all the public lands of the United States; and it comes back and is pending here on our Calendar. Whether we will have an opportunity to act on it or not I can not say. But after a contest during my former entire Congressional service to secure relief to the pioneer settlers, who have converted our wilderness into blooming fields, and who have established civilization on the ruins of savage life, I was not willing that this session should close without having public attention called to the hardship and injustices imposed upon the settlers on the public lands affected by this bill.

On the 30th day of March, 1852, my first speech as a member of Congress was made in the Old Hall of the House of Representatives, on Man's Right to the Soil. From that time forth, in season and out of season, the policy of free homes for free men was kept constantly before Congress until the 27th day of May, 1862 (to take effect January 1, 1863), when it became the law of the land by the signature of the unlettered child of the prairies, Abraham Lincoln, after I had signed the enrolled bill as Speaker of the House.

There are two interesting incidents connected with the final passage of the original free-homestead bill. First, it took effect on the day of Lincoln's emancipation proclamation. Second, the first settler under the homestead bill, which provided free homes for free men, was named Freeman. Daniel Freeman, of Beatrice, Gage County, Nebr., was a Union soldier, home on a furlough, which would expire on the 2d or 3d day of January, 1863. At a little past midnight on the 1st day of January, 1863, he made his entry in the land office of his district and left his home the same day to take his place again in the ranks on the tented fields. His entry was No. 1, his proof of residence was No. 1, his patent was No. 1, recorded on page 1, of book 1, of the Land Office of the United States. The first settler under this law was a Freeman, and I trust the last of its beneficiaries in the long coming years of the future will be a free man. [Applause.]

The Congress of the United States was the first legislative body of any nation in the world's history, so far as I know, to set apart or attempt to set apart its public domain in homes for its citizen, without money and without price. There had been many efforts made, reaching far back into antiquity, for limiting the number of acres that might be acquired by a single individual, and for preventing or restricting the acquisition of lands by the few, and for a division of public lands among different classes of the people. Four hundred years before the Christian era, Licinius Stolo, a Roman citizen of plebeian birth, was elected tribune of the Commons. He procured the passage of a law, which in history bears his name, restricting the acquisition of the public lands by any one individual to 500 jugera—about 350 acres. During his term of office he also secured the passage of other regulations to prevent the patrician class from monopolizing the lands acquired by conquest or purchase. Two hundred and fifty years later Tiberius Gracchus, of patrician birth—his mother being Cornelia, daughter of Scipio Africanus—was elected tribune of the Commons. He espoused the cause of the plebeians and became their recognized leader. He attempted to revive the old Licinian law, which had fallen into disuse, and lost his life in his efforts to secure a more equitable division of the public lands and to provide for their cultivation by free men instead of slaves. A little later his brother, Caius Gracchus, was elected tribune of the Commons, and he, too, lost his life in endeavoring to secure the reforms advocated by his brother.

Had Rome adopted the policy advocated by the Gracchi, of distributing the public lands among the landless of her citizens, and securing their cultivation by free men instead of slaves, the eagles of the Roman commonwealth might have floated in triumph long after the ivy twined the broken columns of the imperial palace of her Cæsars. For when at last the barbarian from his wilderness home came with torch and spear to the very walls of the Eternal City, there was no longer an independent yeomanry with homes to defend, or a great patriotic laboring people to bare their bosoms in its defense; and the seven hills falls an easy prey to the Goth and Vandal; and Italy, proud mistress of the world, is overrun by rude warriors. The bat and the owl build their nests in the crumbling walls of her Coliseum, the grandest architectural ruin of all antiquity.

From the death of the Gracchi through the more than twenty centuries of subsequent history many attempts had been made in various nations to change the tenure of lands or to provide for their distribution among different classes of the people. But through it all there was a universal consent that the title and rightful ownership in the soil of the earth's surface was in the king or the ruling class, called the State, and that the public domain might rightfully be held as a source of revenue or be doled out in vast manors to court favorites or granted in unlimited quantities in donations and charities. In 1846, Felix Grundy McConnell, a member of Congress from Alabama, introduced in Congress a bill which provided that any head of a family might enter 160 acres of land on filing affidavit that he or she intended to cultivate it for five years and was "wholly unable to pay the minimum price fixed by law." This bill by its very terms was a mere charity and it was so intended. It asserted no principle as to the rightful ownership in the soil or any general policy for the disposition of the public lands. Nothing was done with it after its introduction. Of the many propositions and legislative measures proposed in this country and others relative to the disposition of the public domain, the free-homestead law, passed by the American Congress in 1862, is the only one to my knowledge that was based on the great fundamental principle, founded in nature and natural law, that whoever applies his labor to an unoccupied portion of the earth's surface in its cultivation, seals his title of rightful ownership thereto in the sweat of his face as it moistens the soil he tills. [Applause.]

For ten years after my first entry into Congress, the all-absorbing question of legislative discussion in these Halls, next to that of restricting slave labor institutions to their then existing limits, was the question as to the proper and best disposition to be made of the public lands. For final success in legislation, the policy of setting them apart in free homes for actual settlers had to be divested of the idea that it was one of charity or Government bounty. If that was the case, it could have no permanent place in legislation. To secure such place, it must be recognized, both by lawmakers and the people, as a fundamental right, belonging to the settler, of which he could not justly be deprived. From the first, therefore, I endeavored so far as my ability would permit to enforce the position that the Government should stop all sales of the public lands and confine their occupancy in limited quantities to the actual settler alone, and that this ought to be done as an act of justice to the settler as well as sound policy for the Government. Hence my voice and vote were always against any other disposition of the public lands. The discussion of the question finally culminated in the enactment of the free-homestead law as the fixed policy of the Government in the manner already stated.

In support of the present Senate bill I will read an extract from the speech delivered in the Old Hall before a majority, or very near it, of the members of this House were born. It will, therefore, if they have not been diligent readers of the Congressional Globe, be as new to them, if not to the rest of the House, as anything I might utter at this time. And I am sure it will be quite as conclusive in argument. Before doing so I ask unanimous consent to print as an appendix to my present remarks part of the speech made in 1860 on the homestead law before its passage. The history of the acquisition of the public lands which it contains and the reasons urged for the passage of the bill then pending are all equally applicable to the pending Senate bill.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. SHERMAN). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

[Extract from speech made March 30, 1852, on Man's Right to the Soil.]

"But even if the Government could derive revenue from the sale of the public lands, it is neither just nor sound policy to hold them for that purpose. It is well sometimes to go back of the authority of books and treatises on human rights, composed by authors reared and educated under monarchical institutions, and whose opinions and habits of thought consequently have been more or less shaped and molded by such influences, and examine by the light of reason and natural law the true foundation for governments and of the inherent rights of man.

"The fundamental rights of man may be summed up in two words: Life and happiness. The first is the gift of the Creator, and may be bestowed at his pleasure; but it is not consistent with his character for benevolence that it should be bestowed for any other purpose than to be enjoyed; and that we call happiness. Therefore, whatever nature has provided for preserving the one or promoting the other belongs alike to the whole race. And as the means for sustaining life are derived almost wholly from the soil, every person has a natural right to so much of the earth's surface as may be necessary for his support. To whatever unoccupied portion of it, therefore, he applies his labor for that purpose, from that time forth it becomes appropriated to his own exclusive use; and whatever improvements he may make by his labor becomes his property and subject to his disposal.

"The only true foundation for any right to property is man's labor. That is property, and that alone, which the labor of man has made such. What right, then, can the Government have in the soil of a wild and uncultivated wilderness as a source of revenue, to which not a day's nor an hour's labor has been applied to make it more productive and answer better the end for which it was created, the support and happiness of the race?

"It is said by Blackstone in his Commentaries that—

"There is no foundation in nature or natural law why a set of words upon parchment should convey the dominion of land. The use and occupancy alone gives to man an exclusive right to retain in a permanent manner that specified land, which before belonged generally to everybody, but particularly to nobody.

"It may be said, true, such would be man's right to the soil in a state of nature; but when he entered into society he gave up part of his natural rights, in order to enjoy the advantages of an organized community. This is a doctrine, I am aware, of the books and treatises on society and government. But it is a doctrine of despotism, and belongs not to enlightened statesmen in a liberal age. It is the excuse of the despot in encroaching upon the rights of the subject. He admits the encroachment, but claims that the citizen gave up part of his natural rights when he entered into society; and who is to judge what ones he relinquished but the ruling power?

"It was not necessary that any of man's natural rights should have been yielded to the state in the formation of society. He yielded no right but the right to do wrong, and that he never had by nature. All that he yielded in entering into organized society was a portion of his unrestricted liberty. What he yielded was that he would submit his conduct, which before was subject to the control of no living being, to the tribunals to be established by the state, with a tacit consent that society, or the government, might regulate the mode and manner of the exercise of his rights. Why should he consent to be deprived of them? It is upon this ground that we justify resistance to tyrants. Whenever the ruling power encroaches upon the natural rights of men so far that an appeal to arms becomes preferable to submission, they appeal from human to divine laws, and plead the natural rights of man in their justification. That government is just, and that alone, which enforces and defends all of man's natural rights, while protecting him against wrong by his fellow-man.

"Is it not time to sweep from the statute book its still lingering relics of feudalism, to blot out the principles ingrafted upon it by the narrow-minded policy of other times, and adapt the legislation of the country to the spirit of the age and to the true ideas of man's rights and relations to his government? If a man has a right on earth, he has a right to land enough to rear a habitation on. If he has a right to live, he has a right to the free use of whatever nature has provided for his sustenance—air to breathe, water to drink, and land enough to cultivate for his subsistence, for these are the necessary and indispensable means for the enjoyment of his inalienable rights of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. And is it for a Government that claims to dispense equal and exact justice to all, and that has laid down correct principles in its great chart of human rights, to violate those principles and its solemn declarations in its legislative enactments?

"The struggle between capital and labor is an unequal one at best. It is a struggle between the bones and sinews of men and dollars and cents. And in that struggle is it for the Government to stretch forth its arm to aid the strong against the weak? Shall it continue by its legislation to elevate and enrich idleness on the wail and the woe of industry? If the rule is correct as applied to governments, the same as to individuals, that whatever a person permits another to do, having the right and means to prevent it, he does himself, then indeed is the Government responsible for all the evils that may result from speculation and land monopoly in the public domain.

"If you would lead the erring back from the paths of vice and crime to virtue and to honor, give him a home; give him a hearthstone, and he will surround it with household gods. If you would make men wiser and better, relieve the almshouses, close the doors of the penitentiary, and break in pieces the gallows, purify the influences of the domestic fireside; for that is the school in which human character is formed, and there its destiny is shaped. There the soul receives it first impress and man his first lesson, and they go with him for weal or for woe through life. For purifying the sentiments, elevating the thoughts, and developing the noblest impulses of man's nature, the influences of a moral fireside and agricultural life are the noblest and the best. In the obscurity of the cottage, far removed from the seductive influences of rank and affluence, is nourished the virtues that counteract the decay of human institutions, the courage that defends the national independence, and the industry that supports all classes of the State. Man, in defense of his hearthstone and his fireside, is invincible against a world of mercenaries. In battling for his home and all that is dear to him on earth, he is never conquered save with his life. In such a struggle every pass becomes a Thermopylæ, every plain a Marathon. With an independent yeomanry scattered over our vast domain, the 'young eagle' may bid defiance to the world in arms. Even though a foe should devastate our seaboard, lay in ashes its cities, they will have made not one single advance toward conquering the country, for from the interior would come its hardy yeomanry, with their hearts of oak and nerves of steel, to expel the invader. Their hearts are the citadel of a nation's power, their arms the bulwarks of liberty.

"Every consideration of policy, then, both as to revenue for the General Government and increased taxation for the new States, as well as a means for removing the causes of pauperism and crime in the old, demands that the public lands should be granted in limited quantities to the actual settler. Every consideration of justice and humanity calls upon us to restore man to his natural rights in the soil."

The only reason now claimed why the settler should pay from $1 to $3.75 per acre to the Government for the lands acquired under these recent treaties is that the Government bought them of the Indians. The Secretary of the Interior gives as a reason for requiring this payment that "it would not be proper to burden
